The Attorney-General: The prosecution process is an integrated process embracing case review, preparation for the court hearing and advocacy. Crown prosecutors carry out the full range of these functions. The total salary costs for Crown prosecutors in 1995–96 was £76,497,201.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Web Site

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department established its Internet site; what representations he has received and what date he has collated on the use and utility of the site; and what steps he is taking to increase the amount of information available via the site. [19152]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office internet site was established in August 1995. Comments on the site were invited for the first six months, and most were favourable. Automatic logging figures indicate that, to date, 34,400 separate accesses have been made, and 252,300 pages have been read. Plans are in had to enhance the Department's Internet site, to give more complete information on the business of the office, including named contacts, publications and press releases with full text access. The site will also include charter standards, complaints procedures, and regulatory forms and guidance.

Licensing (Scotland) Act

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions there have been in Cupar sheriff court for contraventions of section 68 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 in each year from 1979 to date. [19675]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information for the period 1979–1994 is set out in the table. Data for 1995 is not yet available.

Community Care

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for the regulation of community care services in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [20346]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government are today publishing a White Paper on Social Services in England and Wales. I propose to take action in parallel in a number of areas.

Social work services in Scotland represent a large and growing part of the Government's support for people requiring support and care. Next year Government supported expenditure by local authorities on social work in Scotland will rise above £1 billion for the first time. It is important that these substantial resources are spent well, and that the services they support are of good quality. I therefore intend to strengthen the regulation of community care services and to ensure that local authorities make the most cost effective use of the considerable new resources which have been made available to them since the implementation of the NHS and Community Care Act 1990.

The Government take very seriously the need to regulate care services given to vulnerable people. To that end, it set up in 1995 a working group to make recommendations on improving the regulatory system. I will be issuing for consultation later this month draft revised guidance on registration procedures for residential care homes, which gives effect to some of the recommendations of the working group. The Government will aim to take forward other recommendations in legislation at the next opportunity. We intend that local authorities' own residential care homes should be subject to the same regulatory regime as at present applies to homes in the independent sector in order that there may be even-handedness between the statutory, private and voluntary sectors. We also intend to review the regulations affecting tribunals which hear appeals against deregistration. The Government accept the need for the effective and economic regulation of domiciliary care provision, and will include the necessary statutory provisions in its intended social services legislation. The Government will also consider the need for regulation of the services made available in supported housing provision.

The Government are announcing today their intention to require health and local authorities in England and Wales to form joint statutory bodies to carry out regulation and arrange for inspection of residential care homes and nursing homes within a single regulatory framework. I share the objective sought by joint regulation and will consider the best means of achieving that aim in Scotland.

Our aim is that residential care should provide the highest standards of care, good value for money, and offer a choice of accommodation to people who need it. I have today issued a direction on information, following consultation, which will aim to make clear to the decision-making committees of local authorities the costs of purchasing care from the local authority, private and voluntary sectors. This will help ensure that the full range of local provision is considered by committees.

The proposals in the English White Paper for the protection and support of children cover similar ground to the main provisions of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, which will come into force on 1 April. My officials will be working closely with local authorities in monitoring the implementation and progress in developing services. The Government are also announcing today a new initiative to ensure that the necessary specialist training is available for social workers practising in complex areas of child care and this will be taken forward on a UK basis.

Scottish Office Quangos

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (i) the consultancy fees, (ii) the lawyers' fees and (iii) other advisory fees associated with (a) the establishment of the Scottish water boards, (b) the investigation of the future of CalMac services, (c) the investigation of the future of the Forestry Commission and other forestry holdings and (d) the investigation of other potential or actual privatisations undertaken by the Scottish Office, in each year since 1992. [19158]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 10 March 1997]: In connection with establishing the Scottish water authorities, consultancy fees of £101,600, £38,600 and £9,300 were paid in 1992–93, 1994–95 and 1995–96 respectively. These figures do not include the consultancy fees associated with the transfer of assets from the local authorities.

The 1994 consultants' report on highlands and islands shipping subsidies, which included examination of options for private sector participation in the provision of Caledonian MacBrayne services, cost £137,500.

In 1993–94, £307,000 was spent on two consultancies for the forestry review.

In 1995, £60,000 was spent on a consultancy to review the scope for greater private sector involvement in the activities of Highlands Airports Ltd., including the possibility of privatisation.

In none of these cases was expenditure incurred on lawyers fees or other advisory fees.

WALES

EU Funding

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 February, Official Report, column 689, where the figures for grants and payments made by the European Union to the United Kingdom Government on account of Wales are set out in "Government Expenditure and Revenue, Wales, 1994–95". [18601]

Mr. Hague: General Government expenditure as used in "Government Expenditure and Revenue, Wales 1994–95", includes all total estimated spending on behalf of Wales, including that part of expenditure supported by receipts from European Community institutions.

European Committee of the Regions

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will enlarge Welsh representations on the European Commission committee of the regions. [19206]

Mr. Hague: The level of UK representation on the committee of the regions is governed by the treaty on European Union. The Government have no plans at present to review the distribution of representation within the UK.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children are eligible for inclusion in the nursery voucher scheme in the Cardiff local education authority area. [19286]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Apart from a small number of children who will become five before the start of the term, all children who were born between 1 April 1992 and 31 March 1993 are eligible for vouchers in the summer term 1997. Some 3,500 application forms for vouchers have been issued to parents in the Cardiff local education authority area.

Anglers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many anglers he estimates there are in Wales. [19211]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The number of national rod licences purchased in Wales during 1996–97 is estimated at 61,400. However, licences purchased in England and Wales are valid in both countries. No information is held on numbers of sea anglers.

Rate Support Grant Settlement

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received concerning the impact of his rate support grant allocation on the work of local education authorities in Wales. [19207]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have received many representations about the effect of the 1997–98 local government revenue settlement on the work of LEAs. It is, however, for each local authority to decide how much of its available resources to allocate to individual services such as education taking account of its statutory duties and its perception of local needs and priorities.

Dyfed Powys Consultation Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when Dyfed Powys health authority submitted to his Department its consultation paper, "Effective Care and Healthy Profile: A Consultation Strategy for the next Five Years 1997–2002", and when he approved its publication. [19018]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department is not required to approve the publication of a document which outlines the authority's proposals for strategic change within its area. Following the end of public consultation—30 April—individual proposals may be put to me for decision.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are registered (a) blind and (b) partially sighted. [19083]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There were an estimated 8,800 persons registered as blind and 8,100 persons registered as partially sighted in Wales on 31 March 1996.

Long-term Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will meet Flintshire county council to discuss long-term unemployment; [19209]

(2) if he will meet Connah's Quay town council to discuss youth unemployment. [19210]

Mr. Hague: I have received no such invitations.

BSE

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the ban by EU member states on British beef; and if he will make a statement on beef exports from Wales. [19212]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: We have written to Commissioners Fischler and Bonino explaining how the UK has fulfilled the preconditions laid down under the Florence agreement and enclosing our proposals for a UK export certified herds scheme, together with a paper setting out its scientific basis. The scheme would be the first step in lifting the export ban. The Government are pressing for urgent and constructive discussion of our proposals at the relevant Committees.

Schools Staffing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received from each of the teachers' unions concerning staffing in schools and the potential for staff redundancies. [19208]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My right hon. Friend has had a number of representations from the teachers' unions. Staffing levels in schools are a matter for local education authorities and governing bodies in the light of their statutory duties and their perception of local needs and priorities.

M4 (Baglan Bridge)

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions Baglan bridge on the M4 has been closed for all traffic in the last 12 months; what was the longest period of closure, and for what reasons it is necessary to include vehicles other than high-sided vehicles in the ban on traffic. [19547]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Over the last 12 months the bridge carrying the M4 over the River Neath has been closed to all traffic on five occasions. The longest closure lasted 15 and three quarter hours. Vehicles other than high-sided vehicles are included in such bans because there are no vehicle segregation facilities.

Power Station Emissions

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research his Department has evaluated on the impact on local communities of emissions from power stations; and if he will make a statement. [19506]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The air quality database for Wales, supported by the Welsh Office, provides information about the impact on air quality of emissions from various sources, including power stations.

Council House Sales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many council houses have been sold to date; and if he will show their location by local authority and the sums raised by their sale. [19510]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Information relating to the period since the introduction of the right-to-buy scheme in October 1980 is provided in the following tables.

Sales of local authority and new town dwellings, by district, October 1980—March 1996

Pollution

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning illegal industrial practices which damage the environment. [19504]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Environment Agency and local authorities have a range of functions related to the regulation, management and monitoring of the environment and the processes which affect it.

These functions are designed to ensure that acceptable standards of pollution prevention and control are maintained. The agency and local authorities have enforcement powers, including the power to prosecute and to issue a prohibition or revocation notice to close down a process.

Rents to Mortgages Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many rents to mortgages schemes there are; if he will show their local authority designation; and if he will make a statement. [19507]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Rent to mortgage is a statutory scheme available throughout Wales. It is, however, only one of a number of routes into home ownership, including the right to buy, Housing for Wales' homebuy option and similar low cost home ownership schemes run by local authorities. I expect these schemes to help about 3,300 households into home ownership during 1996–97.

Air Pollution

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to reduce air pollution. [19511]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 13 February 1997, Official Report, column 292.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his allocations to local authorities for (a) the building of council houses and (b) the repairs and modernisation of council estates in the current year. [19509]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In 1996–97, £42.6 million was made available for capital expenditure on local authority housing but, within this, there was no specific allocation for the building of council houses. In addition,

£10.6 million was made available under the Estate Partnership programme to tackle the problems of the most deprived estate.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total expenditure on the assisted places scheme in Wales in each year since its introduction; and what is the forecast expenditure in 1997–98 and 1998–99. [18664]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Annual expenditure under the assisted places scheme since introduction is as follows:

1982–83: £274,777
1983–84: £459,626
1984–85: £626,876
1985–86: £842,488
1986–87: £1,110,805
1987–88: £1,394,246
1988–89: £1,435,040
1989–90: £1,589,392
1990–91: £1,756,283
1991–92: £2,064,813
1992–93: £2,457,230
1993–94: £2,621,261
1994–95: £2,771,504
1995–96: £2,904,845
1996–97: £3,781,000 (estimated)

Planned expenditure for 1997–98 and 1998–99 is £4,480,000 and £5,130,000 respectively. The planned provision for 1998–99 will be subject to review in the forthcoming public expenditure survey.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Drug Abuse Resistance Education

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his oral statement of 26 February, Official Report, columns 401–2, what action he has initiated on drug education since 26 February. [18961]

Mr. Newton: None. Drug education policy is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment. I continue however to take a close interest, and to encourage support for worthwhile projects.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will co-ordinate private sector fund raising to enable DARE to be extended nation wide. [18962]

Mr. Newton: The Government will continue to work with the private sector in support of a range of national and local drugs projects, including via the drugs challenge fund. Decisions on specific drug education programmes remain a matter for individual schools, in partnership with other agencies where appropriate.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will place the extension of the DARE programme on the agenda of the Cabinet sub-committee on drug misuse. [18963]

Mr. Newton: Progress on drugs education matters is regularly reviewed by the Cabinet sub-Committee on drug misuse.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kashmir

14. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current position in the case of Ghazanfer Ali, who was released on bail from prison in Azad Kashmir last November; and if he will make a statement. [18310]

Dr. Liam Fox: Ghazanfer Ali's case was heard by the Shariah bench on 17 February. The bench decided that it should be heard again by the sessions judge on 18 March. I discussed Ali's case with Sultan Mahmoud Chaudhry of Azad Kashmir during my recent visit to Pakistan. I pressed for a speedy and fair trial.

Sri Lanka

20. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's current assessment of civil rights in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement. [18316]

Dr. Liam Fox: Basic civil rights are enshrined in the Sri Lankan constitution. We hope that the Sri Lankan Government will continue to respect them.

Thailand (Burmese Refugees)

22. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received that the Thai Government are denying refuge for people from Burma; and what diplomatic efforts are being made to ensure the safety of refugees from Burma. [18318]

Mr. Hanley: We are very concerned at reports that refugees have been forcibly repatriated to Burma. Both on a national basis and with our EU partners, we have urged the Thai Government to protect civilians seeking refuge on their territory. We deplore the SLORC policies which are at the root of this humanitarian crisis. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary raised our concerns about the situation in Burma with the Burmese ambassador on 4 March.

NATO Expansion

24. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his EU counterparts on the proposed expansion of NATO. [18320]

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary has regular discussions on NATO enlargement with his counterparts from European members of NATO.

China

25. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British relations with China. [18321]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 15 January 1997, Official Report, column 299.

28. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the likely effect of the death of Deng Xiao Ping upon United Kingdom financial interests in Hong Kong and China. [18324]

Mr. Hanley: We see no reason to expect any change in the position of the UK's financial interests in either Hong Kong or China as a result of the death of Deng Xiao Ping.

31. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is taken by his Department to promote British-Chinese trade. [18327]

Mr. Hanley: This Department promotes UK-Chinese trade by working in close co-operation with the Department of Trade and Industry; we actively seek trade opportunities for UK companies, promote British products and services, and provide professional advice and practical assistance to British business men, both in the UK and through the commercial section of our embassy in Peking.

Middle East Peace Process

26. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to assist the middle east peace process. [18322]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs).

27. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in the middle east peace talks. [18323]

Mr. Hanley: We hope to see early implementation of the provisions of the Israeli/Palestinian interim agreement as reaffirmed in the Hebron agreement in January, and look forward to the start of final status negotiations this month. We also hope to see a resumption of talks between Israel and Syria.

Israel

30. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has made to the Israeli President concerning plans to increase Jewish settlement building in the vicinity of east Jerusalem. [18326]

Mr. Hanley: The Israeli authorities are well aware of our view that settlement activity in occupied territory is illegal and an obstacle to peace. We raise this issue with them regularly and at every level, including during the debate at the United Nations last week.

Human Rights Abuses (Monitoring)

32. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the priority that Her Majesty's diplomatic service gives to the monitoring of human rights abuses overseas. [18328]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We give high priority to monitoring human rights violations overseas. Promotion of respect for human rights around the world is a fundamental foreign policy objective.

United Nations (Reform)

33. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government policy towards reform of the United Nations. [18329]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We support institutional and financial reform of the United Nations. We held useful talks on this subject last month with the new Secretary General, Kofi Annan, whose commitment to reform we welcome. We hope that the long-standing discussion of Security Council enlargement will be resolved as soon as possible.

Disarmament Negotiations

34. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to pursue nuclear disarmament negotiations in respect of progress towards conventional disarmament. [18330]

Mr. David Davis: We remain committed under article VI of the non-proliferation treaty to "... pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to ... nuclear disarmament, and on a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control."

Indonesia

35. Mr Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Indonesia to discuss British-Indonesian relations and trade; and if he will make a statement. [18331]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary has no immediate plans to visit Indonesia, but he has had three useful meetings with the Indonesian Foreign Minister since January 1996.

36. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's relations with Indonesia. [18332]

Mr. Hanley: We value our strong bilateral relationship with Indonesia, a country of 200 million people enjoying fast economic growth. It is an increasingly important partner for us in south-east Asia.

Former Dominions

37. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of relations between the United Kingdom and (a) the former dominions and (b) the United States of America; and if he will make a statement. [18333]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The United Kingdom's relations with these countries remain excellent. We shall continue to attach priority to sustaining our important links with them. Major programmes are under way in Australia and New Zealand to highlight the importance of our modern as well as our historical relationship with them.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress with the European IGC. [18312]

Mr. David Davis: The intergovernmental conference is progressing well. All member states are working towards a conclusion to the intergovernmental conference at the Amsterdam European Council.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet the President of the European Commission to discuss the intergovernmental conference. [18325]

Mr. David Davis: I have no immediate plans to meet the President of the Commission to discuss the intergovernmental conference.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the official visits to Saudi Arabia made by Ministers in his Department since May 1979, stating in each case the dates and purpose of the visit. [19559]

Mr. Hanley: According to our records, the following visits to Saudi Arabia were made by FCO Ministers between 1984 and 1997:

Secretary of State (Lord Howe), January 1984
Minister of State (Mr. Luce), March 1985
Secretary of State (Lord Howe), January 1986
Minister of State (Mr. Renton), February 1987
Minister of State (Mr. Mellor), December 1987
Minister of State (Mr. Waldegrave), October 1988
Secretary of State (Lord Howe), January 1989
Secretary of State (Mr. Hurd), May/June 1990
Secretary of State (Mr. Hurd), September 1990
Secretary of State (Mr. Hurd), February 1991
Secretary of State (Mr. Hurd), May 1991
Minister of State (Mr. Hogg), February 1992
Secretary of State (Mr. Hurd), May 1992
Secretary of State (Mr. Hurd), September 1993
Minister of State (Mr. Hogg), May 1994
Secretary of State (Mr. Hurd), October 1994
Secretary of State (Mr. Rifkind), November 1995
Secretary of State (Mr. Rifkind), July 1996
Minister of State (Mr. Hanley), October 1996

The purpose of these visits was the promotion of bilateral relations and co-operation with Saudi Arabia. The Minister of State's visit in May 1994 also included participation in the EU/Gulf Co-operation Council ministerial meeting.

Records of ministerial visits prior to 1984 are in this Department's archives, and it would incur disproportionate cost to retrieve them.

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting, publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19391]

Mr. Hanley: The Overseas Development Administration has issued 32,500 copies of its leaflet for overseas pensioners, total cost £16,000.

The legalisation office of this Department's consular division has issued some 21,000 copies of its customer standard document, of which 500 each in Arabic, French and Spanish. Total cost of design, translation and printing was £4,210.

Consular and visa sections of overseas posts display notices, produced locally, informing customers of standards and complaint procedures. To establish their precise cost would involve disproportionate work, but it is minor. In London a fact sheet is available, produced in-house at minimal cost; it is also available on the Internet.

Ascension Island

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will increase the funding granted by Her Majesty's Government to the dependent territories in order that the Government will meet their commitments under the biodiversity convention with particular reference to Ascension Island; and if he will make it his policy that any increased funding is contingent on matching support from non-governmental organisations. [19408]

Dr. Liam Fox: None of the sources of Government funding for environmental projects overseas is dedicated specifically to the dependent territories. This Department's budget for small environmental projects was £380,000 in 1996–97. Bids for funding from this budget are received from all over the world from our overseas missions. Projects from the dependent territories are given priority, but are considered on their merits. In 1996–97 the dependent territories received total funding of £119,485. This included £12,750 for a project to control the spread of the Mexican thorn tree on Ascension Island. Other projects funded recently in the dependent territories, helping us to meet our commitments under the biodiversity convention, include conservation of bats and dolphins in Gibraltar and a biological assessment of saline coastal ponds in the Cayman Islands.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he is taking to eradicate the feral cat population on Ascension Island. [19409]

Dr. Fox: In 1995, this Department funded a £25,000 feasibility study into the eradication of rats and cats from Ascension Island. This was on the understanding that non-governmental organisations would be responsible for the fund raising to implement its recommendations. The FCO is prepared to consider a contribution to the implementation phase of up to £30,000 from its small budget for overseas environmental projects, provided that the funds are available at the time.

British Phosphate Commission (Assets)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current status of the United Kingdom assets of the former British Phosphate Commission. [19410]

Dr. Liam Fox: The British Phosphate Commission was wound up on 9 February 1987. The United Kingdom's share of the residual assets amounted to £7.7 million. This sum was paid direct to the Consolidated Fund.

Sudan

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has held with representatives of opposition groups in Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [19598]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and nobel Friend the Minister of State for Overseas Development met Sudan People's Liberation Army leader John Garang in Nairobi on 9 February, Officials in Khartoum, London, Cairo, Addis Ababa and Nairobi are in regular touch with opposition figures both in and outside Sudan.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with the Government of Sudan concerning the conflict in the south; and if he will make a statement. [19599]

Mr. Hanley: We take every opportunity to make clear to the Government of Sudan our desire to see an early negotiated end to the civil war. The permanent under-secretary at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office did so most recently to Sudanese Ministers when he visited Khartoum in January The British ambassador in Khartoum takes the same line in his frequent contacts with Sudanese Ministers.

Germany

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Germany. [18309]

Mr. David Davis: Britain and Germany have important common interests on a wide range of issues and enjoy close and substantial relations across the board. We share the aim of an enlarged, free and prosperous Europe, and are working together to achieve this.

NORTHERN IRELAND

High Risk Prisoners

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many high-risk category A (a) remand and (b) convicted prisoners are currently detained in prisons in Northern Ireland; how many of these prisoners are (i) women and (ii) men; how many such prisoners have been charged under extradition legislation in the last five years; and if he will make a statement; [19748]

(2) how many (a) remand and (b) convicted high risk category A prisoners, detained in Northern Ireland, and charged under extradition legislation over the last 10 years have been transferred to prisons in England and Wales; and how many such prisoners were pregnant; [19749]

(3) how many mother and baby units exist in prisons in Northern Ireland; how many prisoners and babies can be accommodated in such units; and how many babies have been born in prisons in Northern Ireland over the last 10 years. [19750]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for subject of these questions has been delegated to the Northern Ireland Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Mogg to Mr. Max Madden, dated 11 March 1997:

In the absence of the Chief Executive of the Northern Ireland Prison Service the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to the 3 Parliamentary questions you have tabled. You requested information regarding:

1. How many high risk Category A (a) remand and (b) convicted prisoners are currently detained in prisons in Northern Ireland; how many of these prisoners are (i) women and (ii) men; how many such prisoners have been charged under extradition legislation in the last 5 years; and if he will make a statement.

2. How many (a) remand and (b) convicted high risk Category A prisoners, detained in Northern Ireland and charged under extradition legislation over the last 10 years have been transferred to prisons in England and Wales; and how many such prisoners were pregnant.

3. How many mother & baby units exist in prisons in Northern Ireland; how many prisoners and babies can be accommodated in such units and how many babies have been born in prisons in Northern Ireland over the last 10 years.

Firstly categorisation in the Northern Ireland Prison Service is different to that used in England & Wales however, prisoners known as Category A would broadly equate with top and high risk prisoners in Northern Ireland.

I therefore respond to your questions as follows:

No. 17

	Number
HMP Maghaberry: Top Risk	0
Remand male, High Risk	89
Sentenced male, High Risk	63
Remand female, High Risk	0
Sentenced female, High Risk	24
Total	97
HMP Maze: Top Risk	0
Remand High Risk	9
Sentenced High Risk	177
Total	186

High risk prisoners are not detained in any other prison establishment and at present we do not have any top risk prisoners.

Five prisoners have been charged under extradition legislation in the past 5 years.

No. 18.

Nil.

No. 19.

(i) The NI Prison Service has a total of 6 mother and baby units.

(ii) 1 mother and 1 baby per cell.

(iii) 4 babies have been born in prison over the last 10 years.

I hope this information is helpful.

Independent Commissioner for Holding Centres

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish Sir Louis Blom-Cooper's fourth annual report as independent commissioner for the holding centres. [20206]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have today arranged for copies of Sir Louis Blom-Cooper's annual report for 1996 to be placed in the Library.

I am grateful to the commissioner and his deputy, Dr. Bill Norris, for their report. I note that for the fourth successive year they have found nothing that might give anyone the slightest cause for concern about the care and treatment of detainees held in the custody of uniformed officers of the RUC.

I shall study carefully the recommendations which Sir Louis Blom-Cooper has made.

TRANSPORT

M25 Works

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how the error relating to the quality of the capping layer laid between junctions 6 and 8 of the M25 occurred; and when it was discovered; [19588]

(2) for what reasons the geological and consequential structural difficulties of the M25 between junctions 6 and 8 were not identified by surveys before the letting of the widening and engineering contract; [19589]

(3) when he now expects the completion of the widening and engineering works on the M25 between junctions 6 and 8; [19591]

(4) what is the estimated cost to his Department of relaying the capping layer and the replacement of the asphalt surfacing between junctions 6 and 8 of the M25; [19590]

(5) pursuant to his Department's memorandum of 12 February in evidence to the Transport Committee, (HC 213-i of Session 1996–97) who was responsible for the problem leading to the required relaying of the capping layer and replacement of the asphalt surfacing between junctions 6 and 8 of the M25. [19594]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Andrew Mackinlay, dated 12 March 1997:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Questions about the M25 between junctions 6 and 8.

The contract started in March 1994. In Summer 1994 the Contractor dug into the 20 year old carriageways and this was when we first realised that the amount of deteriorated capping layer material needing replacement was much greater than we had estimated.

Site investigations were carried out before work started and standard investigation procedures were followed. Site investigation is not an exact science. We knew there were problems, but without exhaustive tests on a live motorway we could not reasonably have foreseen the full nature of variations in the quality of material lying one metre below the road surface. In the event, the capping layer was in a much poorer state than had been assumed, following the survey work.

I am happy to say four lanes were open in both directions on Saturday 8 March. The hardshoulders will remain coned off until Easter to allow for electrical and communications works and signalling to be carried out. Landscaping work will continue into 1998. A small contract will be let this Summer to carry out localised maintenance works at the side of the carriageway at junction 7. We do not expect this to disrupt traffic.

Negotiations about the costs of relaying the capping layer and the replacement of the asphalt surfacing are taking place. To provide an estimate of the costs now would undermine the position of the Consulting Engineers appointed by the Agency to administer this contract and deal with the claims for extra payment submitted by the Contractors.

Hot rolled asphalt surfacing has been used for over thirty years in the UK. The material used here met fully the specified standard. We can only conclude that the problems were a result of an exceptional combination of site-specific factors which included the high number of lorries using this stretch of the M25, the temporary traffic, management arrangements which concentrated the lorries into one lane and the exceptionally hot weather experienced last Summer which could have affected the newly laid hot rolled asphalt materials.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has had with the British Airports Authority in the past 18 months relating to the M25's (a) existing and (b) future volume and capacity needs between junctions (i) 12 to 15 and (ii) 15 to 16. [19587]

Mr. Watts: The Highways Agency has had a number of discussions with BAA about the capacity of the motorway network in the vicinity of Heathrow airport in connection with the proposal for a fifth terminal. Evidence flowing from those discussions has been provided to the inquiry.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what factors underlay his assessment that his objectives for junctions 16 to 19 of the M25 could be met by smaller-scale improvements than full D4 widening; and for what reason these criteria did not apply in respect of (a) junctions 12 to 15 and (b) junctions 15 to 16. [19583]

Mr. Watts: The decision, announced in "Managing the Road Programme" published in November 1995, to consider smaller scale solutions was aimed at maximising the use of capital resources whilst seeking to continue to meet the objectives of schemes. The proposed widening of the M25 between junctions 16 and 19 was identified for such a review but no decision has been taken.

The proposals for widening the M25 between junctions 12 and 15 represent a scaling down of the previously published link road proposals.

The Highways Agency is still looking at the options for widening M25 between junctions 15 and 16 following the withdrawal in April 1995 of the link roads scheme for that section.

Train Drivers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Health and Safety Executive last examined the (a) hours of work and (b) conditions of service of train drivers; and if he will make a statement. [19653]

Mr. Watts: Hours of work and other conditions of service are primarily matters for agreement between employers and staff. However, excessive hours of work on the railways which could pose a danger to safety are subject to the Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulations and an associated approved code of practice. As part of its responsibility for enforcing these regulations, the Health and Safety Executive keeps train drivers hours of work under review. A train operating company wishing to change drivers' hours of work has to submit a material revision of its safety case to the infrastructure controller for acceptance, and any revisions which are accepted are sent to the HSE before they can take effect.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the recommendations of (a) the Rail Industry Advisory Commission and (b) the Parliamentary Advisory Committee on Transport on train drivers' hours; and if he will make a statement. [19694]

Mr. Watts: The Health and Safety Executive published an approved code of practice—ACOP—on hours of work for safety critical staff on the railways on 1 November 1996, which is contained in updated guidance on the Railway (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994. The ACOP was developed in co-operation with the Commission's Railway Industry Advisory Committee and comments were received from the Parliamentary Advisory Committee on Transport and others, during consultation on proposals for the ACOP.

The ACOP's principal recommendations are that employers should (i) set limits on the hours of work of their safety critical staff and ensure those limits are observed (ii) carry out a risk assessment before increasing existing limits on hours or work or making any significant change to an existing working time pattern—for example, to a system of shift working—and (iii) monitor safety performance after a change has been made, to confirm that there are no adverse effects on safety.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has recently commissioned into the relationship between train drivers' hours and conditions of work and accidents; and if he will make a statement. [19652]

Mr. Watts: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate is currently co-sponsor with Railtrack and the British Railways Board of research into safety related incidents and the point at which they occur during a shift. The research will consider signals passed at danger and personal accidents. This work is continuing and it is too early to report any results.

HSE has recently commissioned a research project aimed at validating an improved method of assessing the risks of fatigue associated with the hours of work of staff undertaking safety critical work on the railways, including train drivers.

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting, publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19392]

Mr. Bowis: Estimates provided by the respective agencies and by the Department are as follows:

Name	Estimated cost of production and circulation (£)	Numbers of document issued
Central Transport Group[1]	1,000	4,000
Driving Standards Agency[2]	11,331	200,000
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency[3]	120,000 pa	14,500,000
Highways Agency[4]	206,000	1,120,000
Marine Safety Agency[5]	12,990	16,000
The Coastguard Agency[6]	13,650	70,000
Vehicle Inspectorate[7]	12,412	80,500
Vehicle Certification Agency[8]	2,170	4,000

Automatic Train Protector System

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many locomotives were fitted with the automatic train protector system in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement; [19695]

(2) where the locomotives fitted with the automatic train protector system are operating. [19659]

Mr. Watts: Automatic train protection—ATP—is currently installed on the Docklands light railway, the channel tunnel and the London underground. ATP is in use on the Great Western and Chiltern railway lines as pilot schemes.

Information on the number of vehicles fitted with ATP in each year since 1990 would be available only at disproportionate cost.

Motorcycle Strategy Group

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set up a motorcycle strategy group. [19565]

Mr. Bowis: The Government intend to establish a motorcycling strategy group, which I shall chair, to produce a report on matters affecting motorcyclists and other road users, including safety and environmental issues. This will build on the statement of policy issued by the Government last November, copies of which are available in the Library. It will be set up in the summer and report next spring.

London Underground

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the privatisation proceeds for London underground will be available for use by (a) his Department and (b) the Treasury. [19890]

Mr. Bowis: Receipts from privatisation will be recycled in order to ensure that the modernisation of the underground's infrastructure is completed as quickly as possible. The majority of any remaining surplus will be channelled into additional support for London underground or for other transport projects. The remainder will go to the Exchequer. Exact proportions cannot sensibly be estimated at this early stage.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of local initiatives to encourage the reporting of benefit fraud. [17853]

Mr. Heald: The Benefits Agency has run 42 "Spotlight on Benefit Cheats" local campaigns against benefit fraud. These have been given extensive local publicity, including encouraging claimants to call a freephone number to report suspicions of benefit fraud. A total of 14,000 referrals were received in the first phase of Spotlight alone, and the national benefit fraud hotline, launched last August, built on this success and to date received over 160,000 calls. The savings from the Spotlight campaigns now exceed £100 million.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if a person is refused incapacity benefit and appeals against this decision, in what circumstances the income support he receives in the meantime is reduced. [19633]

Mr. Burt: A person who is appealing against a decision that he is not incapable of work under the all work test can qualify for income support at a reduced rate until the appeal is determined. The reduced rate does not apply to a person who can qualify for income support on other grounds, for example, lone parents, nor does it apply to people who claim jobseeker's allowance.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 200, what has been the average real increase since 1979 in the incomes of men who were then aged 65 years and women who were then aged 60 years, and whose income consisted of (a) the basic state pension and (b) the basic pension and supplementary benefit; and what has been the average increase in income of men and women of working ages over the same period. [19536]

Mr. Heald: The necessary longitudinal information is not available.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of pensioners who will be in receipt of (a) basic pension guarantee, (b) income support and (c) other means-tested benefits in (i) 2040, (ii) 2050, (iii) 2060 and (iv) 2070 under the basic pension plus proposals. [19903]

Mr. Heald: The figure of around £10 billion per annum for possible expenditure on the basic pension guarantee, given in the technical note, is a very broad estimate. It is not possible to say what precise numbers of pensioners could qualify for some guaranteed payments at such a distant date. We do not expect the number of pensioners in receipt of income support and other means-tested benefits to rise as a result of basic pension plus.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Roslin Institute

Mr. Cash: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will place in the Library the patents granted solely or jointly to the Roslin Institute; [18966]

(2) if he will list the patents granted to the Roslin Institute since its inception and the dates on which they were granted indicating (a) which were granted to the Roslin Institute, (i) alone and (ii) jointly with another body, and giving the name of such other bodies and (b) indicating which have been transferred to other bodies and the names of those bodies; and if he will place copies of the transfer instruments in the Library. [18965]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I understand that, since Roslin was formed as a self-standing institute in 1993, a number of applications for patents have been filed, but none yet granted. Between 1993 and 1995—when Roslin became a company limited by guarantee—the applications were made in the name of "BBSRC (or AFRC) Roslin Institute". Since 1995 applications will have been in the name of the Roslin Institute itself. Once granted, any patents applied for since 1993 would be published in the normal way. In addition, in 1995, BBSRC transferred to Roslin, as part of the process of forming the limited company, the rights to some published patents which dated from before 1993, when Roslin was part of the larger Institute of Animal Physiology and Genetics Research.

Saudi Arabia (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the official visits to Saudi Arabia made by Ministers in his Department since May 1979, stating in each case the dates and purpose of the visit. [19558]

Mr. Nelson: Details of visits to Saudi Arabia undertaken by DTI Ministers between January 1992 to present can be found in a list which is available in the Library of the House.

Recovery of data for the years 1979–91 would incur disproportionate costs.

Depreciation Payments

Mr. Barron: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) discretionary depreciation payments and (b) obligatory depreciation payments have been made in each year for which information is available since the passage of the Coal Mining Subsidence Act 1991 by region; and what has been the (i) total and (ii) average value of such payments in each year, by region. [19551]

Mr. Page: This is a matter for the Coal Authority or other "responsible persons" as defined by the Coal Mining Subsidence Act 1991 (as amended by the Coal Industry Act 1994). However I understand from the Coal Authority that the information requested is not readily available.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of whether the participating lenders under the small firms loan guarantee scheme are fully informing unsuccessful applicants of the reason for rejection, differentiating between ineligibility, lack of a viable business proposal and lack of credibility of the applicant. [19752]

Mr. Page: No assessment has been made of the information given to an applicant where their loan application has been rejected. The scheme is appropriate only when a lender considers the business proposal for a loan to be viable and would be prepared to lend but for the lack of collateral to use as security against a conventional loan or overdraft. If the loan application fails to meet the lender's normal commercial appraisal criteria the scheme should not even be considered and the notification of rejection should be subject to the lenders standard practice.

Any complaints received by the Department are investigated and, where appropriate, the matter is taken up with the lender concerned.

International Standard Organisation

Mr. Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the accreditation of ISO 9000 certification bodies. [20306]

Mr. Ian Taylor: In the context of ISO 9000, accreditation is the recognition by an authoritative body that certification bodies are competent to carry out specified tasks. In the UK the Government have granted that authority solely to UKAS (the United Kingdom Accreditation Service). A memorandum of understanding between my Department and UKAS sets out those activities for which UKAS is recognised by Government and gives UKAS certain rights and obligations. A separate licensing agreement gives UKAS the right to use and confer the DTI's National Accreditation Mark (the "Tick and Crown") which signifies Government recognition.

Accreditation by UKAS ensures that certification bodies have been independently assessed to agreed international standards of competence and impartiality by a body which is itself subject to regular assessment and to oversight by Government. The Government therefore encourage certification bodies to become accredited by UKAS. We also encourage companies and other organisations seeking certification to ISO 9000 to use the services of UKAS accredited certification bodies where these are an option. Only certification by a UKAS accredited body allows companies to be entered into the United Kingdom Register of Quality Assessed Companies and to display the national accreditation mark as an internationally acknowledged symbol of Government recognition.

As in most other commercial matters, it is for each certification body to decide whether to become accredited by UKAS. It is also for individual companies to decide whether to use the services of UKAS accredited certification bodies. This freedom of choice does not imply Government recognition of or support for the activities of certification bodies not accredited by UKAS. Equally, it does not imply any Government authority, recognition or support for the activities of any other UK organisation which may claim to act as an accreditation body in the context of ISO 9000.

Where UKAS accredited certification is available as an option, some purchasers will not accept certificates issued by bodies which are not accredited by UKAS because they have no assurance of the competence of those bodies. This can lead to additional cost for companies as purchasers ask for other evidence of compliance with ISO 9000. UKAS accreditation can, therefore, help to minimise industry's costs. It also helps to remove technical barriers to international trade because the Government have granted UKAS the sole right to negotiate mutual recognition agreements with other national accreditation bodies on behalf of the United Kingdom.

Accordingly, the Government advise all companies to look for the national accreditation mark when selecting a certification body. In the absence of the mark, companies should make detailed enquiries about the relationship between the certification body and UKAS before entering into any commitment.

Research Masters

Mr. Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made by the pilot scheme for research masters, announced by the Government in October 1994; and if he will make a statement. [20305]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Four of the research councils have been supporting some 250 students a year on the research master's, or MRes, courses on a pilot basis since autumn 1995. The councils involved are the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council, the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council, the Medical Research Council and the Natural Environment Research Council. The first year has been completed, and the second is now well into its stride.

It is still too early to draw firm conclusions about the success of the MRes in preparing students directly for employment or for a PhD. Experience with the pilot also varies, to some extent, between the councils. However, there are encouraging signs. Students appear very satisfied. The courses are offering them an opportunity to broaden their horizons—including the attractions and possibilities of a career in industry—whilst also acquiring a greater degree of research expertise and experience. There is strong interest and involvement from employers.

Overall, the MRes continues to show much promise as a contributor to the diversity and quality of higher education provision in the UK. I am grateful to all those in academia, industry, and elsewhere who are working to make it a success.

The Director-General of Research Councils is today writing to universities and colleges and other interested parties, including the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education, with further details of experience to date. I am placing a copy of that letter and a related press release in the Library of the House. Further reports on the pilot will be published as data and experience accumulate.

Global Environmental Change

Mr. Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Government's chief scientific adviser has reviewed the Inter-agency Committee on Global Environmental Change; and if he will make a statement. [20307]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The review concluded that the Inter-agency Committee on Global Environmental Change had been an effective mechanism in the past and that it should continue to provide UK agencies funding global environmental change research with a senior-level forum for discussion of relevant science and policy developments.

I am pleased to announce that Sir Richard Southwood has been appointed chairman for the next three years.

A broader membership structure has been introduced. For the first time this has directly involved my Department's Environment Directorate, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Scottish Office, and the Overseas Development Administration.

I have arranged for copies of a note of the conclusions from the review to be placed in the Library of the House.

Data Collection (Postcodes)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 124, what action is taken when a postcode cuts across local authority boundaries; and what action has been taken in relation to the S12 and S31 post code areas. [19630]

Mr. Greg Knight: The Department does not take action when a postcode cuts across local authority boundaries, since postcodes are not used as the basis for geographically targeted policies.

Business Breakfast Tours

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much each of the business breakfast tours cost; and which hon. Members were present at each. [19246]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The information requested is given in the following table.

Arms Sales

Ms Short: To ask Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the countries and other bodies which have bought arms from the United Kingdom in the last 10 years under the export credits guarantee scheme and defaulted on their payments and (b) the sums of money involved in each case. [14007]

Mr. Nelson [pursuant to his reply 14 February 1997, c.337]: I have been asked to reply. Since April 1986 the Export Credits Guarantee Department has paid the following claims on guarantees related to business with defence ministries.

	£ million
Egypt	93
Venezuela	31.7
Kenya	13.7

In addition, some business not listed was also the subject of claims payments relating to defence ministries. This information cannot be released as it could cause harm in terms of one or more of the defence, security, international relations and commercial confidence exemptions in the code of practice on access to Government information. These were the exemptions in the code referred to the statement on defence exports by my hon. Friend the Minister for Defence Procurement on 23 July 1996, Official Report, column 212.

ECGD does not distinguish specifically arms from other sales to defence ministries but a review of the records and case files indicates that arms account for less than one quarter of the total defence claims.

The figures given do not take into account recoveries of claims paid. Likewise, they do not include any claims in respect of ECGD's former short-term operations which were privatised in 1991 and for which equivalent data are not available.

HEALTH

High-cost Drugs

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the recommendations contained in the White Paper, "Working for Patients", relating to patients' access to high-cost drugs, represent current Government policy. [17385]

Mr. Malone: Measures are in place to ensure that general practitioners are able to take on the prescribing of medicines for patients with unusually high prescribing costs, where it is clinically appropriate for them to do so.

CS Gas and Sprays

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment of the health effects of CS gas and sprays have been made by the senior medical officers of his Department since 1990; how many published and internal papers have been written by his Department's medical officers on this subject since 1990; and what are the current security classifications of these reports. [17950]

Mr. Horam: Officials of the Department have reviewed the scientific data on CS gas and sprays but they have not produced any scientific papers or reports on the subject. A list of the published scientific literature which was fully reviewed will be placed in the Library.

GP Surgeries (Computerisation)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number and the percentage of general practitioner surgeries which are computerised for each NHS region; and how many of these operate clinical live on-line systems. [19103]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not held centrally. Projected results of a general practitioner computer survey undertaken by Gallup in 1993 are set out in the table:

Regional health authorities	Per cent. computerised
East Anglia	94
Oxford	92
South Western	91
Trent	89
Yorkshire	87
Northern	87
Wessex	86
Mersey	81
West Midlands	81
South-east Thames	80
North Western	80
South-west Thames	78
North-west Thames	76
North-east Thames	69

Equal Opportunities

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many black and Asian-owned companies have applied for NHS contracts; how many have won the contracts they have applied for; and what plans there are to introduce ethnic monitoring into the contracting process to establish whether stated equal opportunities policies are successful. [19064]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available centrally. Trusts and health authorities are required to follow the European Union public procurement directives which set clear standards for the evaluation criteria which may be used in order to ensure openness and fairness of competition. There are no plans to introduce central monitoring of their compliance with the directives.

Health Services (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total funding provided by his Department for health services approved for 1997–98 in the London borough of Wandsworth. [19487]

Mr. Horam: The London borough of Wandsworth is covered by Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth health authority. For 1997–98, the health authority has an initial total cash allocation of £350.8 million plus a further £7.2 million in additional allocations.

Information on the funding of the London borough of Wandsworth is not held centrally. I refer the hon. Member to Mr. Harry Cowd, chairman of Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth health authority.

Smoking (Pregnancy)

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department is taking to encourage the reduction of smoking during pregnancy. [19364]

Mr. Horam: The Health Education Authority is continuing its campaign aimed at pregnant women, in conjunction with doctors, nurses, health visitors and pharmacists. In addition, the national smoking educational campaign is designed to motivate and assist those in socio-economic groups C2DE, in particular parents and pregnant women, to quit.

Senior Managers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many senior managers in the NHS who had resigned after being requested to do so or had their contracts terminated were appointed to another post within the NHS within (a) five years, (b) three years, (c) two years and (d) 12 months. [19428]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not available centrally.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals are currently seeking PFI contracts in England. [19432]

Mr. Horam: There are currently 151 national health service trusts seeking private finance initiative contracts with a capital value of £1 million or over in England.

Postgraduate Deans

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many withdrawals of approval for post have been made by postgraduate deans in each of the last five years. [19379]

Mr. Malone: New posts require both educational and staffing approval. Postgraduate deans' power to withdraw educational approval from existing posts applies only to pre-registration house officer posts. Information on the exercise of this power is not available centrally.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella Vaccines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list vaccines licensed since 1 February 1987 for mumps, measles, rubella or a combination of these indicating for each product the date on which a licence was granted, the conditions for which it was licensed and if the product licence is current. [19271]

Mr. Malone: The available information listing the vaccines licensed since February 1987 and still current is as follows:

Product name	Date of grant
Pulserix MMR Vaccine Injection with Diluent'	17 June 1988
Immravax Measles Mumps Rubella Live Attenuated Vaccine'	18 September 1989
Measavax Vaccine Injection'	18 September 1989

Meruvax II vaccine 1000TCID50	7 April 1995
Attenuvax injection	7 June 1995
M-M-R II vaccine injection	1 March 1996
Mumpsvax vacine injection 20000TCID50/dose	1 March 1996

' Indicates that the product licence has been cancelled.

Information relating to the conditions for which the products were licensed will be placed in the Library shortly.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for the last five years for which information is available the serious adverse reactions to vaccines containing components against mumps, measles or rubella; if he will list trial products which have been withdrawn; and if he will make a statement. [19324]

Mr. Malone: Drug analysis prints, listing all serious suspected reactions reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines between 1 January 1992 and 31 December 1996 for vaccines containing components against mumps, measles or rubella will be placed in the Library shortly, along with an information sheet to aid interpretation. No trial products have been withdrawn, and no licences for these vaccines have been suspended or revoked in the last five years.

I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 6 November, at columns 607–11 which discusses the replacement of the urabe strain of MMR vaccine with the current strain.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the dates the Committee on Safety of Medicines considered matters relating to mumps, measles and rubella vaccines which were recommended for licensing, indicating the date on which each product was considered. [19265]

Mr. Malone: The available information is as follows:

Issue	Considered by the Committee on	Name of product
Mumps	26 May 1983	Pariorix
Measles	18 December 1980	Rimevax
	28 July 1988	Measavax
	22–23 September 1988	Immravax
Rubella	26–27 September 1984	Ervevax
	28 July 1988	Rubavax
	22–23 September 1988	Immravax

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of suspected adverse reactions to mumps, measles and rubella vaccines for the last five years for which figures are available. [19266]

Mr. Malone: Suspected adverse reactions reports to measles, mumps and rubella vaccine are given in the table.

Numbers of suspected adverse reactions reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines from 1 January 1992 to 31 December 1996 for MMR vaccine in the United Kingdom

Year	All suspected adverse reactions (serious and non-serious) where MMR vaccine was indicated as a suspect drug	Number of reports where MMR vaccine was indicated as a suspect drug
1993	232	129
1994	212	134
1995	228	122
1996	232	134

A report of a suspected adverse drug reaction does not necessarily mean that it was caused by the vaccine. Each report relates to one patient. Patients may have more than one suspected reaction and the number of reactions given exceeds the number of patients affected as seen above.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the statements his Department has made since 1 January 1986 relating to vaccination against mumps, measles and rubella. [19269]

Mr. Horam: Full details of the recommendations for immunisation against measles, mumps and rubella are given in the United Kingdom Health Departments' memorandum "Immunisation against Infectious Disease" which is updated regularly and was published in 1996 (ISBN: 011 321815 X), 1992 (ISBN: 0 11 321515 0), 1990 (ISBN: 0 11 321251 8), 1988 (ISBN: 0 11321136 8) and 1984 (ISBN: 0 90 2650 69 6). The following letters from the chief medical officer and circulars about measles, mumps and/or rubella have also been issued: PL/CMO(96)6, PL/CMO(94)13, PL/CMO(94)12, PL/CMO(94)10, PL/CMO(92)11, PL/CMO(88)19, PL/CMO(88)17, PL/CMO(88)16; CMO Update Numbers 8 (November 1995), 7 (October 1995) and 6 (July 1995); EL(96)61, EL(95)113, EL(94)73 and EL(94)60. Press releases about these immunisations include: 96/239, 95/361, 95/209, 95/154, 94/599, 94/433, 94/354, H92/277, 89/476, 89/353, 89/8 and 88/166. Copies of all these are available in the Library.

Liquid Paraffin (Adverse Reactions)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of suspected adverse reactions to liquid paraffin reported to the Medicines Control Agency for each of the last five years for which figures are available separately identifying the number of suspected adverse reactions relating to cancer. [19273]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is shown in the table.

Numbers of suspected adverse reactions reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines from 1 January 1992 to 31 December 1996 for paraffin liquid in the United Kingdom

Year	All suspected adverse reactions (serious and non-serious) where paraffin liquid was indicated as a suspect drug	Number of reports where liquid paraffin was indicated as a suspect drug
1996	5	4

None of these reactions were related to cancer. A report of a suspected adverse drug reaction does not necessarily mean that it was caused by the drug. Each report relates to one patient. Patients may have more than one suspected reaction and the number of reactions given usually exceeds the number of patients affected as seen above.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what dates between 12 July 1995 and 28 November 1995 the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville) met the chairman of the Committee on Safety of Medicines. [19275]

Mr. Malone: None.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each of the chairmen of the Committee on Safety of Medicines, indicating their dates in office. [19326]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is as follows:

	Date in office
1. Professor Sir Eric Scowen MD DSc FRCP FRCS FRCP(Ed) FRCPath	1 January 1971 to 31 March 1976
2. Professor G. M. Wilson MD DSc FRCP FRCPE FRCPC FRSE	1 April 1976 to 31 December 1976
3. Professor Sir Eric Scowen MD DSc FRCP FRCS FRCP(Ed) FRCPath	1 January 1977 to 30 June 1980
4. Professor Sir Abraham Goldberg MD DSc FRCP FRSE	1 July 1980 to 31 December 1986
5. Professor Sir William Asscher BSc MD FRCP	1 January 1987 to 31 December 1992
6. Professor M. D. Rawlins BSc MD FRCP(Lon) FRCP(Ed) FFPM	1 January 1993 to date

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the quorum for a meeting of the Committee on Safety of Medicines. [19270]

Mr. Malone: Seven, including the chairman.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the date of the first "Dear Doctor" letter issued by a chairman of the Committee on Safety of Medicines; what was its subject; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [19321]

Mr. Malone: The first "Dear Doctor" letter from the Committee on Safety of Medicines was issued in August 1972 and related to the safety of Lanoxin, a brand of digoxin. Copies will be placed in the Library shortly.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount paid in attendance allowances to members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines relating to work carried out in October 1995. [19267]

Mr. Malone: The total amount paid in attendance allowance to members of the committee relating to work carried out in October 1995, was £2,850.

Drug Safety Announcements

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is made in the Medicines Act 1968 and related legislation for public announcements by the Licensing Authority relating to drug safety in the absence of licensing action. [19322]

Mr. Malone: The functions of Health Ministers include taking appropriate action whenever public health issues arise. These responsibilities are long established as per the Ministry of Health Act 1919.

Food Safety (Mineral Hydrocarbons)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what occasions the Committee on Toxicity has considered the safety of mineral hydrocarbons in food processes; what conclusions they reached; and if he will make a statement. [19272]

Mr. Horam: The Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment has considered mineral hydrocarbons in 1988, 1989 and 1993. The conclusions of the latest consideration of these compounds were published in the 1993 annual report of the Committee, copies of which have been deposited in the Library.

Clinical Trials Volunteers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many volunteers who took part in clinical trials in the United Kingdom have died or suffered serious injury in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; what procedures his Department has in place to ensure minimisation of risk to such volunteers; and if he will make a statement; [19274]

(2) what procedures (a) his Department and (b) the Medicines Control Agency have in place to ensure that commercial organisations obtain valid, independent ethical approval before conducting clinical drug trials on healthy volunteers. [19268]

Mr. Malone: These figures are not collected centrally and no data are available.

Volunteers who take part in clinical trials are protected by a variety of mechanisms designed to minimise the risk to the subjects. People who take part in any form of drug study are volunteers who do so on the basis of informed consent. Informed consent means that the purpose of the trial is explained to the subject together with what is known about the drug, any questions that the volunteer may have are answered and the potential volunteer is given the opportunity to decline to take part without it affecting his future treatment.

Studies on healthy volunteers, where there is no expectation of therapeutic benefit, do not meet the definition of a clinical trial given in section 31 of the Medicines Act 1968 and are not controlled by the Act. Companies carrying out such studies are self-regulated and, under an Association of British Pharmaceutical Industries code of practice for all pharmaceutical companies, companies are required to obtain the approval of an independent ethics committee before conducting studies on healthy volunteers. These studies are carried out in specialist units by experienced medical staff who have ready access to the appropriate support facilities to ensure the safety of those taking part.

In general, studies in patients are covered by the Medicines Act 1968 and it is necessary for any pharmaceutical company to gain the permission of the Licensing Authority before carrying out such studies. The principal control scheme for company-sponsored clinical trials in the UK is currently the CTX scheme—exemption from the need to hold a clinical trials certificate—covered by The Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Clinical Trials) Order 1995 (SI 2808) and The Medicines (Exemption from Licences and Certificates) (Clinical Trials) Order 1995 (SI 2809). Under the CTX scheme, all studies must be performed to good clinical practice standards and these include a review of the study by an independent ethics committee before the study commences. Companies applying to carry out trials under the CTX scheme give an undertaking that the Medicines Control Agency, acting on behalf of the Licensing Authority, will be notified of any refusal by an independent ethics committee to approve the trial as proposed by the company.

Additionally, under the CTX scheme, companies must report the occurrence of serious, unexpected adverse drug reactions detected during trials taking place anywhere in the world to the MCA, which carefully reviews these data in order to decide whether or not trials in the UK with that drug should be allowed to continue. In any year, about 10 to 15 per cent. of trials applications are refused and a small number of approved trials have their conditions modified by the MCA because of safety concerns about the drug and its proposed use. The MCA does not collect total figures for adverse events and deaths across all clinical trials because such data would not be helpful in the assessment of the safety of an individual drug undergoing clinical trials.

The combination of informed consent, review by an independent ethics committee and constant monitoring of safety data by the MCA has been in operation for many years and has served well in the protection of public health while at the same time allowing the rapid development of new drugs to treat patients.

"Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance"

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the date of the first issue of the publication which is now entitled "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance"; who authorised its issue; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [19323]

Mr. Malone: The first issue of the publication now called "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance" was published by the Committee on Safety of Medicines in September 1975. Copies will be placed in the Library shortly.

Methionine

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the safety of paracetamol preparations containing methionine; and if he will make a statement. [19325]

Mr. Malone: As with all medicines, the safety of paracetamol preparations containing methionine is continuously monitored by Medicines Control Agency and any new information is carefully evaluated. Side effects from methionine include nausea, vomiting, dizziness and irritability. Methionine is added to some preparations containing paracetamol to prevent liver damage if an overdose is taken but is of no benefit to patients who use paracetamol at the recommended dose. Patients who are not at risk of an overdose are exposed to the possible risk of side effects from methionine with no additional benefit.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total level of payments to date for each appropriate local authority for asylum seekers who would otherwise be facing destitution as defined under the National Assistance Act 1948. [19603]

Mr. Burns: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced we shall be reimbursing local authorities for reasonable costs that have fallen to them following the high court and courts of appeal judgments. Guidance has been issued to local authorities inviting them to claim for reimbursement of their expenditure in supporting adult asylum seekers. Claims forms must be submitted to the Department by 14 March.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the capacity of accident and emergency departments at (a) St. Bartholomew's, (b) Whittington, (c) the Royal Free, (d) Barnet general and (e) Edgware hospitals in each of the past five years; and what are the planned figures for 1997–98. [19605]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply the Under-Secretary of State for Health, my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Horam) gave on 25 November 1996, column 127.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reviews have been undertaken by his Department of the operation of accident and emergency departments at (a) St. Bartholomew's (b) Whittington, (c) the Royal Free, (d) Barnet general and (e) Edgware hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [19606]

Mr. Malone: A strategy for the configuration of accident and emergency services in London was included in the report "Making London Better" in February 1993. Copies are available in the Library.

The on-going review and monitoring of accident and emergency departments is the responsibility of local health authorities. Service reviews are initiated in the light of local needs and circumstances and are the subject of statutory public consultation if major change or service development is indicated.

Statutory consultation exercises have been undertaken by individual health authorities on the reconfiguration of emergency services at St. Bartholomew's, Barnet general hospital and Edgware general hospital.

Child Labour

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to bring forward proposals for regulation of child labour in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [19604]

Mr. Burns: A comprehensive legal system has been in place for many years to protect children who choose to work. Regulations are being prepared to begin the process of implementing the minor changes to current law necessary to fully conform with a European Community directive on the protection of young people at work.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Tenanted Land

Mr. Richards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the results of the new annual survey of tenanted land; and if he will make a statement. [20100]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The results of the annual survey of tenanted land were published today. I have placed in the Library of the House copies of a departmental statistical notice which gives a summary of the results of this survey.

The first annual survey of tenanted land was carried out in October 1996 and replaces the previous rent enquiry. The new survey seeks details on rental agreements and on rents from a random sample of farmers who have rented agricultural land.

The survey indicates that in October 1996 the average rent paid for agricultural land in England was £116.99 per hectare. A total of 559 from business tenancy agreements were recorded in the survey. That figure represents over 11 per cent. of all types of agreement. And in terms of the amount of let farmland recorded, farm business tenancies account for more than 7 per cent. of the agricultural rented area.

Although the Agricultural Tenancies Act came into operation on 1 September 1995, that is only a short time ago in farming terms. I am greatly encouraged by the interest shown in the new farm business tenancies. The survey results provide statistics on a wide range of types of agreement, and illustrate that the flexibility available under the new legislation is already being used by the tenanted sector. Over 7 per cent. of FBT agreements in the survey sample were for five years duration or more, and a number of landlords had sufficient confidence to offer lettings for 25 years or more.

The new survey will be conducted each autumn, and, as well as collecting data on agricultural rents, makes good the Government's commitment, given during the passage of the Agricultural Tenancies Bill, to monitor uptake of farm business tenancies.

In addition, an independent policy evaluation of the effect of the new legislation has been commissioned, and I intend to publish the results of that study later in the year.

Honey and Bee Health

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the submission of the International Bee Research Association relating to recent EU proposals on honey and bee health circulated by his Department. [19407]

Mr. Boswell: The submission of the International Bee Research Association on the recent EU proposals on honey and bee health has, along with other representations received, provided a useful contribution to the debate and has helped the Government in framing their approach to negotiations.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines he has issued since 14 December 1995 concerning the effect on dressing hygiene of the slaughter of dirty stock in abattoirs. [19574]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 March 1997]: Detailed guidelines on dressing procedures to prevent the outside of the hide from contaminating the carcase are contained in the "Meat Hygiene Service Operations Manual", issued in April 1995. This guidance was reinforced in letters issued by the Meat Hygiene Service to all official veterinary surgeons and meat hygiene inspectors on 18 December 1996 and 17 February 1997. Any premises in which improvements are needed are followed up on an individual basis by Meat Hygiene Service staff with the operator concerned. The manual also contains guidance on the steps to be taken to ensure the cleanliness of animals presented for slaughter. The Meat Hygiene Service is at present preparing enhanced guidance on the standards expected and how to achieve them. This will be issued later this month.

Calf Exports

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many calves were exported during (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996 following the implementation of the Bovine Offal (Prohibition) (Amendment) Regulations on 2 November 1994; and what warnings were given to importers as to the action they should take concerning human food consumption. [18204]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 March 1997]: Official overseas trade statistics show that approximately 558,000 cattle, the vast majority of which would have been calves, were exported in the period November 1994 to March 1996, prior to the export ban which came into effect in 1996. These figures remain provisional and subject to amendment.

Exports of calves to member states during this period took place in accordance with EC decision 94/474, which requires all calves imported from the UK to be slaughtered before the age of six months. The proposed implementation of the Bovine Offal (Prohibition) (Amendment) Regulations 1994 was notified to the Commission on 26 July 1994 in accordance with the provisions of article 9(3) of the EC Technical Standards and Regulations Directive 83/189/EEC and would have subsequently been notified to other member states by the Commission. It is for individual member states to decide whether or not similar controls should be put in place in their territory.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Roisin McAliskey

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the conditions in which the Prison Service is holding Roisin McAliskey. [20510]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Walker to Mr. Nirj Deva, dated 13 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the conditions in which Roisin McAliskey is being held at Holloway prison.

Following a routine review of her security status Roisin McAliskey remains a Category A prisoner but has been downgraded from high risk to standard risk within that category. As a result some of the security arrangements which have been in operation have been relaxed.

The number of strip searches to which Roisin McAliskey had been subject has already been reduced and she is no longer being strip searched before and after every open visit within the prison. She is now only being strip searched on the same basis as all other prisoners at Holloway. This means before leaving the prison for court appearances and on return to the prison; as part of a cell search and drug testing procedures; on a random basis; or if there were reasonable suspicion she had secreted something about her prison.

Further relaxations as a consequence of the security review will take effect from now on. She will be able to attend chapel, to use the gym and the swimming pool, and to attend ante-natal classes with other prisoners. The number of overnight security checks will be reduced so that the light in her cell can be extinguished for most of the night.

Separately from the review of her security status, Roisin McAliskey applied on 14 February to be located on the Mother and Baby Unit at Holloway with her baby after it is born. Her application was considered, following the normal processes which apply to all expectant mothers, by the Admissions Board at Holloway, who considered the views of independent experts in the development needs of babies, as well as logistical issues.

The Assessment Board has now advised the Governor that Roisin McAliskey's application should be approved, the Governor has recommended approval and I have accepted this recommendation. She has been told that she may keep her baby with her after the birth. She will, as do all other mothers, have to sign a compact agreeing to be of reasonable behaviour and to co-operate with the ethos and regime of the Unit. Babies in the Unit normally remain with their mothers until the age of nine months.

Both the reduction in security classification and the decision to allow Roisin McAliskey to keep her baby have followed the standard procedures and processes that would apply to any other prisoner.

Tote

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the future use of Tote profits. [18533]

Mr. Kirkhope: The Tote's role is to provide pool betting on horseracing and to raise money for racing. Maintaining its contribution to racing is central to Government policy; it is for the Tote to decide how to distribute the money.

Prison Staff (Drugs)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures and guidelines exist for the random or routine searching at prisons with a significant drugs presence of (a) prison officers, (b) other prison staff and (c) other persons visiting in an official capacity. [19761]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Sir Ivan Lawrence, dated 13 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the searching of staff and official visitors.

Guidelines for searching staff and visitors to prisons are contained in the Prison Service Manual on Security, copies of which are held in the Library of the House. These require the governor, in consultation with the area manager, to draw up a local searching strategy, including provisions for searching staff and visitors, to meet the particular security needs of the prison and to combat particular risks such as the illicit passage of drugs into the prison.

In addition, following recommendations by Sir John Woodcock, visitors and staff seeking to enter dispersal prisons (including Belmarsh) are searched on each occasion of entering the prison. This will be extended to the five local prisons at which we plan to hold category A prisoners in future, once building work has been completed to allow the necessary space and equipment to be installed at the gate.

Prison Visits (Recording)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 27 February, Official Report, columns 288–89, if he will review the use of video-recorded closed circuit television in the legal visit facilities at special secure units. [19909]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Tam Dalyell, dated 13 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about video recorded CCTV in the legal visits facility in Special Secure Units.

There are no plans to review this arrangement.

Staff Assaults (Ranby Prison)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reported incidents of staff assaults were recorded at Her Majesty's prison, Ranby from 1 January 1996 to date; and if he will make a statement. [19924]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Max Madden, dated 13 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of reported incidents of staff assaults recorded at Ranby prison from 1 January 1996 to date.

Six assaults on staff have been recorded at Ranby prison since 1 January 1996. This figure represents less than two assaults per 100 population.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce proposals for the registration and regulation of wheel clamping; and if he will make a statement. [20081]

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans for legislation in this area. We are considering whether further legal measures are needed to regulate wheel clamping.

Child Abuse

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he is taking to ascertain the whereabouts of Rosemary Iredale, a convicted child abuser recently released from prison but since disappeared; [19160]

(2) what steps he is taking to ascertain the whereabouts of Terry Valrona, a convicted child abuser recently released from prison but since disappeared. [19159]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answers 10 March 1997]: I will write to the hon. Member.

Remand Prisoners (Voting Rights)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assistance is given to remand prisoners, detained in prisons in England and Wales, to register to vote and to apply for a postal vote; and if he will ensure that all such prisoners are advised of their right to vote and assisted in securing their vote. [19740]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 March 1997]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Max Madden, dated 13 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the voting rights of remand prisoners.

Those in Prison Service custody eligible to vote in Parliamentary, local Government and European elections are: unconvicted prisoners; convicted but unsentenced prisoners; prisoners imprisoned for contempt of court; and those serving a term of imprisonment in default of payment of a sum of money adjudged to be paid on conviction. Eligible prisoners must have been registered as electors at their home address even though they may have been in prison on the qualifying date. Decisions on the eligibility of prisoners to be included in the electoral register are for the Electoral Registration Officer who decides if the person was normally resident at a particular address prior to their imprisonment.

Establishments are required to notify eligible prisoners of their eligibility to vote and to inform them of the deadlines that are set for applications for a postal or proxy vote. They are also required to ensure that ballot papers sent to prisoners reach them unopened, that staff witness prisoners' declarations of identity, and that completed votes are posted back uncensored.

Casino Deregulation

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on casino deregulation. [20446]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information is as follows:

The Deregulation (Casinos Order) 1997

I am pleased to report implementation of the first deregulation changes to the casino regime since the 1968 Act.

Following approval by Parliament on 6 March, I made the Deregulation (Casinos) Order, which comes into force on 3 April.

This will allow casinos in England and Wales to provide alcohol after midnight, until 3 am in London, and 2 am elsewhere.

In casinos in Great Britain, it also reduces from 48 to 24 hours the waiting period before new members may take part in the gaming.

The Deregulation (Debit Cards) Order 1997

The order has now been cleared by the Deregulation Committees and awaits parliamentary approval. It would allow acceptance of payment by debit cards.

The Second Casino Consultation

Advertising, group and postal membership and slot machines:

Following initial consultation earlier in 1996, we went out to consultation on 12 November on a package of measures to relax certain other controls on the operation of casinos. The proposals were as follows:

Relax the total ban on advertising to allow casinos to give their name, address, telephone number and limited factual information about their facilities in non-national publications, including newspapers and magazines;

Allow group membership and postal applications;

Permit a maximum of three slot machines per gaming table subject to a discretion for the licensing justices to substitute a lower number on grounds of demand and suitability of the premises;

There would be a power to regulate the size of stakes and prizes, although this would not be used initially;

Make a number of detailed requirements including certification of manufacturers and agents by the Gaming Board and a monitoring and testing regime.

There was broad support for the advertising proposals. A few organisations were against any relaxation in the controls. However, this is a very modest relaxation, allowing casinos merely to give out information about themselves. I do not believe that necessary protection for the public would be removed by this measure.

Most respondents also supported the proposals for group membership and postal applications. A few were opposed but most were content with the detailed safeguards proposed.

We will prepare draft proposals in the form of a deregulation order.

I am still considering the more extensive proposals for slot machines in casinos. Some concerns have been expressed about the nature of such machines. However, they are common in casinos throughout the world, usually in substantially greater numbers than we propose. But I consider that such machines must be strictly regulated. More detailed work would be required on the technical specification, monitoring and other arrangements before we could introduce legislation. We will continue our discussions with the Gaming Board and the industry.

Permitted areas

We proposed to allow casinos in 21 new locations, including London docklands and a special category of seven conference towns.

Outside London, most of the proposed new areas attracted support or neutrality from their local councils and reasonable support from other local interests. I propose to remove Peterborough from the list; its council remained opposed and there was also significant other local opposition.

In the London area, most local authorities have welcomed our proposals. Slough is considering its position. I am in further contact with Croydon council, which has recently sought more information about the implications of permitted area status and its role in the regulatory regime for casinos.

I have taken account of representations in favour of greater casino provision in east London. In addition to Dartford and Redbridge, I intend to designate a permitted area within docklands, which will put it on a par with other urban development areas within Great Britain.

On the basis of up-to-date information provided by the British Association of Conference Destinations, I propose to add Milton Keynes and Weston-super-Mare to the category of conference towns to be designated as permitted areas.

I also propose to redefine existing permitted areas to reflect local authority boundary changes.

The changes that I wish to make could be implemented by secondary legislation. Before any new areas are introduced, however, I will need to address the resource, timing and other practical implications.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the asylum seekers currently held in detention (a) are awaiting a decision on their asylum application, (b) are awaiting an appeal following a refusal of their asylum application and (c) have had an appeal rejected. [19561]

Mr. Kirkhope: The available information is given in the table.

Number of people recorded as being detained[1,2] on 31 January 1997[3] who had sought asylum at some stage, by stage of application and immigration status

Stage of application	Port	Illegal entrant	Subject to deportation action	Total
Awaiting an initial decision	103	57	15	175
Awaiting result of an appeal	203	144	29	376
Awaiting removal after refusal	86	144	17	217
Total	392	315	61	768

[1] Persons detained solely under powers contained in Schedule 2 or 3 to the Immigration Act 1971.

[2] These figures include people who have been in detention for less than one month. Because of the delay in recording receptions into, and releases from, detention and the large number of persons detained for a short period of time, the figures should be used with caution.

[3] Illegal entrants and persons subject to deportation action are as at 31 January, port cases are as at 3 February 1997.

Sexual Orientation (Police Database)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 463, (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure that any references to individuals' sexuality are deleted from the police national computer; [19434]

(2) on how many occasions an individual's sexual orientation has been recorded on the police national computer. [19433]

Mr. Maclean: There is no specific data field on the police national computer for recording sexual orientation. This might be inferred from the details of the convictions history and offending pattern. Information recorded on the PNC must be relevant to the purposes for which it is held in order to comply with the data protection principles of the Data Protection Act 1984. Data on sexual orientation would not be relevant for these purposes and would be removed if found to have been improperly recorded.

Records are not kept of how many occasions an individual's sexual orientation may have been improperly recorded on the PNC.

Prisoners (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison inmates there were in each London prison on 1 March. [19492]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 13 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking how many prison inmates there were in each London prison on 1 March.

Provisional figures are available for 28 February 1997 and these are detailed in the attached table.

Population in London Prison Service establishments on 28 February 1997

Prison Service establishment	Population on 28 February 1997[1]
Belmarsh	868
Brixton	617

Burglaries

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of burglaries in each of the last five years was committed by people aged under 21 years. [19687]

Mr. Maclean: Information available is given in the table.

Percentage of persons cautioned and convicted at all courts for burglary offences who were aged under 21 years, 1990 to 1995

Youth Crime

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage change in the number of crimes committed by youths in the past 10 years. [19822]

Mr. Maclean: Information available is given in the table.

Number and percentage change of known offenders (those cautioned or convicted at all courts) aged 10 to under 18 by type of offence, 1985 and 1995

England and Wales Thousands

Violent Crime

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) sex offences, (b) homicides and (c) other violent crimes were recorded in West Yorkshire in each of the last 10 years; and what percentage of these led to successful prosecutions. [19690]

Mr. Maclean: The requested information on recorded crime is given in the following table:

Notifiable offences recorded by the police West Yorkshire police force area

The available court data relate to defendants convicted in the West Yorkshire police force area and are given in the following table. Information is given for the years 1985, 1990 and 1995 only. The provision of data for other years would involve disproportionate cost. It is not appropriate to express these figures as a percentage of recorded offences as they relate to offenders who may have been proceeded against for more than one offence.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the successful bids, in Wales, for CCTV funding; and how many bids were rejected and in which areas of Wales they were located. [20050]

Mr. Maclean: In the third round of the closed circuit television challenge competition—1997–98—the following bids from Wales were successful:

Bid	Amount awarded £
Monmouth town centre	112,500
Prestatyn town centre	85,500
Wrexham town centre	50,000

There were 13 unsuccessful bids from the following areas:

Abergele town centre.

Ammanford pedestrian and commercial centre.

Brecon, Newtown and Llandrindod Wells town centres.

Princess of Wales Hospital, Bridgend.

Lansbury Park, Caerphilly.

Llanrumney, Cardiff.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sporting Ambassadors

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she will announce the conclusions of the committee chaired by Sir Colin Cowdrey on sporting ambassadors. [20511]

Mr. Sproat: I will be announcing the committee's conclusions on the morning of 14 March and copies of the announcement will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will provide a breakdown by project of PFI schemes for which her Department is responsible as identified in table 5.5 of the Red Book. [18930]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 6 March 1997]: The breakdown is in the following table. The figures in the table represented best estimates at the time the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98" was prepared. The figures in the FSBR are rounded to the nearest £10 million.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many law members of industrial tribunals were surveyed in the recent review of members' expenses and how many replied; what was the proportion of employee to employer members taking part; how many responses were received from each region; if he will place details of the survey in the Library; and what action he plans to take as a result of the survey. [20049]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Prior to the recent notification to lay members of industrial tribunals of changes to the arrangements for payment of their fees and expenses, an analysis of claims was undertaken. The analysis was based on a random sample of 400 claims made by members from across Great Britain. The sample did not separately identify claims made by employer and employee nominees. I will arrange for a summary of the results to be placed in the Library of the House.

Small Firms Loans Guarantee Scheme

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to improve the Government publicity relating to the small firms loan guarantee scheme. [19758]

Mr. Page: There are no plans to change the way in which the scheme is publicised.

Information on the scheme is widely available. Details appear in relevant DTI publications and there is a separate scheme booklet. This is widely distributed to lenders and business intermediaries throughout the United Kingdom and is freely available directly from the DTI. Currently, around 5,000 copies a month are requested.

The main focus for promoting the scheme lies with lenders and intermediaries. The scheme is appropriate only when a lender considers the business proposal for a loan to be viable, and would be prepared to lend, but for the lack of collateral to use as security against a conventional loan or overdraft.

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to make the booklet relating to the small firms loans guarantee scheme more comprehensive. [19759]

Mr. Page: The booklet will be updated later this year to reflect recent changes.

Roslin Institute

Mr. Cash: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library copies of the agreements between the Roslin Institute and other bodies since the inception of the Roslin Institute. [18967]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Roslin Institute enters into a very wide range of contracts and other agreements in the course of its business. All the contracts relating to commercial activities, including the exploitation of research, are classified as commercial in confidence.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Overseas Police Officers (Scholarships)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries whose police officers received scholarship awards in Britain in 1991. [19916]

Dr. Liam Fox: In 1991, the FCO diplomatic wing and the ODA did not keep centrally a record of police officers who received scholarship awards. It would involve a disproportionate cost to collate this information now for all such projects.

Namibia

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date the human rights performance of Namibia was last graded for internal purposes by his Department. [19913]

Dr. Liam Fox: We have no formal grading system. But with Namibia, as with other countries, we take human rights performance into account when monitoring political developments.

Sudan

Mr. Corbyn: Asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total bilateral aid contribution to multilateral aid programmes in the Sudan for each of the last five years. [19600]

Dr. Liam Fox: Since 1992, the UK has channelled £13.5 million of bilateral emergency assistance for Sudan through multilateral agencies. The breakdown of disbursements together with information on disbursements through international non-governmental organisations is as follows:

	Multilateral agencies	NGOs	Total
1992	1.6	8.0	9.6
1993	5.0	6.3	11.3
1994	3.9	10.2	14.1
1995	2.2	5.0	7.2
1996	0.8	5.2	6.0
Total	13.5	34.7	48.2

ENVIRONMENT

Radioactive Waste (Vitrification)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evaluation (a) his Department and (b) consultants to his Department have made of the assessment by the US Department of Energy's glass advisory panel of the safety of using vitrified glass to encapsulate high-activity radioactive waste; and if he will make a statement on the current operational status of vitrification plants for nuclear waste immobilisation in the United Kingdom. [19912]

Mr. Gummer: Neither my Department nor consultants used by my Department are aware of an assessment by the US Department of Energy's glass advisory panel of the safety of using vitrified glass to encapsulate high-level radioactive waste. The status of vitrification plants are matters for the operators subject to meeting regulatory requirements. But I understand that the one vitrification plant in the UK is operated using two processing lines at the BNFL, Sellafield site in Cumbria. This plant was commissioned in February 1991 and has a consent to operate in full compliance with all UK regulations. BNFL is building a third operating line at Sellafield which is expected to be commissioned in the year 2000.

Electricity Turbines (Fisheries)

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that the installation of turbines by electricity generating companies does not cause damage to migratory fisheries on (a) the River Leven and (b) other rivers in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [19676]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Section 14 of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975—amended by schedule 15 the Environment Act 1995—requires the owner or occupier of any mill, defined as including any erection for the purpose of developing water power which diverts water from any watercourse frequented by salmon or migratory trout, to place and maintain, at his own cost, a screen to prevent access to the intake by those fish. Such a screen is required to be so located and constructed that, so far as reasonably practicable, those fish are not injured or damaged by it. This obligation applies only where the intake channel was constructed after 18 July 1923.

There are two abstractions on the River Leven for hydro-power generation. Both intakes were constructed before 1923 and so are not covered by the screen obligation. Neither currently has screens in place, but the Environment Agency is well aware of the issue and is seeking agreement with the abstractor for the installation of suitable screens.

Local Authority Delegations

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authority delegations which met him or his Department's Ministers, and the hon. Member who accompanied each such delegation, and the subjects discussed between 1 November 1996 and 28 February 1997. [19717]

Sir Paul Beresford: A total of 79 authorities, as listed, sent delegations to Ministers in the Department of the Environment during the consultation period on the proposed local government finance settlement for England for 1997–98. The composition of each delegation was entirely a matter for individual local authorities, which were free to invite hon. Members to accompany them as they saw fit. A range of local government finance issues was discussed at each meeting.

British Waterways

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what part regeneration plays in British Waterways' management and operation of the canal network. [20606]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Waterways provide an important catalyst for urban and rural regeneration. One of British Waterways' aims is to promote and accommodate conservation and regeneration. In doing so it works with a range of partners in the private, public and voluntary sectors.

An excellent example of the role of canals in regeneration is the Birmingham waterfront where over £300 million of private sector finance has been attracted to developments alongside British Waterways' canals. Another success story is the joint investment of £7 million by British Waterways and Gloucester city council in Gloucester docks which has attracted over £30 million in private finance. The shift in the city's focus to the docks has seen the numbers employed rise from 100 to 2,000 and tourism visits rise from a few thousand to over 1 million. In Scotland the millennium link, aided by £32 million from the Millennium Commission, will create 4,200 permanent jobs and attract £400 million of private investment along the 70-mile waterway corridor.

Blight

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the report of the interdepartmental working group on blight. [20607]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The interdepartmental working group on blight was established to review the scope, cause and effects of blight arising during the various stages of major infrastructure projects and to consider whether any practical changes could be made to existing arrangements for property purchase and compensation. The group published a discussion paper last June and a progress report, which set out the various proposals that had been put to group, was published last November. Since then the group has been evaluating these ideas and assessing the costs and benefits of various options. That work has yet to be completed. I anticipate that the group will now complete its work in about the middle of this year.

In addition to a consideration of possible changes to the purchase and compensation arrangements, the group is looking at steps that might be taken to reduce the blighting effects of projects by, for example, speeding up decision processes and reducing uncertainty. On 14 January I announced consultations on proposals to speed up both the development plans and planning appeals processes, all of which has the potential to reduce blight. However, the group has drawn attention to two ideas which might be pursued ahead of its final report. I therefore propose to begin consultation on ways of reducing the blighting effects of infrastructure projects which are shown on statutory development plans, but which have subsequently been abandoned, and on developing a code of good practice on the timely dissemination of information about projects by major infrastructure developers. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is considering similar proposals.

Listed Buildings (Green Belt)

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the listed buildings in the green belt. [20608]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: National policy for green belts is set out in our planning policy guidance note 2 and for listed buildings in planning policy guidance note 15. PPG2 confirms the importance which the Government attach to green belts, and maintains the general presumption against "inappropriate" development within them—as detailed in PPG2. Very special circumstances are needed to outweigh this presumption. The Government also attach a high priority to protecting the historic environment and to ensuring that the special architectural or historic interest of listed buildings is fully recognised. PPG15 makes clear that, in general, the best way of ensuring the upkeep of historic buildings is to keep them in active use; and PPG2 advises that suitable reuse of a building is to be preferred to redevelopment where it is of architectural or historic interest.

Where a change of use, extension or alteration to a listed building in the green belt would be essential for, or contribute significantly to, ensuring a viable future for the building or for maintaining it in good order, this could constitute or contribute to the "very special circumstances" which can justify inappropriate development in the green belt. Proposals would have to be of a high standard of design to complement or enhance their surroundings; and any proposals would need listed building consent as well as planning permission.

Local Authority Services

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the research on "CCT and Local Authority Blue-Collar Services" by Austin Mayhead and Co. [20672]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department will publish today research on "CCT and Local Authority Blue-Collar Services" by Austin Mayhead and Co. It followed up an earlier piece of research into blue-collar compulsory competitive tendering carried out by the institute of local government studies at the university of Birmingham.

This research confirms the progress that has been made in achieving greater efficiency and value for money in the delivery of local authority services through fair competition between in-house teams and private contractors. Average annual savings from blue-collar CCT in the second round are running at 9 per cent. compared with 6.5 per cent. in the first round. Most authorities recognise that the quality of CCT services has improved since the first round. Three quarters said that CCT had resulted in clearer and more comprehensive service specifications and two thirds thought it had resulted in a closer reflection of consumer needs.

Only a minority—11 per cent.—of authorities, however, are supportive of the compulsory element of the CCT regime and almost a third said they would not undertake competitive tendering of services should compulsion be removed.

The report looks at the experiences of authorities during the second round of tendering for blue-collar services and analyses data on costs, number of bids, changes in specifications and other factual information about contracts.

I will place in the Library today copies of the executive summary of a copy of the full report entitled "CCT and Local Authority Blue-Collar Services".

PRIME MINISTER

Pay Review Bodies

Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the Prime Minister what is the current membership of the public sector pay review bodies. [20512]

The Prime Minister: The current membership, with effect from 1 April 1997, is as listed:

Senior salaries review body

Sir Michael Perry CBE (Chairman)
Sir Gordon Hourston
Sir Anthony Wilson
Sir Sydney Lipworth QC
Mrs. Rosemary Day
Ms Patricia Mann
Mr. Mark Sheldon
The Hon. Michael Beloff QC
Professor Sandra Dawson
Mr. David Clayman.

Armed forces pay review body

Sir Gordon Hourston (Chairman)
Mr. Michael Bolton
Mrs. Dorothy Venables
Mr. John Cox OBE
Mr. John Crosby
Vice Admiral Sir Toby Frere KCB (from July 1997)
Sir Gavin Laird CBE
Mrs. Kay Coleman.

Review body on nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine

Mr. Bryan Rigby (Chairman)
Miss Anne Mackie OBE
Professor Gillian Raab
Ms Ruth Lea
Mrs. Shelia Gleig

Mr. Christopher King CBE
Mrs. Beryl Brewer
Mr. Roderick Jackson.

School teachers review body

Mr. Tony Vineall
Mrs. Brigita Amey
Mr. Michael Harding
Mrs. Julia Cuthbetson
Miss Janet Langdon
Mr. Peter Gelding
Mr. Vincent Harris.

TRANSPORT

Marine Oil Pollution (Contingency Plans)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what estimate he has made of the annual cost to local authorities of (a) drawing up and (b) maintaining their contingency plans for dealing with marine oil pollution; [19299]

(2) what arrangements are in place to check the adequacy and resilience of local authority contingency plans for dealing with marine oil pollution. [19300]

Mr. Bowis: I have asked the chief executive of the Coastguard agency, Mr. Chris Harris, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 13 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the costs to local authorities of drawing up and maintaining their contingency plans for dealing with marine oil pollution and the adequacy and resilience of these plans.

The forthcoming review of the National Contingency Plan will include an exercise to identify the costs to local authorities of preparing and maintaining contingency plans.

The National Contingency Plan, maintained by the Agency's Marine Pollution Control Unit (MPCU) states that "each coastal local authority at district, island, county or regional level, should have a contingency plan so that an effective counter-pollution response may be effected speedily at any time." A copy of the August 1996 version is now in the House of Commons Library.

Annex 11 of the National Contingency Plan contains a list of items which should be included in local authority plans. MPCU encourages local authorities to submit their plans for the Unit to check that they are consistent with the National Plan. The Unit notifies them of any omissions and may make suggestions for amendments and improvements. MPCU also holds four one week residential training courses for local authority staff, covering all aspects of contingency planning. It encourages local authorities to exercise their plans and carry out training using equipment from MPCU's stockpiles. From time to time MPCU takes part in local authority exercises and incorporates local authorities into MPCU's exercises.

M45 (Litter)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 5 March, Official Report, column 609, if he will instruct the Highways Agency to publish figures relating to the regularity of litter collection on the M45. [19562]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 13 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the regularity of litter collection on the M45.

The funding available for motorway and trunk road routine maintenance this year has been extremely tight. In these circumstances we have taken the view that our prime concern must be to maintain the safety of the motorway and trunk road network. Consequently, those activities directly related to road safety have first call on our funds.

This means that the normal programme of routine maintenance works carried out by our agent authorities, in accordance with our Code of Practice, has had to be curtailed. We have not been able to carry out activities beyond those necessary for achieving safety. Litter picking on the hard shoulder of the M45 is carried out every four weeks, and additionally if the need arises. Verge scavenging on the M45 has not been carried out since March 1996.

M25 (Works)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how the Highways Agency will identify those projects that will be delayed or deleted as a consequence of the additional expenditure it will have to meet consequent upon the relaying of the capping and asphalt surfacing replacement between junctions 6 and 8. [19572]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Andrew Mackinlay, dated 13 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question asking which projects will be delayed or deleted as a consequence of the additional expenditure on relaying the capping layer and renewing the asphalt surfacing between junctions 6 and 8 on the M25.

It will be some time yet before we know accurately what the additional costs will be. They will be the subject of negotiations with the contractor and not all of them will fall to the Agency.

It is therefore not possible to give a precise answer to the question but whatever the cost, we must manage our programme within our budget. That said, there are no proposals for deleting schemes as a consequence. The most likely outcome is an adjustment to the timing on delivering projects as part of our normal management of projects to budget. But given that any additional costs are minor in relation to our overall budget, any delays will be small.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those stretches of road, including bridges, classified as orange and red for congestion in 1995 for each region which have residual life of (a) nought years and (b) nought to four years; and if he will specify the maintenance planned for those stretches of road. [20136]

Mr. Watts: The residual life of the road network is held on a database comprising some 20,000 discrete sections designed to permit efficient computer analysis. The sections of the network covering the congestion maps and the residual life bands specified in the question are likely to number some 2,000 reference sections which could be identified and interpreted to provide a meaningful answer only at disproportionate cost.

The Highways Agency's plans for future maintenance of the trunk road network have not yet been finalised.

Coastguard Service

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) he will assess the impact of safety of the reduction in sector posts by the Coastguard agency; and if he will make a statement; [19022]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effects of the increasing role of volunteers in supporting the Coastguard agency. [19021]

Mr. Bowis: I have asked the chief executive of the Coastguard agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Ms Joan Walley, dated 13 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the reduction in sector posts and the role of volunteers in supporting the Coastguard Agency.

The recent review of uniformed coastguard officers has introduced a new higher grade sector manager level with enhanced responsibilities, skills and abilities. This will enable the number of administrative sectors to be reduced from 90 to 64. These changes are administrative and will not affect HM Coastguard's coastal response nor increase reliance upon volunteers.

Although volunteers play a vital part in the service we provide, the Agency is not increasing their role or number. In fact the opposite is true; nearly 200 Coastguard Watch Assistants have been recruited to replace the part-time auxiliary volunteers in operations rooms and in regional and district offices.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Commission Committees

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library (a) the titles and short description of the functions of each regulatory, advisory or other committee of the Commission of the European Communities, (b) the names and details of each member and (c) their method of appointments and the designation of their responsible officers; and if they publish an annual report. [19435]

Mr. David Davis: A list of Commission committees is in section III of volume 4 of the 1997 draft general budget of the European Communities which is available in the Libraries of the House. The other details requested are not held centrally and could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress with the European IGC. [18312]

Mr. David Davis: The intergovernmental conference is progressing well. All member states are working towards a conclusion to the intergovernmental conference at the Amsterdam European Council.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Web Site

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when her Department established its Internet site; what representations she has received and what data she has collated on the use and utility of the site; and what steps she is taking to increase the amount of information available via the site. [19142]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department's Internet site was established with the merger of the former Education and Employment Departments in the summer of 1995, both of which had their own sites for a short time prior to this.

No significant representations have been received about the site, except for a few constructive comment received from users. Statistics show that the site is accessed, on average, 35,000 times a week.

The Department's policy is to extend its site, wherever possible, to provide information about its policy areas.

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much her Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting, publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19393]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department and its executive agencies publish four charters and one customer standard document. The costs of publishing these documents and the number of copies issued are as follows:

	Publishing and circulating (£ millions)	Number of copies issued (millions)
The parent's charter	3.073	20
The jobseeker's charter	0.02	0.055
The higher education and further education charters	0.77	2.87 2.42
The overseas labour service statement of service standard	0.002	0.02

The involvement of civil servants in drafting and preparing text is part of their normal responsibilities and cannot be quantified separately.

It would compromise the Department's confidential tendering procedures to disclose separately the payments made for the circulation of charters.

The figures shown cover the costs of publishing and circulating the latest version of the jobseeker's charter. The information on costs for previous versions could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The higher education and further education charters were produced jointly. It is not possible to disaggregate costs. Although the main publishing and circulation costs are shown, there is some additional on-going expenditure which is not possible to itemise separately.

Nursery Vouchers (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many nursery vouchers have been taken up in the London borough of Wandsworth. [19490]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table shows the numbers of nursery education vouchers issued to parents and redeemed, in whole or in part, for each term during phase 1 of the voucher scheme in Wandsworth.

	Summer 1996	Autumn 1996	Spring 1997–to date
Vouchers issued	3,123	3,147	3,026
Vouchers redeemed in whole or part	2,798	2,760	2,437

Deaf and Visually Impaired Children (Teachers)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) which teachers of deaf children are required to hold a qualification for teaching the deaf; [19895]

(2) what specialist qualifications for teaching the deaf are required of a teacher of hearing-impaired children in a special unit where that child is registered in a mainstream class. [19897]

Mrs. Gillan: Teachers of classes of hearing impaired children, including teachers of children registered in a mainstream class but taught in a special unit, are required to gain a qualification recognised by the Secretary of State, within three years of appointment.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate her Department has made of (a) the number of schools and (b) the number of special classes, in England and Wales, which require teachers with a qualification for teaching the deaf. [19896]

Mrs. Gillan: In January 1995 there were 28 maintained and 13 non-maintained special schools for children with hearing impairments—source: table 10 of "Statistical Bulletin", 9/96. The Department does not collect statistics on special classes for hearing impaired children. Teachers of such a class, whether in a special school or a mainstream school, must gain an approved qualification.

Questions relating to schools in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if statements made for (a) deaf and (b) visually impaired children below statutory school age, require prior consultation with an appropriately qualified teacher under the Education Act 1981; and if she will make a statement. [19894]

Mrs. Gillan: The Education (Special Educational Needs) Regulations 1994 require local education authorities making a statutory assessment of a child with hearing and/or visual impairment to seek advice from a teacher with a relevant qualification. The Government have no plans to change this requirement.

Private Finance Initiative (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what decision has been reached concerning funding by the private finance initiative for the Caste Hill site in Bolton; and if she will make a statement. [19015]

Mr. Robin Squire: Bolton local education authority is assessing the feasibility of using the private finance initiative to take forward a project to build a replacement primary school and community facilities on the Castle Hill site. It is for the authority to decide whether the PFI offers the best value for money for the project.

I am encouraged by the amount of interest that has been shown by local education authorities in the PFI to date. There are currently 15 pathfinder projects across the schools sector, including LEA, grant-maintained and voluntary-aided schools. There is a wide range of projects: examples include replacement secondary and primary schools and grouped projects for catering, information technology equipment and energy management facilities.

Enborne Lodge School

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answers of 4 March 1997, Official Report, columns 557–58, if the proceeds of the sale of Enborne Lodge school will be divided according to the provisions in force at the time of the decision to sell or those in force at the time of the sale itself. [19952]

Mrs. Gillan: A final decision on the interpretation of legislation would be a matter for the courts. Subject to that, however, my right hon. Friend considers that the provisions which would apply would be those in force at the time of any sale. Proposals by the Association of London Government which would affect the arrangements for sharing the proceeds from disposal of certain former Inner London education authority property are at present under consideration.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the outcome of the consultation on her proposals to accept the School Teachers Review Body's recommendations for a 3.3 per cent. increase for teachers. [20614]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am today confirming that I am accepting the School Teachers Review Body's recommendation to increase teachers' pay by 3.3 per cent. This award will be staged so that teachers will receive 2 per cent. on 1 April 1997 and the remainder on 1 December 1997. I will lay an order before Parliament which will give the values of the new spine points, scale and allowances with effect from 1 April 1997 and 1 December 1997.

I am writing to the teacher associations, the National Employers Organisation for School Teachers and the head teachers and chairmen of governors of all schools in England and Wales notifying them of my decision. Officials will be writing to other interested parties.

I am announcing my confirmation of the pay award immediately because I want teachers to receive the first stage of their pay increase as soon as possible after 1 April 1997.

I have received a number of representations about the level of the award and the staging of it and considered them carefully. The Government have decided to stage the pay awards for all the review body groups this year. Staging will make it possible to accommodate the costs within spending plans without prejudicing the planned level of service delivery. In addition, staging reflects the Government's view that settlements should be lower this year both generally throughout the public sector and specifically for the pay review body groups. I believe that phasing the increase will make it more manageable for local education authorities and schools.

I have also decided to confirm my other proposals listed, which will come into force from 1 September 1997 by means of revisions to the "School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document":

(i) the STPCD should be amended to make it clear that sick leave should count as a period of service for the purpose of the award of experience points, but that the award of such points for absences from duty other than for holiday periods and maternity leave should be discretionary;

(ii) within one month of the commencement of a period of absence of a head or a deputy the governing body should be required to consider whether payment of an acting allowance would be appropriate to an individual who is called upon to act as the head or deputy;

(iii) the level of an acting allowance should ensure that the individual receives remuneration equivalent to an appropriate point on the pay spine for heads and deputies, not less than the minimum of the normal range for the school group but not necessarily the same as for a substantive postholder whose salary may reflect factors particular to the individual;

(iv) individuals acting as heads or deputies and in receipt of an acting allowance should be regarded during that time as having the conditions of employment of the post for which they are temporarily being paid;

(v) where teachers in charge of Pupil Referral Units (PRUs) are paid as heads they should be subject to the conditions of employment of heads; and

(vi) where other centrally-based teachers are paid as heads or deputies their conditions of employment should be agreed on a separate contractual basis.

I also confirm the following proposals which are not statutory recommendations because they will not in themselves require changes to be made to the STPCD 1996:

(i) that appropriate guidance should be included in the DfEE Circular on the application and management of the obligation of teachers to provide cover for absent colleagues, and the importance of effective management and monitoring of teacher absence;

(ii) guidance should be provided in the DfEE's pay Circular which makes it clear that an acting allowance should be paid from, or backdated to, the time that the individual is called upon to perform functions that require the full authority of the post to be exercised, for example formulating aims and policies or appointing staff;

(iii) the Circular which accompanies the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document should include guidance based on the presumption that teachers in charge of PRUs should be paid as headteachers unless local circumstances make clear this is inappropriate, for example where the PRU is particularly small or part of an organisational structure which makes it different from other PRUs.

Finally, on the STRB's recommendation that teacher governors should not be members of committees which determine the individual levels of pay of heads and deputies at their own school, I decided not to take a decision until after consultation. The arguments are balanced; I have now decided that the question will be considered further in the context of the review of the school government regulations. This will leave the matter as one for local discretion for the time being.

Learning Credits

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has for the implementation of learning credits; and if she will make a statement. [20615]

Mr. Paice: The White Paper "Learning to Compete", Cm 3486, published in December 1996 set out the Government's intention to introduce, progressively from September 1997, a new learning credits entitlement for all young people aged 14 to 21 to career planning and learning opportunities up to level 3. This will clarify and make more coherent young people's entitlement to post-16 learning and career planning, and increase still further their participation, motivation and attainment. Learning credits will be issued nationally from Easter 1998 to all 16-year-olds completing compulsory education.

The consultation document "A Passport to Learning" published alongside the White Paper sought views on how learning credits should be implemented and their scope for further development.

The Government's proposals have been warmly welcomed by respondents across the education and training worlds.

The new learning credits entitlement includes:

an improved entitlement to two weeks' work experience pre-16; enhanced careers education and guidance from 14;

a new national record of achievement from 14;

access by age 21 to learning opportunities leading, where appropriate, to level 3 qualifications; and continuing independent advice from the careers service post-16.

The effective delivery of this entitlement will require the active partnership of careers services, training and enterprise councils, the Further Education Funding Council, local education authorities, schools, colleges and training providers.

In taking forward learning credits through local partnerships, the Government believe that careers services should have the central role in delivering the learning credits entitlement. From September 1997 they will be responsible for a range of tasks including:

issuing learning credits to those entering year 11;

preparing young people in years 9 and 10, through group sessions, for learning credits; informing parents and schools about learning credits; and providing extra help to those young people requiring further advice on how to use the learning credit.

I am allocating £5.5 million to careers services for 1997–98 to enable them to fulfil these roles.

The Government have decided that, initially, the learning credit will be in the form of a simple card which will be made available to all young people completing their compulsory education from Easter 1998. The experience of training and enterprise councils in delivering youth credits has shown that such cards can be a very effective mechanism for focusing young people on the range of options open to them.

Learning credits will be made available to all young people. They will build on the best of youth credits arrangements. We intend to consider the potential for developing the card further to form the basis of systems for tracking more effectively how young people progress in post-16 learning. This should lead to improvements in planning, and contribute to evaluation of the effectiveness of learning provision and of the guidance process.

The year 1997–98—the first year of learning credits—will be a transitional year. Careers education and guidance will be targeted, so that young people in their final year of compulsory education are advised how to use their credit effectively. In future years young people will receive this advice and guidance within a structured and coherent careers education, guidance and information package spanning years 10 and 11.

Youth credits will be relevant to the transitional arrangements. Training and enterprise councils will be able, for 1997–98, either to adopt the national learning credits format from the outset or to continue with their current youth credit arrangements for the work-based route.

More detailed guidance covering the implementation of learning credits will be made available to the key partners shortly.

"A Passport to Learning" generated a great deal of interest in the potential for links to be developed between learning credits and the national record of achievement and lifetime learning. The Government will continue to reflect on these ideas.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the expected levels of council tax in 1997–98. [19213]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authorities in Wales are required to notify my Department of the level of council tax set for 1997–98 by 17 March 1997. The available provisional information is given in the following table. I shall write to the hon. Member when final figures are available and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on local authority capital expenditure plans for the year 1997–98. [19508]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's statement on 12 December 1996 on public expenditure in Wales for 1997–98, Official Report, columns 405–19.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to increase the percentage of capital sales receipts available to local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [19503]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government currently have no plans to increase the percentage of usable capital receipts from the sale of local authority assets. Authorities have to set aside a proportion of receipts from the sale of capital assets for debt redemption. If they were allowed to spend their set-aside resources, either other areas of spending would need to be reduced to ensure that debts were paid off or public spending as a whole would rise.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received relating to changes to the formulae for the standard spending assessments; and if he will make a statement. [19505]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The distribution formula for 1997–98 was ratified by the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance. A joint Welsh Office-Welsh Local Government Association review of the formula is under way for 1998–99. Recommendations for change will be considered by the consultative council in the autumn.

Youth Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on current levels of youth unemployment in (a) the previous county of Clwyd and (b) the county of Flintshire. [19512]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In January 1997 there were 3,482 persons aged under 25 on the claimant unemployment count in the former county of Clwyd. The corresponding figure for Flintshire was 985.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 10 March, Official Report, column 38, to the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards) on NHS trusts mergers, what estimate he has made of (a) the transitional costs of achieving the trust merger, (b) recurring administrative savings and (c) the time which it will take to reach the recurring administrative costs. [20084]

Mr. Hague: It is estimated by the trusts that the merger will result in recurring savings of up to £1 million starting in 1998–99. The level of transitional costs will depend upon the trust board's decisions on management arrangements in the new organisation.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 10 March, Official Report, column 38, to the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West on NHS trust mergers, when he expects to appoint the (a) chairman and (b) board members of the newly merged trust. [20083]

Mr. Hague: Interim arrangements will be announced shortly which will enable the appointments to be made in line with the code of practice for public appointments issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 10 March, Official Report, column 38, to the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West on NHS trust mergers, what estimate he has made of the job losses associated with the merger (a) before 1 April 1997 and (b) after 1 April 1997; and what estimate he has made of the winding-up costs in connection with the termination of services of board members. [20085]

Mr. Hague: There will be no job losses associated with the merger of the Pembrokeshire and Derwen NHS trusts before the new trust becomes operational on 1 April 1997. The detail of any job losses and costs incurred after that date will be a matter for the new trust board.

Nursery Education (Conwy)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many children in Conwy he estimates will register for nursery education by the local education authority in the next 12 months; and if he will make a statement; [19957]

(2) what estimates he has made of the value of nursery voucher redemption to Conwy county borough council; and if he will make a statement. [20041]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Conwy county borough council has estimated that there will be 1,066 voucher-bearing children in their schools in the 1997 summer term. At this level, total annual voucher income for the authority would be £1,172,600.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what justification Conwy county borough council has submitted to him in respect of increases in (a) centrally held school budgets and related services and (b) provision for the rationalisation of nursery education; [19958]

(2) if he will make a statement on the costed items Conwy county borough council has included under the heading "Demography" in its education budget. [19959]

Mr. Evans: Statements of the financial provision local authorities plan to make for schools they maintain have to be submitted before the start of the financial year. Information has not yet been received from Conwy county borough council.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority concerning the quality of project management of community hospitals by (a) Beard Dove and (b) Welsh Health Estates. [20082]

Mr. Hague: None. Welsh Health Estates does not act as project manager.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Llandough NHS trust concerning the termination of the services of Beard Dove as the project management company for the Barry community hospital and its replacement by Welsh Health Estates. [20086]

Mr. Hague: None. This is a matter for the trust. However, Welsh Health Estates is not acting as project manager but is advising the trust.

Suicides and Fatal Accidents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many and what percentage of the population in Wales have (a) committed suicide and (b) suffered a fatal accident in each of the last seven years; and if he will make a statement. [20036]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available, complete, annual figures from the Office for National Statistics for residents of Wales are shown in the following table:

	Suicides[1]		Fatal accidents[2]
	Number	Rate per 100,000	Number	Rate per 100,000

Local Management of Schools (Conwy)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes Conwy county borough council has notified his Department it has made to its local management of schools scheme; and if he will make a statement. [20042]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Conwy county borough council has not submitted any proposals for changes.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Department of Agriculture (Personnel Documents)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what inquiries he has conducted to establish who was responsible for passing restricted Department of Agriculture personnel documents to the Irish News; when the RUC was informed; what action can be taken against those held responsible; and to what extent such action takes account of the Northern Ireland civil service fair employment code. [18750]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The permanent secretary of the NIO and the head of the Northern Ireland civil service has ordered an inquiry into the leakage to the media of documents and other information relating to the identity, records and deployment of civil servants in Northern Ireland. That inquiry will be headed by Mr. William Innes, a former senior Whitehall official with experience of government in Northern Ireland.

If the inquiry indicates that a criminal offence may have been committed, the RUC will be informed.

Only when the inquiry has been completed can a decision be taken on appropriate action. If that action involves a civil servant, it will comply with the civil service pay and conditions of service code.

Sectarian Harassment

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date a claim of sectarian harassment was lodged against the Department of Agriculture and one of the Minister's private office staff; on what date the claimant was transferred out of her private office; and if he will make a statement. [18751]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The complainant raised orally allegations of sectarian harassment on 31 July 1995 and followed this up as requested in writing on 8 August 1995. A formal complaint of sectarian harassment was lodged with the Fair Employment Tribunal against the Department of Agriculture on 4 October 1995.

The complainant was told of her transfer on 28 July 1995, informed orally about her new post on 7 August 1995 and took up her new post on 10 August 1995.

Civil Service Graduates

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for the most recent year for which figures are available (a) the percentage and number of school leavers who obtained a degree and (b) the percentage and number of posts requiring a degree filled in the Northern Ireland civil service clerical and administrative grades; and if he will ensure that the admission procedure does not discriminate against graduates. [18752]

Sir John Wheeler: It is estimated that 27 per cent. of school children in Northern Ireland—some 6,700—graduate by the age of 25.

In the year 1996–97 a total of 735 clerical and administrative vacancies were filled in the non-industrial Northern Ireland civil service, of which 20, 2.7 per cent., required a degree as a condition of entry. The remaining 715 posts were standard clerical appointments where the nature of work to be performed does not require applicants to possess a graduate level qualification. Recruitment procedures to the NI civil service reflect the service's firm commitment to equality of opportunity in employment; entry standards for particular posts are set in relation to the nature of the work to be performed and all applicants are considered strictly on the basis of merit.

Northern Ireland Forum

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to allow the Northern Ireland Forum to continue operating during any castle buildings talks adjournment. [18754]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Northern Ireland (Entry to Negotiations, etc) Act 1996 places me under a duty to make, subject to approval of a draft in each House, an order to withdraw from effect the provisions establishing the Forum if it appears to me that the negotiations have been concluded or suspended.

On 10 March I announced that I had concluded that the talks were suspended, following the decision of the plenary session to adjourn until 3 June, and taking account of all the circumstances. In accordance with my statutory duty I therefore laid before Parliament the draft Northern Ireland (Entry to Negotiations, etc) Act 1996 (Cessation of Section 3) Order 1997.

If the draft order is approved, the Forum will not be able to operate in any form. It will be possible for a new Secretary of State to bring before the next Parliament a further draft order reviving the Forum.

Respite Care

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to improve respite care facilities for special school students and their parents in the North Down and Ards area; and what factors underlay the closure of the South Eastern education and library board's summer schemes. [18755]

Mr. Ancram: There is no statutory requirement for education and library boards to provide summer schemes at special schools and my Department has no approval function to exercise. I understand that, in reaching its decision to discontinue the schemes, the board took into account concerns about the supervision and safety of pupils.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the respite care centre at Beechfield avenue, Conlig, Newtownards, will come into service; and if he will make statement. [18757]

Mr. Moss: A range of services for children with learning disability are currently provided by the centre. An afternoon club offering after school respite will restart shortly. Full use will be made of the facility as soon as an analysis of the findings of a detailed and comprehensive assessment of the needs of families with children with learning disability has been completed.

Training Centres

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the training centres indicating (a) their capacity and (b) the total number of trainees currently at each. [18759]

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 11 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me, as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency, to reply to your question about the Agency's Training Centres.

The Agency has 10 Training Centres in Northern Ireland. The following chart details the trainee capacity and the number of trainees currently at each Centre.

Centre	Physical capacity	Current in-centre occupancy
Ballymena	330	194
Craigavon	308	129
Dundonald	408	208

I hope you find this information useful.

Acute Hospital Reorganisation Project

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to announce his decisions on tranches 2 and 3 of the acute hospital reorganisation project; and if he will make a statement. [18760]

Mr. Moss: The position with regard to tranche 2 is that following receipt of the recommendations from the project steering group additional work had to be undertaken in relation to the recommendation on maternity services. This is now complete and I hope to make an announcement on all aspects of tranche 2 in the near future.

Following consultations on tranche 3, the steering group put recommendations to me on 29 November 1996. I, in turn, consulted relevant bodies, inviting comments by mid-February. I will be considering these shortly and will announce my decisions soon afterwards.

Clifton Special Care School

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the summer schemes for mentally disabled children at Clifton special care school, Bangor; and what assessment he has made of the advantages of parents covering the cost of the schemes. [18756]

Mr. Ancram: There is no statutory requirement for education and library boards to provide summer schemes at special schools and my Department has no approval function to exercise. I understand that, in reaching its decision to discontinue the scheme at Clifton special school, the South Eastern education and library board took into account concerns about the safety and supervision of pupils. Any further proposals from parents should be put to the board for consideration.

Housing Executive Dwellings

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fires in Housing Executive properties in each of the last three years are estimated to have resulted from a failure to observe building regulations. [18970]

Mr. Moss: I am advised by the chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that the answer is none.

Noxious Smell (Newtownards)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what investigations he has conducted into the source of the noxious smell detectable at Manse road, Manse park and Manse green, Newtownards; and what action the Water Service of the Department of Environment (Northern Ireland) proposes to take. [18758]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Water Service under its chief executive, Mr. H. R. F. Plester. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from H. R. F. Plester to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 10 March 1997:

Mr. Moss has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the source of the noxious smell detectable at Manse Road, Manse Park and Manse Green, Newtownards, and what action the Water Service proposes to take.

On 25 February 1997 Water Service officials and officers from the Environmental Health Department, Ards Borough Council, investigated a complaint about a smell at 7 & 12 Manse Green, Newtownards. This investigation established that the smell was not then emanating from the sewers or drainage culverts which serve the Manse Green area. Further checks by Water Service staff on 5 March 1997 revealed no evidence of any smell from the public sewers.

The matter will continue to be investigated, as part of a process of elimination, by the Water Service in conjunction with the Ards Borough Council's Environmental Health Department. This liaison is on the basis that while Water Service considers its infrastructure is not the source of the smell problem this can best be proven definitively by further testing of the sewer system on the next occasion the problem is generally manifested in the area.

Non-NHS Health Care Providers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total expenditure on the purchase of health care from non-NHS providers in 1995–96 by (a) health boards, (b) fundholding GPs and (c) NHS trusts in Northern Ireland. [18795]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is set out in the tables.

Table 1 discloses expenditure by health and personal social services on the purchase of health care, personal social and related services from non-HPSS bodies and grants to voluntary organisations is also disclosed.

This information has been extracted from the "Summary of Health and Personal Social Services and Special Agencies Accounts for 1995–96".

Table 2 discloses expenditure by general practitioner fundholders on the purchase of health care and personal social services form non-HPSS providers.

This information has been supplied by the individual health and personal social services boards.

Table 1: Expenditure on non NHS providers in 1995–96

This information was supplied by the individual Health and Personal Social Services Boards.

Visual Handicap

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are registered (a) blind and (b) partially sighted. [19084]

Mr. Moss: Information is not collected centrally in the format requested. The numbers of blind and particularly sighted people in Northern Ireland who were in contact with health and social service providers during the year ended 31 March 1996 were 3,634 and 2,514 respectively.

Organic Farming

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of farms in Northern Ireland are currently classified as organic; and if he will make a statement. [19858]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 11 March 1997]: As at February 1997, there were 11 registered organic units in Northern Ireland. These constitute 0.04 per cent. of total active farms in Northern Ireland.

Schools (North Down)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils there are at each primary and secondary school in North Down; and what is the permanent physical capacity of their buildings for enrolments, indicating any under-use or over-use. [19925]

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the table. The Department's calculation of a school's physical capacity is based solely on teaching spaces in both permanent and temporary accommodation. The figures given are estimates of the capacity of the school's permanent accommodation for teaching purposes.

Secure Training Schools (Girls)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the need for a secure training school for girls; what facilities are currently available for girls requiring escape-proof custody; and if he will make a statement about his capital expenditure priorities in relation to such offenders. [19926]

Sir John Wheeler: There are currently no girls under the age of 17 held at Maghaberry young offenders centre. A review of training school accommodation, including secure accommodation for girls, is being undertaken in light of the proposal for a draft Criminal Justice (Children) (Northern Ireland) Order, which was issued for consultation in February this year.

Driving-related Offences

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many custodial sentences were imposed in the last three years for a first offence on 17-years-olds convicted of driving-related offences not involving excess alcohol or car stealing; and if he will make a statement on the use of custodial sentences for those convicted of dangerous driving without fatal consequences. [19927]

Sir John Wheeler: The number of persons aged 17 years given custodial sentences for driving offences not involving excess alcohol or theft of a car, and the number of cases in which it was the first offence of any sort, for the years 1994 to 1996 were:

	Custodial sentences	First offence
1995	19	6
Totals	72	15

The use of custodial sentences for persons convicted of dangerous driving without fatal consequences is an issue for the courts to decide after consideration of all aspects of individual cases.

Amnesty International

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from Amnesty International since 1 September 1994 in relation to the Northern Ireland troubles. [19928]

Sir John Wheeler: Amnesty International has written to my office on three occasions during the period. One letter was to inform the Government of a visit by Amnesty International to Northern Ireland to 13 to 18 October 1996, another enclosed the report entitled "UK Summary of Human Rights Concerns" and the third discussed the available information about Bloody Sunday.

Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Bill

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to seek to amend the Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Bill to extend its provisions to Northern Ireland from the time of its coming into force; and if he will make a statement on the merits of the Bill in relation to Northern Ireland. [19930]

Sir John Wheeler: The Bill has been drafted to meet the particular circumstances in England and Wales as identified by responses to the Home Office consultation document "Sentencing and Supervision of Sex Offenders" which was issued in June 1996. The Law Society in England and Wales has undertaken to amend its code of discipline so as to ensure that defence lawyers comply with the provisions in the Bill on supervised access.

The Home Office document was also circulated in Northern Ireland. On the particular issue of the misuse of victim's statements, the Northern Ireland responses did not produce any evidence of a major concern but did indicate a general consensus on the importance of developing solutions which reflected the needs of Northern Ireland.

The Government believe that the matters addressed by the Bill do merit application in Northern Ireland and intends to bring forward legislation after appropriate consultation with interested parties.

New Schools

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons his power to specify a time before which proposals to open new schools could not be reconsidered was not invoked in the current year before resubmissions commenced. [19931]

Mr. Ancram: A power which enables the Department of Education to specify the form, content and timetable for statutory proposals for the establishment of new grant-maintained integrated schools, was included in the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1996. In view of the existence of administrative guidance to the education and library boards and the Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education about the timetable for the submission and publication of such proposals, it was not considered necessary to invoke this power immediately.

However, in light of the recent submission of development proposals for the establishment of two new GMI schools, outside the recommended timetable, my Department has issued a direction on 6 March 1997 to all education and library boards under article 71 of the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 specifying the timetable to be applied to all future proposals.

Military Complaints Procedures

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to lay before Parliament the fourth annual report of the independent assessor of military complaints procedures in Northern Ireland. [20480]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have today arranged for the fourth annual report of the independent assessor of military complaints procedures in Northern Ireland to be laid before each House of Parliament. I note that the assessor has commented that the complaints procedures and their operation are being given proper attention by the Army and that he is not aware of any public misgivings in this area during 1996. The report provides welcome reassurance to the Government and to the public that the Army's complaints procedures withstand scrutiny. The number of formal non-criminal complaints registered in 1996 remains low despite the increase in Army patrolling made necessary as a result of the renewed terrorist campaign.

Street Names

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under that legislative powers councils have the power to rename streets. [19953]

Mr. Moss: Article 11 of the local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 provides the authority for district councils to determine the name by which a street is to be known.

Suicides and Fatal Accidents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of the population in Northern Ireland have (a) committed suicide and (b) suffered a fatal accident in each of the last seven years; and if he will make a statement. [20035]

Sir John Wheeler: The number of deaths registered as suicides and fatal accidents along with details of the percentage of the population in each of the last seven years are set out in the table.

Year	Suicides	Fatal accidents	Injuries undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted	Population	Suicides as percentage of total population	Fatal accidents as percentage total population	Undetermined as percentage of total population

SCOTLAND

Extra-corporeal Membrane Oxygenation

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those hospitals in Scotland which have facilities to provide extra-corporeal membrane oxygenation for children aged (a) up to six months and (b) six months and over; and how many paediatric intensive care beds there are in each of the units with extra-corporeal membrane oxygenation facilities. [19495]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Royal hospital for sick children in Glasgow has facilities to provide extra-corporeal membrane oxygenation—ECMO—for children aged up to six months and six months and over. The hospital has 12[1] paediatric intensive care beds and can provide ECMO treatment in both its paediatric intensive care and neo-natal surgical intensive care units.

The Royal hospital for sick children in Edinburgh has ECMO facilities which are used only occasionally as support for other treatments.

[1] At March 1996.

Consultants

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total cost of consultants' reports commissioned by his Department since 1 April 1995; and if he will summarise the identifiable savings achieved as a result of implementing the recommendations of reports. [19515]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The total cost of management consultancy work commissioned by the Scottish Office for the period 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996 was £5,440,000. Information for the current financial year is not yet available.

In 1995–96 some 150 consultancy contracts were led by the Scottish Office. Given the wide range of responsibilities and activities of the Scottish Office, the consultancy projects related to many different areas of business.

The Scottish Office follows the guidance given in the August 1994 report of the Cabinet Office efficiency scrutiny on the use of external consultants. External consultants are engaged only when internal resources are not available, best procurement practices are followed to ensure that value for money is obtained, and all consultancy assignments are subjected to post-contract reviews. Not all consultancy projects lend themselves to analysis in terms of savings, but I am satisfied that the intelligent and selective use of consultants has consistently delivered worthwhile solutions and benefits for the Scottish Office in recent years.

Dental Treatment (Complaints)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the adequacy of provision for considering late complaints about dental treatment in cases where professional opinion verifies that the patient could not reasonably have been expected to realise there were grounds for complaint within the time limits set. [19047]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1997]: No. On 1 April, after Mr. W. J. Duff had ceased to practice, a new system was introduced for the consideration of complaints against family health service practitioners, separately from discipline procedures. Normally complaints have to be made within six months of the event which is the subject of the complaint, or within six months of the patient becoming aware of the problem, provided that this is within 12 months of the event. There is, however, discretion to accept late complaints for investigation. Guidance issued to health boards makes it clear that this should be exercised with flexibility and sensitivity, and there is a procedure for decisions by complaints officers in health boards to be reviewed at the request of the complainer.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reasons Moann Russell was awarded (a) the maximum amount for remedial treatment and (b) no compensation within the non-statutory complaints procedure in respect of NHS treatment. [19632]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1997]: Mrs. Russell's complaint was made on 11 June 1994 and therefore fell to be dealt with under the National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) (Scotland) Regulations in force at the time, as did the determination of any sum payable to her for remedial treatment.

The non-statutory complaints procedure came into force on 1 April 1996 for complaints made on or after that date.

Mr. W. J. Duff

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the dates on which patients raised complaints in each of the cases referred to Greater Glasgow health board by the Scottish dental practice division, in which the national health service tribunal found Mr. W. J. Duff had provided unnecessary treatment. [19048]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1997]: These cases were referred to the tribunal following reports by regional dental officers; no complaints were made by the patients involved.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what general conclusions were reached by regional dental officers from their inspections of Mr. W. J. Duff's patients on 25 August 1986 and subsequently. [19049]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1997]: Regional dental officers undertake independent clinical examinations of individual dental patients and pass their findings of fact to the dental practice division of the Common Services Agency. Any adverse reports are then passed to the Scottish dental practice board which forwards a copy to the relevant health board. The health board then decides what further action to take. It is no part of the function of regional dental officers to draw general conclusions.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients of Mr. W. J. Duff have complained to date that they were not told in advance what treatment was to be carried out by him. [19051]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1997]: One.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will request sight of the reports provided by the director of practitioner services to Greater Glasgow health board on the circumstances surrounding the case of Mr. W. J. Duff; [19052]

(2) if he will publish the paper on Mr. W. J. Duff requested by Greater Glasgow health board at its meeting on 18 February; [19053]

(3) if he will publish the report of the Director of Practitioner Services to Greater Glasgow health board on the circumstances surrounding the case of Mr. W. J. Duff. [19411]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1997]: When the requested material has been prepared, it will be discussed by Greater Glasgow health board at a future meeting, during that part of its proceedings at which members of the public may be present. Once the paper or papers are in the public domain, I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a copy.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that money received from Mr. W. J. Duff by Greater Glasgow health board is applied directly for the benefit of his former patients. [19054]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1997]: Greater Glasgow health board has not as yet received any money from Mr. Duff. The sums due, or which may become due, from him fall into two categories. The first comprises sums for payment to former patients who are likely to incur additional expenditure in obtaining further treatment required as a result of Mr. Duff's failure to comply with his terms of service. The second comprises sums in the nature of fines for failure to comply with the terms of service. My right hon. Friend has no power to ensure that such sums are applied for the benefit of patients.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a financial contribution to the voluntary support group organised by former patients of Mr. W. J. Duff. [19133]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1997]: No. Funding for NHS general dental services may be used only for the purposes set down in statute which do not include assistance to voluntary support groups.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients were registered with Mr. W. J. Duff in each year since he began practising; and what was the highest number of patients registered with any dentist in Scotland in each of these years. [19263]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1997]: A new contract for the provision of NHS general dental services was introduced in October 1990, including, for the first time, the registration of patients under continuing care or capitation arrangements. The information requested is listed in the table for financial years 1991–92 to 1994–95:

Number of patients registered under NHS continuing care and capitation arrangements with Mr. W. J. Duff and the highest number of patients registered with an NHS principal dentist in Scotland 1991–92 to 1994–95

Dentist	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Mr. W. J. Duff [1]	847	1,603	1,930	1,451
Dentist with highest number of registrations [2]	1,126	2,338	3,726	5,788

[2] A dentist may hold more than one contract within a health board or within Scotland. A dentist may have more than one practice or may have patients registered with him/her who are treated by an assistant or vocational trainee.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors led to the inspections of Mr. W. J. Duff's patients by regional dental officers on 25 August 1986. [19564]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1997]: Each year, regional dental officers undertake clinical examinations on a small number of patients of every dentist in Scotland providing NHS general dental services. The patient sample is chosen at random.

Non-fossil Fuels

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has made a decision on the second order under the Scottish renewables obligation; and if he will make a statement. [20609]

Mr. Kynoch: I have today laid before Parliament an order requiring the two public electricity suppliers—PESs—in Scotland to make arrangements to secure 112 MW of new renewable electricity generating capacity from a range of renewable sources. There has been a good response by bidders to tender invitation for SRO2, and average bid prices have been much lower this time round. This represents a considerable success for our policy of creating an initial market within each of the most promising technologies through strong price competition between projects. This has allowed me to set a larger order than originally envisaged when announcing SRO2 in November 1995.

In order to meet their obligations arising from the order, I understand that Scottish Power and Scottish Hydro-Electric expect to sign contracts with 26 project developers. These are expected to be nine waste to energy projects making up 55 MW of capacity seven wind projects totalling 44 MW, nine hydro projects totalling 11 MW and one biomass project of 2 MW.

We are aware of concerns about the possible effects on the environmental and landscape of the development of renewable energy projects and expect developers to give particular care and attention to these sensitive issues. Successful developers will need to obtain planning permission for their projects if they have not already done so; award of a contract as a result of the order does not confer any special advantage in the planning process and approval must be sought in the usual way. I know too that there are concerns about the need to strike the right balance between the visual impact of wind farms and the need to safeguard the scenic value of large parts of the Scottish countryside. For this reason, we have decided that wind projects, while being allocated substantial capacity within the order, should not form a disproportionately large part of it.

As far as waste to energy projects are concerned, I was very pleased that the overall level of bid prices for this technology had fallen as much as it has done since SRO1. In view of the environmental benefits which such projects can deliver, I have decided to increase the size of the allocation for waste to energy projects beyond that originally envisaged, to cover landfill gas, tyre incinerations and municipal waste incineration projects.

We are aware of concerns in some quarters about the potential impact of new hydro schemes on fisheries. I understand that at least one of the hydro projects likely to be awarded a contract as a result of the order will include the installation of a new fish pass to assist salmon to gain easier access to spawning grounds. I have asked my officials to liaise closely with the project developer on the fisheries aspects. All hydro projects do of course require consultation with the local district salmon fisheries board before being granted permission to proceed.

On biomass, although the prices tendered for projects were comparatively high, we took account of the wider benefits to agriculture and the environment of such projects, and the need to enable the technology to establish a foothold in Scotland. For this reason we decided to allocate a small part of the order to this technology.

By making an order for a total of 112 MW, we are taking a considerable step towards meeting Scotland's share of the Government's overall aim of achieving 1,500 MW of new renewable generating capacity by the year 2000. I will make a further announcement in due course about the next steps that we propose to take under the SRO.

I have made the order after considering the advice of the Director General of Electricity Supply and after consulting the two Scottish PESs.

Galleries (Access)

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on improving access to the collections of the national galleries of Scotland. [20610]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am anxious that the people of Scotland should have the fullest possible opportunity to see and appreciate the country's heritage of art and design in appropriate surroundings. At present only one fifth of the Scottish paintings held by the national galleries of Scotland—NGS—are on permanent public view. It is right that action should to taken to improve the position.

To this end I am inviting the NGS trustees to consider the establishment of a new national loans scheme whereby coherent groups of good quality works of art from the national galleries are made available for exhibition at suitable local museums and galleries and other appropriate locations throughout Scotland. This initiative would also encourage local museums and galleries to take advantage of the opportunities offered by the heritage lottery fund to upgrade their facilities to a standard appropriate to housing works of national importance.

As a further step the board of trustees of the NGS has put to me revised outline proposals to establish a new national gallery of Scottish art and design in Glasgow. These proposals reflect the advice of the national heritage memorial fund that it could not support a project of the scale described in the NGS's original application for lottery funding towards the capital costs of acquiring and fitting out the former Post Office building in George square. The new proposals which take account of that advice are smaller in scale and more focused on the objective of making available to the public good-quality works of Scottish art which are not currently on permanent display.

The trustees are aware that the capital costs of the revised project would need to be met from non-government sources and I would require half the running costs for at least the first four years to be met from private sources. The provision of the balance from public funds would be a matter for consideration in future public expenditure rounds. The project would also have to meet normal requirements of public sector investment appraisal.

On the basis of these assurances about the funding of the capital and running costs of a Glasgow gallery, I am prepared for further detailed work to go ahead on this proposal, in parallel with the development of the new national loans scheme initiative, with the objective of maximising access to the national collections.

Suicides and Fatal Accidents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what percentage of the population in Scotland have (a) committed suicide and (b) suffered a fatal accident in each of the last seven years; and if he will make a statement. [20034]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table:

Deaths in Scotland, 1989–1995—suicides, accidents, etc.

TREASURY

School Finance

14. Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on the public sector borrowing requirement of allowing schools to borrow money from the banks to pay for capital spending. [18535]

Mr. Waldegrave: Voluntary-aided and grant-maintained school borrowing has no effect on the PSBR as both are classified to the private sector. Any borrowing that local authority schools undertake would count against the local authority control totals and would count in the PSBR.

Economic and Monetary Union

15. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the degree of resistance to the proposed introduction of a single currency in each of the member states of the European Union. [18536]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: That is a matter for each member state.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what proposals have been assessed by (i) European institutions and (ii) member Governments for a common basis of calculating inflation in each EU member state; and what assessment he has made of the implications of such proposals for (a) United Kingdom Government expenditure and (b) United Kingdom pensioners' incomes; [17358]

(2) what reports on the determination of price indices in each EU member state have been evaluated by which European institutions in connection with the management of the proposed single currency; and if he will publish those reports. [17357]

Mr. Oppenheim: Protocol 6 to the Maastricht treaty states that the criterion on price stability will be assessed using consumer price indices on a comparable basis. Eurostat has now developed a harmonised index of consumer prices—HICP—for member states, and the first full set of figures was published on 7 March.

Eurostat commissioned a report on the similarities and differences between national consumer price indices. The report, published by Eurostat in 1989, covered the methodology used by each country and set out the need for harmonised indices.

The proposed legislation for the HICPs, in the form of draft regulations, was first discussed at a working level by technical representatives from each member state's national statistical institute at meetings chaired by Eurostat. The European Monetary Institute and the Commission were also present at these discussions as non-voting members and their opinion was sought before any legislation was agreed. The legislation in its final form was voted on by the Statistical Programme Committee using standard EU voting procedures.

The Government have an obligation to uprate pensions and benefits by the RPI.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy to be hostile to the principle of a single European currency; and if he will make a statement. [17500]

Mr. Clarke: The Government believe that it is in Britain's national interest to keep our options open, continue to negotiate and decide at the appropriate time whether or not it would be in Britain's interests to participate in a single currency.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implications of the increase in the value of the dollar in the last year for the stability of the proposed single European currency. [18867]

Mr. Clarke: The increase in the value of the dollar in the last year reflected the judgment of the market of the value of that currency vis-a-vis other currencies; last year's increase has no implications in itself for the future stability of the proposed single European currency.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to update the convergence programme produced by the United Kingdom in April 1996. [20479]

Mr. Clarke: An updated convergence programme was submitted today to the European Commission. Copies of the convergence programme have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Consumer Spending

16. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on recent trends in consumer spending. [18537]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Consumer spending is growing at a healthy rate on the back of levels of consumer confidence not seen for over eight years.

Government Statistics

17. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revisions he proposes of Government statistics as published in the Red Book. [18538]

Mr. Jack: A more detailed analysis of public expenditure will be published on 20 March in departmental reports and in the Treasury document "Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses". I expect the next Industry Act forecast to be published in the summer.

Public Debt

18. Mr. Waller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the United Kingdom's public debt. [18539]

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's fiscal objective is to bring the public sector borrowing requirement back towards balance over the medium term, and in particular to ensure that when the economy is on trend the public sector borrows no more than is required to finance its net capital spending. The ratio of government debt to gross domestic product is projected to fall over the medium term as the PSBR comes down. The UK's debt burden is already among the very lowest in the European Union. It is also lower than in any year under the last Labour Government. If the UK had continued to borrow at the rate seen under the last Labour Government, the debt burden would be double what it is now.

Income Tax

19. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in respect of his policy on the rates of income tax. [18540]

22. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on his policy in respect of income tax. [18543]

Mr. Jack: I receive a steady flow of representations regarding all aspects of the tax system.

24. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the basic rate of income tax. [18545]

Mr. Jack: It is our policy to reduce the basic rate of income tax to 20 per cent. when it is economically prudent to do so. The last Budget took another major step towards this goal by reducing the basic rate to 24 per cent.—10 per cent. lower than it was in 1978–79.

26. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the changes in the standard rate of income tax since 1967. [18547]

Mr. Jack: This information is published in table 1.5 of the "Tax Benefit Reference Manual 1996–97", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Productivity

20. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to increase productivity in the United Kingdom. [18541]

Mrs. Angela Knight: There has been a significant improvement in the UK's productivity performance over the last 15 years, compared both with other countries and with the UK's performance in the 1970s. The UK's productivity performance is benefiting from a more stable economic environment, with continued health growth and low inflation, and from the Government's supply side reforms which have contributed to increased labour market flexibility, strengthened competition and market forces, and improved industrial relations. The improvement should continue over the rest of the 1990s as the impact of supply side reform continues to be felt.

Windfall Gains

21. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the economic impact of windfall gains arising from (a) the demutualising of building societies and (b) takeovers of life assurance companies. [18542]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Experience and recent surveys suggest that most of the payouts will be saved rather than spent. Therefore, I expect them to have a relatively small impact on consumers' expenditure this year.

Mr. Dover: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the legality of a windfall tax on privatised companies; and if he will make a statement. [19424]

Mr. Jack: No such representations have been received.

Exchange Rates

23. Sir David Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received (a) for and (b) against fluctuating exchange rates during the past three months. [18544]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have received many representations during the past three months both for and against the recent appreciation of sterling.

Economic Growth

25. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met his EU counterparts to discuss economic growth. [18546]

Mrs. Angela Knight: My right hon. and learned Friend last met his European Union counterparts at the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers on 17 February 1997, where among other issues they discussed the general economic situation in the European Union. My right hon. and learned Friend outlined the continuing success of the UK economy with five years of growth combined with low inflation and falling unemployment.

Education and Unemployment Benefit Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated outturn general government expenditure on (a) education and (b) unemployment benefits for 1995–96. [17438]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The estimated outturn for general government expenditure in 1995–96 on (a) education is £35.9 billion and (b) unemployment benefit is £1.1 billion.

These are the most recently published figures for these parts of general government expenditure and have been taken from "Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses 1996–97", published in March 1996. Revised figures will be available in PESA 1997–98, which is due to be published shortly.

European Community (Publicity)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the EC spent on public relations and publicity in 1995–96. [18102]

Mr. Oppenheim: Payments from the European Community Budget in 1995 on information and communications amounted to 47,701,477 ecu or £35,373,732[1]. Figures on a UK financial year basis are not available.

[1] Converted at the rate £1 = 1.3485 ecu, the rate holding at 31 January 1997.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a definition of the term "retail premises" as used in VAT legislation and the Finance Bill; and if he will make a statement. [18652]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 4 March 1997]: The question concerns a proposed amendment to clause 37 of the Finance Bill which will not now be tabled. I refer the hon. Member instead to the amendment laid on 4 March, and to my press statement that day.

Departmental Web Site

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when his Department established its Internet site; what representations he has received and what data he has collated on the use and utility of the site; and what steps he is taking to increase the amount of information available via the site. [19143]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury established its Internet site on 14 November 1994, and was one of the first Government Departments to do so. The site offers a wide range of material which continues to grow. It includes Budget documentation, Treasury press releases, ministerial speeches and the minutes of the Chancellor's monthly monetary meeting. Use of the site has climbed dramatically since its launch, with about 33,000 accesses in the 1994 Budget week, about 250,000 in the 1995 Budget week and about 400,000 in the 1996 Budget week. Accesses for a typical week currently run at about 15,000. The site was nominated by the public and chosen by a panel of industry experts as a finalist in the 1996 UK web awards—Yell—for best non-commercial site. We are committed to expanding and improving the site further.

London Underground (Finance)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 552, concerning the scoring of future investment in London Underground Ltd. in respect of the obligations imposed by the treaty on European union, if he will set out the differences between the criteria determining whether public investment contributes to (a) the general government deficit and (b) the public sector borrowing requirement. [19204]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The capital expenditure of bodies in general government—central and local government—scores in the calculation of the general government financial deficit. The capital expenditure of public corporations does not affect the GGFD, as public corporations are not part of general government. However, if public corporations' capital expenditure is financed by general government capital grants or subsidies, this expenditure will score as general government expenditure and thus increase the GGFD. All borrowing by general government and public corporations scores in the PSBR.

Long-term Care

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice has been given to his Department by the Government Actuary about (a) the likely uptake and (b) the cost to the Exchequer of introducing private partnership insurance for long-term care; and if he will place in the Library the figures and papers received from the Government Actuary. [19309]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 10 March 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Secretary of State for Health on 10 March 1997, Official Report, column 113. The Treasury received no figures or papers from the Government Actuary.

Labour Statistics

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) men and (b) women aged (A) 50 to 54, (B) 55 to 59, (C) 60 to 64 and (D) 65 to 69 years were (i) in full-time work, (ii) in part-time work, (iii) unemployed, (iv) long-term sick and disabled and (v) retired in each of the last 10 years. [19244]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Harriet Harman, dated 13 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on how many men and women, by varying age groups, are in full-time work, part-time work, unemployed, long-term sick and disabled and retired in each of the last 10 years.

This information is available from the Labour Force Survey database which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) men, (b) women and (c) men and women are employed in (i) Great Britain, (ii) each standard region of England, (iii) Wales (iv) Scotland for each major group of the standard occupational classification. [19585]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 13 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the number of men and women in employment broken down by region and occupation in Great Britain.

The information is available from the Labour Force Survey database and can be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Private Health Insurance

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for York (Mr. Bayley) of 21 October 1994, Official Report, columns 373-74, on the cost and take-up of private health insurance. [19485]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The information is given in the table.

Tax relief on private medical insurance contracts for individuals aged 60 or over

Year	Approximate number of contracts	Approximate number of individuals covered	Cost of tax relief (£ million)
1990–91	350,000	500,000	40
1991–92	350,000	500,000	60
1992–93	350,000	500,000	70
1993–94	375,000	550,000	80
1994–95	375,000	550,000	95
1995–96	400,000	600,000	100
1996–97[1]	400,000	600,000	110

Advance Corporation Tax

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much additional tax would be raised if pension funds were not able to recover advance corporation tax. [19843]

Mr. Jack: Pension funds are unable to recover ACT. However, if they were not entitled to receive payments of tax credits on dividend payments there would be an Exchequer gain, before allowing for any behavioural effects, of nearly £4 billion.

Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if doctors completing death certificates are required to include in the certificate the fact that the deceased was a victim of MRSA, when this contributed to the cause of death. [19854]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 11 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Andrew Mackinlay, dated 13 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply to your recent question asking if doctors completing death certificates are required to include in the certificate the fact that the deceased was a victim of MRSA, when this contributed to the cause of death.

Section 22 of the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953 places duties on medical practitioners as follows:

> "in the case of the death of any person who has been attended during his last illness by a registered medical practitioner, that practitioner shall sign a certificate in the prescribed form stating to the best of his knowledge and belief the cause of death and shall forthwith deliver that certificate to the registrar."

This requirement is included in the Instructions to certifiers, which are at the front of every book of medical certificates of cause of death (MCCD). The instructions further ask the certifier to give the sequence of conditions or events which led directly to the death in part I of the certificate, and to list any other conditions which contributed to the death, in part II. Beyond this, it is up to the judgement of the attending physician to decide what should be included. No particular disease or event is specifically named as being required to be included on the death certificate, although there are instructions about which causes and circumstances of death require referral to the coroner. Death certification is covered in undergraduate and postgraduate training for doctors. The Office for National Statistics (ONS) has recently produced a video (Death Counts) and documentation to help in this training.

If the certificate is completed correctly, the condition of the last used line of part I is the underlying cause of death, i.e. that condition or event which initiated the train of events leading directly to death. The underlying cause of death is selected and coded according to the rules of the Ninth Revision of the International Classification of Diseases (ICD-9), and this is the condition used in routine tabulations and statistics. When the ONS is asked for information on deaths owing to a particular condition, the answer is normally based on the underlying cause, because this is the cause most useful for public health and preventative purposes.

Since 1933, all the conditions mentioned on the approximately 580,000 deaths per year registered in England and Wales have been coded and stored in the mortality databases of ONS, where this additional information can be used for special analyses. Deaths due to methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) infection are coded to a variety of ICD-9 codes for staph. aureus infection, depending on the body site affected. There is no specific code to denote methicillin resistance of the infecting organism, so this can only be identified by searching the text from the certificate.

Century Date Change (Computers)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the impact of the century date change on his Department's information technology systems. [18698]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury has work in progress to identify and test its computer systems to ensure that they will operate correctly at the turn of the century. It has not proved necessary to commission any additional external research.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of gross domestic product (a) was in 1978–79 and (b) he estimates will be in 1997–98 accounted for by income tax. [19891]

Mr. Jack: The ratio of income tax receipts to GDP was 11 per cent. in 1978–79. The Budget forecast of the corresponding ratio in 1997–98 is 9 per cent. Over this period, the basic rate of income tax will have fallen from 33 per cent. to 23 per cent.—the lowest headline rate for nearly 60 years.

Investment

Ms Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new measures he is proposing to promote investment levels in the economy. [18523]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Creating a stable economic environment with steady growth, low inflation, and low taxation is overwhelmingly the best way to encourage businesses to expand and invest with confidence.

Privatisation

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the privatisation programme. [18528]

Mr. Jack: The UK privatisation programme has been a great success. We will continue to look for opportunities to return businesses to the private sector and to promote UK privatisation expertise internationally.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures for the number of applications for invalidity benefit which have (a) been initially refused, (b) gone to appeal and (c) been granted at appeal; and if he will make a statement. [17812]

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table:

	Number of incapacity benefit recipients disallowed benefit	Number of appeals by incapacity benefit recipients received by Independent Tribunal Service	Number of appeals by incapacity benefit recipients cleared at hearing	Number of decisions in favour of appellant
April 1995 to January 1997	185,400	102,600	43,400	19,700

Notes:

1. Incapacity benefit replaced sickness benefit and invalidity benefit from April 1995.

2. Currently around 55 per cent. of incapacity benefit recipients who are disallowed benefit appeal. The benefit is restored in approximately 45 per cent. of cases heard by appeal tribunals.
3. The proportion of successful appeals against refusal of incapacity benefit is lower than the previous appeal success rate under invalidity benefit and similar to the success rate of appeals throughout the social security appeal system.
4. Includes appeals against disallowance of incapacity benefit.
5. Figures are rounded to the nearest 100, provisional and are subject to revision.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently claiming (a) incapacity benefit and (b) severe disablement allowance; and how many of these have an increase in benefit in respect of an adult dependant. [18977]

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

	Recipients at 31 August 1996	Recipients of an adult dependency increase at 31 August 1996
Incapacity benefit	1,780,000	332,000
Severe disablement allowance	355,000	4,000

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Figures are taken from a 5 per cent. sample of the computer system and exclude a small number of cases not held on the system.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time the Benefits Agency currently takes to assess an application for incapacity benefit; and what benefit an applicant is entitled to while awaiting the outcome. [19634]

Mr. Burt: The administration of social security benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 12 March 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what is the average length of time the Benefits Agency (BA) currently takes to assess an application for Incapacity Benefit (IB), and whilst an applicant is awaiting the outcome, what benefit he is entitled to.

The Secretary of State has set the BA the following targets for clearing new claims to IB:–

65% to be cleared within 10 days

85% to be cleared within 30 days

The actual performance year to date, from 1 April 1996 to 31 January 1997, is:–

79.3% of new claims to IB are cleared within 10 days

95.7% of new claims to IB are cleared within 30 days

The BA administers more than 20 benefits, all of which can be claimed at any time. Award of benefit is dependent on satisfaction of the conditions of entitlement for the particular benefit at the time of the claim. Without specific details of a persons circumstances it is not possible to determine entitlement to individual benefits.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Care Disregard

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people receiving non-means-tested benefits have offset part-time earnings against a child care disregard since November 1996; and what is his estimate of (a) the numbers gaining and (b) the annual cost. [18946]

Mr. Burt: There is insufficient information on which to base an estimate.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his estimate of (a) the numbers gaining from and (b) the cost of extending invalid care allowance for (i) four weeks, (ii) eight weeks and (iii) 13 weeks after the cared-for person has died; [18948]

(2) what is his estimate of (a) the numbers who would benefit from and (b) the cost of extending invalid care allowance for (i) four weeks, (ii) eight weeks and (iii) 13 weeks after the cared-for person has entered permanent residential care. [18981]

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table:

Extending invalid care allowance after death of disabled person

	4 weeks	8 weeks	13 weeks
Estimated costs	£3 million	£5 million	£10 million
Estimated gainers	30,000	30,000	30,000

Notes:
1. Invalid care allowance may be payable for up to four weeks after a disabled person has entered residential care.
2. The costs and numbers of gainers from extending invalid care allowance for a period thereafter are estimated to be negligible.
3. Costs are net of impact on income related benefits in payment but assumes no change in the income-related benefit rule whereby carer premium can continue for a further eight weeks after invalid care allowance ceases.
4. Estimates of gainers are rounded to the nearest thousand, of costs of the nearest £1 million.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people receiving invalid care allowance have offset part-time earnings against care costs since November 1996; and what is his estimate of (a) the numbers gaining and (b) the annual cost. [18947]

Mr. Burt: There is insufficient information on which to base an estimate.

Jobseeker's Allowance.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claimants of each of the (a) contributory and (b) income-related jobseeker's allowance are currently (i) single people without children, (ii) couples without children and (iii) couples with children; and what is the average duration of benefit in each case; [18975]

(2) how many people are currently in receipt of (a) jobseeker's allowance and (b) income support. [18976]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table:

Information on jobseeker's allowance is yet not available. Provisional summary findings from the November 1996 "Quarterly Statistical Enquiry" will be published on 20 March and more detailed analyses will be published in the summer. The findings will be placed in the Library.

Income support claimants—May 1996

Thousands

	Number of claimants
Unemployed cases	1,495
Other cases	4,054
All cases	5,549

Notes:
1. Provisional jobseeker's allowance findings will include estimates of claimants by type of allowance in payment, age, sex and duration of current claim. The detailed analyses will include information on partners and dependants.
2. Numbers are rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. Sample size 5 per cent.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the numbers of people who receive disability living allowance who also have earnings from employment. [18983]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The estimated number of people receiving disability living allowance who also have earnings from employment is around 80,000, and for those in self-employment around 5,000.

Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he has received from the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council on his proposal to abolish good causes backdating of industrial injuries disablement benefit. [18979]

Mr. Roger Evans: A copy of the letter sent by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council to the Social Security Advisory Committee concerning the backdating proposals has been placed in the Library. We intend to publish our response to the Social Security Advisory Committee's report on the proposals shortly.

Parent Plus Scheme

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what fee will be paid to private sector contractors for placing lone parents in work under the parent plus scheme; [19059]

(2) what restrictions will apply to the type of work in which lone parents will be placed by private contractors before receiving their fee under the parent plus scheme; [19106]

(3) what fee private sector contractors will be paid for placing lone mothers in part-time work under the parent plus scheme; [19060]

(4) what period of time a lone parent will have to remain in work before a fee is paid to the contractor for placing them in work under the parent plus scheme. [19061]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The contracting process is still underway. Details of contracts will not be finally agreed until this process is completed. It is expected that contracts will be awarded at the end of March.

Information Technology Services Agency

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the revised framework document for the Information Technology Services Agency. [20612]

Mr. Heald: I have today arranged for the revised framework document for the Information Technology Services Agency to be placed in the Library. This document covers the period from January 1997 to December 1999.

Benefits Backdating

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to align the rules on the backdating of benefits as provided for by the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987, and to clarify the responsibilities of claimants in providing evidence to support their claims. [20613]

Mr. Roger Evans: I will tomorrow lay before Parliament the Social Security (Miscellaneous Amendments) (No. 2) Regulations 1997. The regulations will align, as far as possible, the rules on the backdating of benefit and will clarify claimants' responsibilities by requiring them to provide basic information to support their claim.

The new rules on backdating will introduce two simple rules for most benefits, allowing up to three months' backdating of late claims, and up to one month's backdating of reviews following a change in a claimant's circumstances. The new rules will apply to most benefits from 7 April 1997, but will not apply to retirement pension until 4 August 1997. Aligning the backdating rules will reduce the complexity of the social security scheme and so increase administrative efficiency. Subject to changes in how promptly people claim or ask for reviews, we estimate that the new rules will affect around 450,000 claimants and that net benefit savings of £119 million in 1997–98, £126 million in 1998–99 and £130 million in 1999–2000 will arise. There will be an initial administrative cost of £1.8 million in 1997–98, £1.1 million in 1998–99 and £0.4 million in 1999–2000 in introducing the changes.

The regulations will also require claims to income support and jobseeker's allowance from 6 October 1997 to be made on a properly completed claim form, with supporting documents as required on the form. The date of claim for benefit will be the date the claimant first contacts the Benefits Agency or the Employment Service, as appropriate, for the purpose of claiming, provided a properly completed claim is received within one month of that first date, or at or before an interview where this is required for jobseeker's allowance.

We have consulted the Social Security Advisory Committee on these proposals and copies of the statement together with its report will be placed in the Library.

State Pensions

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of average earnings he estimates £175 constitutes at present; and what the figure will be in 2040, using the Government Actuary's assumptions about earning growth, in current prices. [19648]

Mr. Heald: The figure of £175 a week represents 50 per cent. of average earnings for April 1996 and is projected to represent 26 per cent. of average earnings in 2040, assuming 1.5 per cent. real earnings growth up to that year.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if people currently under 20 years old will have their basic state pension paid out of the national insurance fund when they retire under his basic pension plan. [19626]

Mr. Heald: Whether anyone currently under 20 will be outside the new scheme will depend on the precise age limit for joining the scheme, to be determined nearer the time.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in relation to paragraph 36 of the technical document on Her Majesty's Government's basic pension plus proposal, the gross cost of revenue forgone for every 10 years from 2000 to 2090. [19627]

Mr. Heald: The gross costs of new rebates under basic pension plus will rise on average by £330 million in each year following implementation, reaching some £15 billion a year by 2040 or later. Reversal of timing of tax reliefs for the generation covered by basic state pension plus will more than halve the impact on public finances. Thereafter, there would be a rapid decline in public expenditure on pensions as they are met from investments funded by rebates.

DEFENCE

Armed Services (Deaths)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, columns 591–92, (1) if he will estimate how many members of each armed service have (a) been killed in accidents and (b) committed suicide during training periods in each of the last seven years; [19614]

(2) if he will estimate how many members of each armed service have (a) been killed on active service, (b) been killed in accidents, (c) committed suicide and (d) died of natural causes within the first six months of joining, in each of the last seven years. [19613]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Analytical Services Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Paul Altobell to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 13 March 1997:

I am replying to your two questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about the numbers of personnel in the Services who have (i) been killed in accidents during training periods, or committed suicide during training periods and (ii) died within the first six months of joining, since 1990. As Chief Executive of Defence Analytical Services Agency this matter falls within my area of responsibility.

The information you request is detailed in the attached tables. In the first, I have shown those who died while on training, defined as basic training, assault course/parachute jumps and similar training, and exercises. In the second I have listed those who died within their first six months of joining, classified according to our standard classification system. Figures in both tables are for the same period, 1 January 1990 to 3 March 1997, as was covered in my letter to you of 3 March 1997.

I am afraid our database does not contain the numbers of suicides which occurred during training. These could only be collected at disproportionate cost. As you are aware the overall numbers of suicides were contained in the table sent with my letter of 3 March 1997.

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting, publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19389]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department keeps no central record of this information. Where such documents are published by agencies, this is a matter for the chief executives and I have asked them to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 13 March 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about customer charters and Customer Standard documents and the cost and number of each document issued as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Metrological Office.

In the current financial year we will spend some £200 on printing our own Charter Standard for the Public, which is the only one of our publications falling within the ambit of your question. About 3,500 copies will have been distributed in various ways.

The administrative/drafting costs of updating our Charter cannot be identified in isolation but are unlikely to exceed £1,000.

I hope this information answers your question.

Letter from M. A. Rowe to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 13 March 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence regarding production of a customer charter. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Pay and Personnel Agency (PPA).

The PPA customer charter has not yet been printed, but our predecessor organisation—the Pay Services Directorate of the Defence Accounts Agency—issued 20,000 copies of its charter at an overall cost of £5,143. We estimate the equivalent cost of the PPA customer charter will be £3,500. It will be issued to every member of the MOD paid by the PPA—some 120,000 staff—but it will be a simpler version of its predecessor, hence the lower costs.

RAF Establishments (Yorkshire and Humberside)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Royal Air Force (a) bases and (b) other establishments in Yorkshire and Humberside in April 1992 indicating for each the number of (i) service and (ii) civilian personnel employed (1) at that date and (2) currently; and if he will list the date of closure of each of these establishments which closed after April 1992. [18266]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not held centrally and, as a result, some of the statistics in the following table provided are incomplete or not available for the dates requested.

[5] As a result of the defence costs study into service recruiting, the careers information office structure has been rationalised and the RAF CIOs in Bradford, Grimsby, Huddersfield and York were closed on 1 December 1995, 3 March 1995, 31 March 1995 and 8 May 1996 respectively.
[6] The MOD site at Harrogate was closed on 1 April 1996 following rationalisation of the RAF support management task at HQ logistics command.

Training Teams (Namibia)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to public funds of providing the military training team to Namibia in 1991. [19684]

Mr. Soames: Details of the military assistance provided to individual countries, including the amount spent, is confidential between Governments under exemption 1 in the code of practice on access to Government information. However, as announced in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davies) to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 28 January 1997, Official Report, columns 140–41, we are now reviewing this practice against the background of the Government's commitment to openness. The House will be informed of the results of the review in due course.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of those employed by his Department in the last five years were (a) men and (b) women. [19658]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Analytical Services Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Paul Altobell to Mr. Jim Callaghan, dated 13 March 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence regarding the proportion of males and females employed by his Department in the last five years, as this falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of Defence Analytical Services Agency.

The figures are as follows:

Percentage of personnel employed by MOD by gender at 1 April

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Civilian personnel
Males	69.9	69.7	69.6	69.8	69.4
Females	30.1	30.3	30.4	30.2	30.6
Service personnel
Males	93.3	93.1	93.0	92.9	92.9
Females	6.7	6.9	7.0	7.1	7.1
All personnel
Males	85.7	85.5	85.3	85.1	85.1
Females	14.3	14.5	14.7	14.9	14.9

All figures include full time and part time personnel. Figures for 1992 and 1993 include GCHQ personnel.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors underlie the decision not to include a question relating to morale in the staff care survey carried out by the chief constable of the Ministry of Defence Police; [19725]

(2) what plans he has to carry out studies into morale within the Ministry of Defence Police. [19726]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chief constable/chief executive of the Ministry of Defence Police agency. I have asked the chief constable/chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Smallwood to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 13 March 1997:

I am replying to your Questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about morale in the Ministry of Defence Police, on behalf of the Chief Constable/Chief Executive of the Ministry of Defence Police Agency, as this falls into his area of responsibility. The Chief Constable/Chief Executive is away from the office at present.

Although the Ministry of Defence Police Staff Care Survey 1997 does not specifically use the term morale, the responses to the Job Satisfaction questions (Section I) will provide an indication of morale in the Force. I attach a copy of the survey questionnaire for your information, from which you will see that management and staff representatives worked closely together to formulate the questionnaire. The Chief Constable/Chief Executive has no immediate plans to carry out specific studies into morale in the Ministry of Defence Police.

In addition, two recent surveys of customer and public satisfaction have recorded satisfaction ratings of 86% and 91% respectively. These ratings are not considered indicative of low morale.

A copy of the Ministry of Defence Police Staff Care Survey 1997 is being placed in the Library of the House.

Military Survey Defence Agency

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the estimated savings to public funds accruing from the Military Survey Defence Agency element of the defence intelligence staff "Competing for Quality" proposal for information systems—information technology and open source information services; and what impact these measures will have on the efficiency of the Military Survey Defence Agency. [19366]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Military Survey Defence Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Philip Wildman to Mr. Alan Keen, dated 13 March 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Military Survey Defence Agency element of the Defence Intelligence Staff (DIS) Competing For Quality (CFQ) proposal for IS/IT and Open Source Information (OSINF) services, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive.

During last year the DIS conducted a CFQ Feasibility Study with involvement from the business areas affected by the CFQ initiative to examine the extent to which IS/IT, OSINF services together with Media Services and Printing could be exposed to competition with the private sector. It concluded that MOD should seek to test through competition whether improved Value For Money (VFM) can be obtained by contractorising a defined package of these services. The Feasibility Study recommendations have been accepted by Ministers and the project is to be taken forward, and will be subject to the normal consultation process. The invitation to companies to provide proposals is scheduled to be issued by mid summer. Consequently at this stage, it would be premature to assess the level of savings and efficiencies that may result. However, if a competitive procurement cannot show better Value For Money (VFM), then the DIS and Military Survey will not proceed with the initiative.

Beef

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Mr. Jamieson) of 20 February 1997, Official Report, column 718, if the armed forces are supplied with German beef; and if he will make a statement. [20040]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Naval Bases and Supply Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Trewby to Mr. Rod Richards, dated 13 March 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the supply of German beef to the Armed Forces as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Naval Bases and Supply Agency.

NAAFI are currently contracted to supply food for the Armed Forces. They have advised that the only area where German beef has been supplied is to our Forces in Germany, and that the products and quantities involved are small. Most beef products, including those supplied for our Forces in Germany, are sourced from South America on value for money grounds. Due to the ban on British beef exports a small number of low offtake beef products, which otherwise might have been sourced in the UK have been obtained from continental European sources, mainly Holland but with a small proportion from Germany.

Military Museums

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Minister of State for the Armed Forces expects to reply to the letter dated 20 January from the hon. Member for Salisbury on the subject of military museums. [19063]

Mr. Soames: The Under-Secretary of State for Defence, my noble Friend the Earl Howe, wrote to the hon. Member on Tuesday 11 March 1997.

Military Provost Guard Service

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which organisation will undertake the training of the Military Provost Guard Service with respect to civilian powers of arrest; how such training will be funded; and what estimate he has made of the cost of the training. [19727]

Mr. Soames: The Royal Military Police training school, part of the adjutant general's corps training group, provides instruction to Military Provost Guard Service soldiers on a citizen's powers of arrest as part of the MPGS training course. The training is funded from the adjutant general's budget. The cost of training MPGS soldiers on a citizen's powers of arrest is estimated at some £1,000 for the pilot scheme.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the applications described as firm applications for military local service engagement (a) did not specify a preference for service in their local area and (b) specified a preference for a move from Northern Ireland to the United Kingdom mainland. [19729]

Mr. Soames: Thirty-seven applications have indicated "any site" as a preference, and 38 indicated a willingness to move to a site that was not nearest to their application address to obtain a vacancy. There have been no military provost guard service recruits from Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average cost to his Department of travel-to-work expenses incurred by a military local service engagement guard living (a) 21 miles and (b) 10 miles form his or her duty station in the last year for which figures are available. [19724]

Mr. Soames: As the Military Provost Guard Service will not form until April 1997, no historical figures are available.

Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition will be held, including any off-site events; and on which days it will be open to (a) overseas customers, (b) the press and (c) the public. [19531]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 12 March 1997]: The 1997 Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition will beheld at Farnborough on 1 to 5 September and at Portsmouth naval base on 2 to 4 September. The exhibition will be open to overseas visitors every day. A press day is planned for 31 August. The exhibition is not open to the public.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost to public funds of the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition. [19532]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 12 March 1997]: The aim is that there should be no cost to public funds.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many visitors are expected at the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition; and from which countries buyers will be invited. [19533]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 12 March 1997]: An estimated 30,000 people will visit the exhibition. Invitations are issued to representatives from countries with an interest in the legitimate purchase of defence equipment.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who will be opening the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition. [19534]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 12 March 1997]: It has not yet been decided who will open the exhibition.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which non-United Kingdom companies will be exhibiting at the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition. [19535]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 12 March 1997]: All exhibiting companies must be United Kingdom registered.

Royal Yacht

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the estimated cost of replacing the gold leaf on the royal yacht Britannia damaged in the recent accident; and if it will be replaced before the yacht's arrival in Hong Kong; [20079]

(2) what is the total estimated cost of the damage to the royal yacht Britannia as a result of the accident at Karachi; and who will pay for the repair work. [20078]

Mr. Soames: On 28 February, while in the Gulf, en route from Doha to Karachi, HMY Britannia was involved in a minor collision with RFA Bayleaf while replenishing at sea. The repair costs for Britannia, which will be met from defence votes, are not yet known, but all necessary repairs, including any to her gold leaf, will be completed before she arrives in Hong Kong.

Horizon Cruiser

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Horizon anti-air warfare cruiser. [20133]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The United Kingdom remains committed to the collaborative common new generation frigate programme, comprising Project Horizon and the principal anti-air missile system, PAAMS.

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation the chief of defence procurement has had with this French and Italian counterparts on the future of Horizon. [20134]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The chief of defence procurement consults regularly with his French and Italian counterparts on the common new generation frigate programme.

School Cadet Forces

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if schools which establish a cadet force within the terms of the Government's recent proposals to expand cadet forces will also be eligible to seek funding from his Department for (a) armouries and (b) firing ranges on school sites. [20030]

Mr. Soames: No undertaking has been made to expand the cadet forces, and media reports of a possible expansion have been overdrawn. However, we are currently looking into the scope for expanding the cadet forces, so that more young people can enjoy the benefits of membership. A study will be made of the opportunities, limitations and costs, including those of any new armouries and firing ranges which might be required, within any possible future expansion.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost to public funds of providing (a) armouries and (b) firing ranges in all state secondary schools eligible to establish cadet forces. [20029]

Mr. Soames: Any secondary school may request the formation of a cadet unit within its premises, and may subsequently ask for the installation of an armoury or firing range. Should the cadet authorities agree, and the resources allow, these facilities can be provided. The costs would vary from site to site, but as an example, the estimated cost of providing a firing range and armoury at Longhill school, Brighton is £95,000.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the completion of the sale of the DERA support services division. [20654]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Contracts between the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, acting on behalf of the Secretary of State for Defence, and the venture capitalist Cinven for the sale of DERA's support services division have been exchanged. Completion will take place by mid-April, subject to the conclusion of mutually satisfactory arrangements for a pension scheme for the new company.

HEALTH

NHS Administration Costs

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the administrative cost of the NHS as a percentage of its total budget for each year since 1989. [13647]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) on 30 November 1995, Official Report, column 862, and the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Sutcliffe) on 3 December 1996, Official Report, column 635.

Changes over the years in the roles and responsibilities of family practitioner committees, family health services authorities, district health authorities, and regional health authorities, and the transfer of functions to NHS trusts, mean that the figures are not directly comparable. These figures also include expenditure on medical negligence, capital charges, grants to voluntary bodies and some health care services—for example, health promotion.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the amount spent on administration in each NHS (a) health authority and (b) trust. [19431]

Mr. Horam: The latest available health authority headquarters administration figures, relating to 1995–96, are already in the Library. However, changes over the years in the roles and responsibilities of family practitioner committees, family health services authorities, district health authorities, and regional health authorities, and the transfer of functions to NHS trusts, mean that the health authority headquarters administration figures are not directly comparable over time. These figures also include expenditure on medical negligence, capital charges, grants to voluntary bodies and some health care services—for example, health promotion.

For information on health authority costs and trust management costs, I refer the hon. Member to the booklet "Health Authority Costs and Management Costs in NHS Trusts" which is published today.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is spent on management and administration per annum at present in each health authority in England. [20119]

Mr. Horam: For information on health authority costs and trust management costs, I refer the hon. Member to the booklet "Health Authority Costs and Management Costs in NHS Trusts" which is published today.

The latest available health authority headquarters administration figures, relating to 1995–96, are already in the Library. However, changes over the years in the roles and responsibilities of family practitioner committees, family health services authorities, district health authorities, and regional health authorities, and the transfer of functions to NHS trusts, means that the figures are not directly comparable. These figures also include expenditure on medical negligence, capital charges, grants to voluntary bodies and some health care services—for example, health promotion).

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the administrative costs of each health authority in England in each of the last five years. [17465]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 24 February 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 22 May 1996, Official Report, columns 215–16, and the reply I gave the late hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 30 October 1996, Official Report, column 134.

Changes over the years in the roles and responsibilities of family practitioner committees, family health services authorities, district health authorities, and regional health authorities, and the transfer of functions to NHS trusts, mean that the figures are not directly comparable. These figures also include expenditure on medical negligence, capital charges, grants to voluntary bodies and some health care services—for example, health promotion).

Greater London Health Budget

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the national health service budget for Greater London was spent on administration during 1996; and if he will make a statement. [17965]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available.

Meals on Wheels

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the amount charged by each county council for the provision of meals on wheels. [18706]

Mr. Burns: Information on the charges typically made to individual users of services by local authority social services departments is not held centrally. However, aggregate figures by client group of gross and net expenditure and fees and charges relating to meals on wheels for each local authority social services department in England in 1994–95, the latest year for which this information is available, may be found on Internet—http://www.open.gov.uk/doh/public/pss__stat.htm—which can be accessed in the Library.

NHS Pension Scheme (GP Staff)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the assumption underlying his estimate of £5 million for the first-year costs of allowing GPs' practice staff to join the NHS pension scheme was that any practice staff who wished to could join or only those nominated by their GP employer; and what is the difference in cost between estimates based on these two assumptions. [18796]

Mr. Malone: Assumptions underlying the £5 million costs were based on the results of the staff interest survey. The results reflected the level of interest among staff who were employed by general practitioner practices which expressed an interest in participating.

Adoption

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each English local authority the amount currently charged for inter-county adoption home studies. [18783]

Mr. Burns: These figures are not held centrally.

Dentists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the British Dental Association concerning fast-track procedures for striking off dentists who may pose a threat to the public. [19295]

Mr. Malone: In December 1995 we consulted the British Dental Association about powers for the national health service tribunal to suspend dentists from providing general dental services. We amended the National Health Service (General Dental Services) Regulations to reflect these changes which came into force on 21 December 1995.

GP Patient Lists

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions in each of the last five years the Medical Practices Committee has decided to disperse the patient list of a vacant general practitioner post following a recommendation by a health authority that the post be advertised. [19430]

Mr. Malone: We understand from the Medical Practices Committee that there was one occasion in the past five years when the committee dispersed a patient list following a recommendation from a health authority to advertise.

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting, publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19384]

Mr. Horam: The following table shows the information requested:

Item	Cost of drafting publishing and circulating £	Number of copies distributed
The patients charter	6,622,610	26,880,000
The patients charter maternity services	191,799	1,350,000
The patients charter blood donors	144,144	28,250
The patients charter services for children and young people	359,927	354,000

Item	Cost of drafting publishing and circulating £	Number of copies distributed
The patients charter mental health services	88,225	65,300
A framework for local community care charters in England	76,765	100,000
The MDA code of practice on enforcement	6,553	4,150
MCA working with business	6,536	5,500
NHSPA commitment to service: Members charter	2,000	14,200

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of PFI contracts which have been signed by 30 March (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [19415]

Mr. Horam: Information on estimated future dates of contract signature is held centrally only for major private finance initiative schemes, generally with a capital value of over £10 million, which have at least reached preferred bidder stage. Of these schemes, it is estimated that three will have signed commercial contracts by 30 March 1997 and that a further 20 will have signed commercial contracts by 30 March 1998. Commercial contracts for 47 PFI schemes, of £1 million or above, have already been signed.

Residential Care (Assets)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the total value in real terms of assets sold by old people to pay for residential care in each of the last five years; and what in each case was the percentage change from the previous year; [19370]

(2) how many people, having sold their assets to pay for residential care, exhausted their funds in the last year for which figures are available; and how many such people remained in the same residential home; [19372]

(3) how many people sold their homes to pay for residential care in 1995–96; and what estimate he has made of the number who will have done so in 1996–97. [19371]

Mr. Burns: The information requested is not held centrally.

NHS Numbers

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for the most recent dates for which figures are available (a) the number of duplicate NHS numbers issued since the project to issue computerised numbers began and (b) the cost to the NHS to date of correcting this problem. [19546]

Mr. Horam: Between 4 December 1995, when the new national health service number was introduced, and 5 March 1997, the latest date for which figures are available, approximately 6,750 new NHS numbers had been re-issued by registrars of births and deaths at a subsequent birth registration. This is less than 1 per cent. of all birth registrations. Whenever an NHS number is erroneously re-issued, at least two registrations are affected. Occasionally, NHS numbers have been re-issued more than once, thereby affecting three or more registrations.

If an NHS number is re-issued at a birth registration this is detected by the NHS central register and all affected babies are issued with a unique replacement number. The cost to the NHS of correcting non-unique NHS numbers in patient registers is neglible. The cost of amending the software used by registrars of births and deaths to issue NHS numbers is being met by the Office for National Statistics.

Hospital Buildings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many square feet of former hospital buildings remain (a) empty, (b) derelict and (c) unsold. [19417]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available centrally.

Health Information Helpline

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of telephone calls from (a) the public and (b) Cambridge constituents to the health information helpline in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and what were the numbers of each category of inquiry. [19618]

Mr. Horam: The number of calls received by the national health information service between January 1996 and December 1996, inclusive, was 573,295. The number of calls at constituency level and categories of calls are not collected centrally.

Psychiatric Beds

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric beds have closed in each yea since 1980. [19373]

Mr. Burns: The information requested is not held centrally in the form requested.

General Managers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total remuneration of each NHS district health authority's general manager in each of the last three years. [19429]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the late hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 16 February 1995, Official Report, column 808, and the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) on 26 February 1996, Official Report, column 354. Information concerning 1995–96 is shown in the table. The figures need to be treated with caution. The payments listed represent remuneration in respect of the total gross salary, bonus payments, monetary value of benefits in kind, taxable expenses allowances and compensation payments in relation to offices described rather than an individual. Thus, payments listed for a particular district health authority could refer to more than one individual.

Liver Disease

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many diagnoses of chronic liver disease there have been in each of the last five years. [19418]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not held centrally.

Lariam

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 180, what factors led to deferring until 1995 the inclusion in his Department's publication "Health Information for Overseas Travel" of information about side effects of dizziness, disturbed sense of balance or a neuropsychiatric disorder included in changes made to the product information for Lariam in October 1991. [19682]

Mr. Malone: The 1995 edition of "Health Information for Overseas Travel" was the first edition of that book.

Power Lines (Cancer)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data he collates in respect of the number of cases of cancer sufferers resident in homes adjacent to high current configuration power lines; and if he will make a statement. [19828]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not collected centrally. However, several epidemiological studies are currently under way to investigate childhood cancer in relation to various possible causes including electromagnetic fields. The largest study of this type in this country is the United Kingdom childhood cancer study which is funded in part by the Department of Health, with technical support provided by the National Radiological Protection Board. The Department is also funding two pilot studies, one of adults and one of children, looking at cancer incidence near power lines.

Children's Homes

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for the administration of children's homes currently run by local authorities to be offered out for tender to the private sector. [19732]

Mr. Burns: None. It is for local authorities to make such arrangements as they consider appropriate to ensure that homes are available for the care and accommodation of children looked after by them—whether by their own provision or that of the independent sector.

Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1979

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1979. [20616]

Mr. Dorrell: It is Government policy to regularly review non-departmental public bodies. The national boards for nursing, midwifery and health visiting in the four countries of the United Kingdom fall into this category. The United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting does not. However, there is a clear relationship between the statutory bodies. The Government therefore, as a first stage, intend to commission an independent and fundamental review of the current operations of the five statutory bodies created by the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1979. This will be a comprehensive study of all aspects of their work, including those issues around determining fitness to practise which go to the heart of the council's role in protecting the public. I shall, in particular, want it to consider the need for new powers to impose life bans on people convicted of the most serious offences. We shall then bring forward for consultation specific proposals for change in the light of the outcome of that review.

Non-ionising Radiation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines he has issued in respect of limiting levels of exposure to non-ionising radiation; and if he will make a statement; [19836]

(2) what representations he has received from the National Radiological Protection Board in the last five years on the standards of protection for exposure to non-ionising radiation; and if he will make a statement. [19837]

Mr. Horam: The National Radiological Protection Board provides advice to Government on the risks to human health from both ionising and non-ionising radiation. Non-ionising radiation includes low and high-frequency electromagnetic fields as well as solar and artificial ultraviolet radiation.

In 1993 the NRPB issued guidelines on limiting exposure to electromagnetic fields and radiation—"Restrictions on Human Exposure to Static and Time Varying Electromagnetic Fields and Radiation" (documents of NRPB, Vol. 4, No. 5). The guidelines are based solely on preventing the well-established biological effects of heating and shock from acute exposure to electromagnetic fields and radiation.

Initiatives to reduce excessive exposure to ultraviolet radiation have been under way since "The Health of the Nation" White Paper in 1992. These include the Health Education Authority's "Sun Know How" campaign, a report by the NRPB's advisory group on non-ionising radiation covering health effects from ultraviolet radiation (documents of NRPB, Vol. 6, No. 2), distribution of NRPB's "Board Statement on Effects of Ultraviolet Radiation on Human Health" to all general practitioners, public health physicians and occupational health physicians, and the development of an Internet web site. Copies of the documents are in the Library.

Electromagnetic Fields

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the risk of cancer from (a) domestic exposure to electromagnetic fields, (b) parental exposure to electromagnetic fields and (c) employment in occupations with high exposure to electromagnetic fields; and if he will make a statement; [19839]

(2) what assessment he has made of the risk to human health associated with exposure to electromagnetic fields; and if he will make a statement. [19835]

Mr. Horam: The Department obtains advice on the health implications of exposure to electromagnetic fields from the National Radiological Protection Board and other sources, including its own funded research. The NRPB's advisory group on non-ionising radiation conducted an extensive review of the subject in 1992—"Electromagnetic Fields and the Risk of Cancer" (document series, Vol. 3, No. 1)—and concluded that there was no firm evidence of a carcinogenic hazard from exposure of paternal gonads, the foetus, children or adults to the extremely low-frequency fields that might be associated with residence near major sources of electricity supply, the use of electrical appliances or work in the electrical, electronic and telecommunication industries. The independence expert Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment has endorsed the advisory group's report. A supplementary report was published in 1994 by the NRPB—"Electromagnetic Fields and the risk of Cancer" (document series, Vol. 5, No. 2)—to take into account the results of further experimental and epidemiological studies from Scandinavia, France and Canada. Copies of the advisory group's reports are available in the Library.

Several epidemiological studies are currently under way to investigate childhood cancer in relation to various possible causes, including electromagnetic fields. The largest study of that type in this country is the United Kingdom childhood cancer study, which is funded in part by the Department, with technical support provided by the NRPB. The Department is also funding two pilot studies, one of adults and one of children, looking at cancer incidence near power lines.

Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Brian David Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to prevent the spread of MRSA within hospitals and the community. [19723]

Mr. Horam: The Department is currently working with professional groups on the revision of clinical guidelines on methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus issued to the national health service in September 1994. We have also commissioned the Royal College of Nursing to produce an education video and teaching pack on MRSA. In May 1996 the Department issued a leaflet on MRSA to health authorities, social services departments and nursing and residential homes.

Copies of the guidelines issued in 1994 and the leaflet on MRSA are available in the Library.

Hospital Building Schemes (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will update the list of hospital building schemes in Buckinghamshire given in his answer of 3 July 1996, Official Report, columns 443–44; and if he will make a statement. [19841]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is shown in the tables:

Fluoridation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the references of the scientific work published since 1990 upon which the Government's advisers base their recommendations to fluoridate. [20073]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Etherington) on 28 January, Official Report, column 163.

Ophthalmology Sessions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant ophthalmology sessions are available on average each week at present; and how many were available each week on average in each of the past five years. [20118]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not available centrally.

NHS Policy Board

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was on the agenda for the NHS policy board meeting on 12 March; [19134]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 668, if he will place in the Library the 1996–97 quarter 3 (a) income and expenditure returns and (b) year-end turnover and outturn forecasts for (i) health authorities and (ii) NHS trusts, together with the further papers on the quarter 3 returns to be considered by the NHS policy board on 12 March. [19276]

Mr. Malone: The NHS policy board meeting scheduled for 12 March 1997 did not take place. The 1996–97 quarter 3 forecasts for health authorities and NHS trusts will be placed in the Library shortly.

Information submitted to the NHS policy board provided for internal management discussion and advice, which includes its agenda, is exempt from publication under part 2 of the "Open Government Code of Practice."

Factor 8

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to fund provision for recombinant factor 8 on an equivalent basis to that provided in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [20043]

Mr. Horam: The Department does not allocate money to support specific treatments for particular patient groups. National health service funds are allocated to purchasers of health care who are best placed to decide what services, including treatments, they wish to purchase to meet local needs.

Depression (Prescribed Drugs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes have taken place in each of the past five years in the number of drugs prescribed for treating depression. [20031]

Mr. Malone: The number of licensed preparations used in the treatment of depression are shown in the table:

Number of licensed preparations used in the treatment of depression, 1991 to 1995

England

Year	Number of licensed preparations
1991	144
1992	143
1993	147
1994	153
1995	155

1. Antidepressants are those preparations in the British National Formulary [issue 28, September 1994] therapeutic section 4.3—antidepressant drugs.
2. These preparations are the main category of preparations used in the treatment of depression, but not solely used for it. Doctors may also prescribe other preparations.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the financial and other support that is provided to groups pressing for an increase in drug use for depression from (a) patients, (b) doctors, (c) drug companies and (d) doctors employed by drug companies. [20032]

Mr. Burns: The Department has not undertaken such an assessment.

Health Service Financial Performance

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which (a) health authorities and (b) NHS trusts are currently in the NHS executive's (i) red and (ii) amber zone for financial performance; and what are the criteria for inclusion in each zone. [20044]

Mr. Horam: Monitoring financial information for trusts and health authorities is already placed in the Library following analysis and review by the national health service executive. The red or amber status of trusts and health authorities is internal management information.

Health Service Senior Managers (Pay)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons (a) health authorities are and (b) NHS trusts are not required to pay their senior managers on NHS Whitley rates. [20046]

Mr. Malone: The pay of general and senior managers on national terms and conditions is not negotiated in Whitley councils but is determined centrally by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Health authorities have to pay national rates. The National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 gave trusts the freedom to set their own terms and conditions of service and has enabled the pay of senior executives to be determined locally where local needs and market factors can properly be taken into account in order to deliver improved patient care.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm Woodlands

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects his Department to publish the booklet "Farm Woodlands: An Introductory Guide"; and what plans he has to publicise the farm woodland premium scheme in advance of the booklet becoming available. [19578]

Mr. Boswell: Full details of the revised farm woodland premium scheme will be contained in the new "FWPS Rules and Procedures" booklet. Both this and the new application forms are currently being printed and are expected to be available before the beginning of April when the new scheme is due to commence.

Advice of a more general nature will be contained in "Farm Woodlands: An Introductory Guide". Work is currently in progress on this. Interested organisations will be consulted shortly on the draft and it is expected that the booklet will be published in the autumn of this year. In the meantime, the existing "Farm Woodlands: A Practical Guide", which the new booklet will replace, is being reprinted.

Publicity for the scheme will be concentrated over the spring and summer, with various promotional activities, including targeting local farming events and the agricultural shows, undertaken by ADAS and the Scottish Agricultural College advisory service. We also intend to place an advertisement in the farming press in the next few weeks and individual letters will be sent to existing participants outlining the changes to the scheme. The Forestry Commission also intends to run local seminars about the scheme.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many herds had had a BSE case by the end of each year from 1988 to 1996, broken down to show herds with head sizes of (a) less than 10, (b) 10 to 19, (c) 20 to 29, (d) 30 to 39, (e) 40 to 49, (f) 50 to 59, (g) 60 to 69, (h) 70 to 79, (i) 80 to 89, (j) 90 to 99, (k) 100 to 149, (l) 150 to 199, (m) 200 to 249 and (n) 250 and above, cattle; and if he will indicate the total number of herds for each category. [18207]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The following table shows the cumulative number of adult herds with confirmed cases of BSE by herd size at the end of each year—1988 to 1996:

Adult herd size	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996

Total	1,594	5,205	9,952	15,439	22,481	28,648	31,724	33,047	33,841

It is not possible, without disproportionate cost, to provide the total number of herds for each category of herd size.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will make a statement to the House regarding the disposal to landfill of BSE-related cattle carcases and other remains. [20080]

Mrs. Browning: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Dr. Strang) on 11 March 1997, Official Report, columns 54–5.

Green Vegetables

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the percentage change in the consumption of fresh green vegetables from 1980 to 1995. [19294]

Mr. Boswell: Household consumption of fresh green vegetables fell by 36 per cent. between 1980 and 1995. However, this has been offset by a 5 per cent. increase in the household consumption of other fresh vegetables, excluding potatoes, and a 23 per cent. increase in processed vegetables (table 5.1, page 70 of the National Food Survey, 1995 ISBN 0–11–243014–7 refers).

Meat Inspectors

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many authorised meat inspectors were in post on (a) 1 January 1996 and (b) the latest date for which figures are available. [19549]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 March 1997]: At 1 January 1996, the Meat Hygiene Service employed a total of 972 meat hygiene inspectors.

The Meat Hygiene Service currently employs a total of 1,160 meat hygiene inspectors.

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting, publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19380]

Mr. Boswell: I will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

MV Caroline

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what veterinary inspection will be made of animals due to be exported from Dover on the MV Caroline on or about 7 March; and if he will make a statement. [19543]

Mrs. Browning: The pre-export inspection of animals consists of a visual appraisal and, if deemed appropriate, a physical examination. The purpose of the inspection is to ensure that the animals intended for export comply with Community health requirements, show no signs of infectious or contagious disease and are fit to travel to their intended destination.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the veterinary officers from his Department have investigated the condition of animals transported on the MV Caroline. [19544]

Mrs. Browning: When animals have been transported from Britain in this ship the operator has received advice about the on-board facilities for animals. Loading of animals into the ship is also supervised, and veterinary and technical experts from this Department have accompanied some voyages.

Farm Animals (Breeding)

Miss Hoey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further action he plans to take following the report of the committee considering the ethical implications of emerging techniques in the breeding of farm animals. [19905]

Mrs. Browning: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Doncaster, North (Mr. Hughes) on 3 February 1997, Official Report, column 513–14.

In addition, following discussions with the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, a working party has been set up to look into the role of non-veterinarians in relation to the artificial insemination of cattle and horses. The results of this exercise may affect the way the recommendations of the Banner committee are taken forward in relation to AI. Further action will therefore be considered once the results of the working party are known.

Food and Agricultural Science Establishments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many purpose-built laboratories in Government-funded food and agricultural science establishments are mothballed; and if he will list each establishment with such a laboratory. [19921]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No laboratories owned by the Ministry have been mothballed. However, some have been closed permanently as a result of reorganisation and restructuring or following the completion of new or modernised facilities. I have no information about laboratories not owned by the Ministry.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of laboratory capacity in Government-funded food and agricultural science establishments built in (a) 1980 to 1985 (b) 1985 to 1990, (c) 1990 to 1995 and (d) 1995 to date, has been mothballed. [19922]

Mr. Hogg: No laboratories owned by the Ministry have been mothballed. I have no information about laboratories not owned by the Ministry.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the Government-funded food and agricultural science sites vacated since 1980, indicating (a) those in which the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council, other research councils and agencies, service or central laboratories retain the freehold or lease, (b) the estimated commercial sales value of each facility and (c) the length of time each has been vacant. [19923]

Mr. Hogg: Since 1980, the Ministry has vacated, either wholly or in part, the laboratories as listed. Prior to 1990, surplus accommodation was surrendered to the Property Services Agency for reuse by other Government Departments or disposal. I have no information about the way in which such properties may have been reused or disposed of or about their commercial values. The Ministry has not disposed of any laboratories since 1990 although some are due to be sold for redevelopment in the near future.

It would be inappropriate to release estimated values for properties which have yet to be sold as this might affect adversely the amounts that buyers would be prepared to pay for them. I have no information about vacant laboratories owned freehold or leasehold by other Government Departments or by other organisations.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on each case in which an official of the Meat Hygiene Service was dismissed for failing to enforce full compliance with specified bovine material controls in slaughterhouses. [20268]

Mrs. Browning: It is the Government's policy, explained more fully in their response to the Second Report from the Public Service Committee, Session 1995–96, that the results of internal civil service disciplinary investigations into the conduct of individuals should not be disclosed publicly.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place a copy of the national review of standards and practices within the fresh meat industry, prepared by the Meat Hygiene Service hygiene advice teams and referred to in the last annual report of the MHS in the Library. [19733]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 11 March 1997]: A copy of the report was placed in the Library of the House on 6 March 1997.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many meat hygiene inspectors work in Nottinghamshire; and where they are located. [19706]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 11 March 1997]: On a full-time equivalent basis, the Meat Hygiene Service—which is responsible for these matters—currently employs 13 full-time meat hygiene inspectors at three licensed fresh meat premises in Nottinghamshire.

The Meat Hygiene Service also employs additional casual meat hygiene inspectors at these plants where necessary for holiday and sickness cover.

Food Hygiene

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to implement the recommendations of the hygiene advisory team report by William Swann relating to national policy in respect of the contamination of animals presented for slaughter. [19663]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 11 March 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 6 March 1997, Official Report, columns 1023–35.

Quarantine

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons quarantine kennels are omitted from the licensing and inspection regime under the Boarded Animal Establishment Act 1963. [19892]

Mrs. Browning: Provision is made for the licensing and inspection of quarantine premises under the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and Other Mammals) Order 1974, as amended.

Ewes (Export for Religious Slaughter)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to restrict the export of ewes for outdoor religious slaughter in France. [19908]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 12 March 1997]: The Department's powers to regulate sheep exports are exercisable only in relation to the legal provisions concerned with the welfare of animals during transport. We shall apply the relevant rules thoroughly in the usual way. Enforcement of the rules concerned with welfare at slaughter in France is a matter for the French authorities.

TREASURY

Arms to Iran Affair

Mr. Gale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the official inquiry by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise into BMAR has found evidence of knowledge or involvement in illegal arms exports to Iran by the right hon. Member for South Thanet (Mr. Aitken). [17903]

Mr. Oppenheim: Customs' investigation is not yet complete—the result of some overseas inquiries is still awaited. It is not normally the practice of the Commissioners of Customs and Excise to comment on investigations of individuals or companies not yet accused of criminal offences. To do so could risk prejudicing any on-going inquiries or future criminal proceedings. I can, however, say in the particular circumstances of this investigation that inquiries to date have not produced any evidence which would support any criminal proceedings against any person, including my right hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken) in relation to the exports by BMARC which were alleged to have ended up in Iran.

Government Receipts (Scotland)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the estimated Government receipts in Scotland by source for the last year for which figures are available. [19499]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 10 march 1997]: The table shows the figures requested. With the exception of corporation tax receipts, these figures were published by the Scottish Office in table 10 of "Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland 1994–95".

Estimates of General Government Receipts in Scotland, 1994–95

Income tax	5
Social security contributions	3.7
VAT	3.6
Council tax and non-domestic rates	2.1
Corporation tax	1.8
All other receipts'	5.9
Total receipts'	22.1

' Excluding North sea revenues.

Fiscal Deficit (Scotland)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the fiscal deficit in Scotland in the last year for which figures are available. [19498]

Mr. Waldergrave [holding answer 10 March 1997]: Excluding privatisation proceeds and North sea revenues, the general Government deficit in Scotland is estimated to have been £8.2 billion in 1994–95.

Government Expenditure (Scotland)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was general Government expenditure in Scotland in (a) identifiable, (b) non identifiable, (c) programme and (d) other expenditure categories, in the last year for which figures are available. [19553]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 10 March 1997]: Total expenditure on services by country and function for 1994–95 is given in table 7.7 of "Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses 1996–97" Cm 3201.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest available figures for (a) GDP and (b) GDP per head, for the four countries of the United Kingdom, including the continental shelf, in (i) current and (ii) 1996–97 prices; what proportion of GDP for the United Kingdom continental shelf is ascribed to each country in these figures; and what would be the equivalent figure for Scottish GDP and Scottish GDP per head if 90 per cent. of the United Kingdom continental shelf were in the Scottish totals. [19406]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 11 March 1997]: The table shows the figures available. Estimates of GDP at factor cost by region are available only in current prices. The continental shelf is treated in the regional accounts as a separate region, and hence its estimated GDP can not be ascribed to England, Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland.

Estimates of GDP and GDP per head at factor cost in England, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the Continental Shelf, 1995 (current prices)

	GDP (£ million)	GDP per head (£)
England	504,893	10,324
Scotland	50,713	9,872
Wales	24,618	8,440
Northern Ireland	13,868	8,410
Continental shelf	10,348	—

Notes:

1. Ninety per cent. of the GDP of the continental shelf is equal to £9,313 million.
2. Since there is no resident population in the continental shelf region GDP per head for the continental shelf cannot be calculated.
3. The GDP for the UK continental shelf comprises profits and stock appreciation which cannot be assigned to regions of the UK. The income from employment of continental shelf employees is, however, allocated to the region of residence of the employee and cannot be separately identified within the regional GDP estimates.
4. Estimates of GDP by region at factor cost are only available in current prices, which means that an increase over time reflects inflation as well as real growth. There are no regional price indices which could be used to remove the effect of inflation from the figures. Constant price estimates could be made using UK price indices, but these would be misleading if prices and price changes had varied significantly between different parts of the UK.

Personal Pensions

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount which has been paid in compensation to people who were mis-sold personal pensions. [20016]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Figures published by the Personal Investment Authority, the regulator responsible for most of the firms involved in the review of personal pensions mis-selling, estimates that about £60 million of compensation had been made in the period up to 31 December 1996.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the companies which have mis-sold personal pensions. [19945]

Mrs. Knight: It is not possible to compile such a list at this stage.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have been mis-sold personal pensions. [19946]

Mrs. Knight: It is not yet possible to provide a reliable estimate of the number of people who have been mis-sold a personal pension.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the total cost of compensation likely to be paid to people who were mis-sold personal pensions. [20022]

Mrs. Knight: There is no reliable estimate available of the total cost of compensation that is likely to be paid to people who have been mis-sold personal pensions.

Domestic Fuel (VAT)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of value added tax on domestic fuel. [20107]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 13 March 1997]: VAT was applied to domestic fuel for sound environmental and revenue reasons, which continue to apply. The Government have no plans to change the current rate of 8 per cent. VAT, which applies to domestic fuel. The yield from this measure is about £1.1 billion a year.

Suicides and Fatal Accidents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and what percentage of the population have (a) committed suicide and (b) suffered a fatal accident in each of the last seven years; and if he will make a statement. [20037]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 13 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from John Fox to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 17 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked the Director of the Office for National Statistics to reply to your recent question asking how many and what percentage of the population have (a) committed suicide and (b) suffered a fatal accident in each of the last seven years. The Director has asked me to reply in his absence.

The figures for England are provided in the table below.

Year	Suicides (ICD9[1] codes E950–E959 and E980–E989 excl. E988.8)	Suicides per 100,000 population	Fatal accidents (ICD9[1] codes E800–E929)	Fatal accidents per 100,000 population
1989	5046	10.6	11111	23.2
1990	5240	10.9	10597	22.1
1991	5183	10.8	9944	20.6
1992	5126	10.6	9516	19.7
1993	4929	10.2	9617	19.8
1994	4780	9.8	9417	19.3
1995	4816	9.8	9369	19.2

Married Couples (Tax Allowances)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will commission a report from the Inland Revenue on arrangements for allowing a husband and wife to elect (a) to transfer between them the personal tax allowances to which each is entitled and (b) to set the tax allowances and the amounts chargeable at the lower and basic rates of income tax to which both are entitled against the sum of their total incomes; and if he will ask the Inland Revenue to assess (i) the advantages and disadvantages of these arrangements, (ii) their cost to the Exchequer, (iii) a timetable for their introduction and (iv) the tax treatment of married couples in other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries. [20377]

Mr. Jack: The tax system already provides a special allowance for married couples, and the Government believe that, by rewarding hard work through reducing tax rates, married couples with continue to benefit under their policies. Nearly two thirds of the income tax package in the 1996 Budget will benefit married couples directly. Against that background, I have asked the Inland Revenue to produce a report about the arrangements that my hon. Friend mentions.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 76, on the national police management training policy for Indonesia; if he will place a copy of the submission from the head of eastern Asia department in the Library. [20699]

Dr. Liam Fox: In my answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 76, I undertook to write to the hon. Member about the release of this document. I did so on 12 March and a copy of my letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

Decentralisation Support

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries received support from his Department for financial decentralisation in 1991. [20170]

Dr. Liam Fox: The promotion of economic reform and other good government policies in developing countries and in the countries of central and eastern Europe and central Asia is one of the key aims of the UK development assistance programme. ODA funds are commonly used to promote public service reform, which includes delegated management. As a result, support for projects in this area, including for financial decentralisation, is a common feature of almost every bilateral assistance country programme. Precise details of the sort requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Great Lakes

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much of his Department's budget was allocated to the Great Lakes area of Africa in the last year (a) bilaterally and (b) multilaterally; and if he will make a statement. [20103]

Dr. Liam Fox: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Timms) on 27 January, Official Report column 14.

Trade Union Movements (Aid)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for 1991 those countries whose trade union movements received support from his Department. [20105]

Dr. Liam Fox: Under the joint funding scheme, the following countries and regions received support during the funding period 1990–91 to 1991–92:

Tanzania
Uganda
Kenya
Southern Africa (Regional)
Caribbean (Regional).

Under the workers group development scheme, the following countries and regions received support during the funding period 1991–92 to 1993–94:

South Africa
Namibia
Botswana
Zambia
Zimbabwe Africa (Regional)
India
Occupied Territories
Barbados
Montserrat
Guyana
Caribbean (Regional).

In 1991, information about support for trade union movements drawing on other funding sources was not recorded centrally. It would involve disproportionate cost to collate such information now.

Rwanda

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Rwandan Government concerning international assistance for returning refugees; and if he will make a statement. [20104]

Dr. Liam Fox: HM ambassador in Kigali has regular discussions with the Government of Rwanda, international aid agencies and non-governmental organisations on Rwanda's rehabilitation needs, including assistance for the resettlement of returning refugees. Since 1995 we have committed nearly £20 million bilaterally in support of Rwanda's rehabilitation programme and £18.5 million as our contribution to EU rehabilitation assistance.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Millennium Exhibition

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Romford (Sir M. Neubert) of 3 March, Official Report, column 497, on the millennium exhibition, if he will make a statement on the methodology by which the figure of 10 million expected visitors was determined. [19834]

Mr. Freeman: A MORI poll conducted by the operating company before Christmas indicated potential visitor numbers of 13.5 million could be achieved if efforts were made to maximise attendance. The original indicative budget produced by Millennium Central Limited was prepared on this basis. As part of the process of refining the indicative budget, the amount to be expended on maximising visitor numbers was reduced and the estimate of visitor numbers was reduced accordingly to 10 million.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidance he has issued to non-departmental public bodies following the Cadbury and Greenbury reports; and if the guidance reflects all the recommendations in those reports. [20432]

Mr. Freeman: Following the publication of the Cadbury report and its recommended code of best practice, the Treasury prepared a model code of best practice for board members of public bodies, which was issued in June 1994. This applied the Cadbury principles, where appropriate, to members of public bodies such as executive non-departmental public bodies. The model code has recently been revised and replaced by guidance on codes of practice for board members of public bodies, which was published by the Cabinet Office (OPS) in February 1997 in the White Paper "The Governance of Public Bodies: A Progress Report", Cm 3557. New or revised codes, taking account of the guidance and tailored to the particular circumstances of the body, should be in place for all executive NDPBs by 1 June 1997.

No specific guidance has been issued to NDPBs following the Greenbury report. Responsibility for the pay and conditions of service of chairmen and board members of executive NDPBs is primarily a matter for sponsor Departments. Remuneration of chairman, board member and chief executive appointments to NDPBs is published in "Public Bodies 1996", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to ensure that non-executive directors appointed to non-departmental public bodies do not have previous contractual arrangements with the body concerned. [20431]

Mr. Freeman: Previous contractual arrangements with a non-departmental public body should not automatically debar a candidate from subsequent appointment to it. Whether any potential conflicts of interest exist is a matter which should be determined by the selection procedure for the appointment in question, for example by a selection board during an interview of the candidate. The Commissioner for Public Appointments will be considering whether this matter should be covered in his revised guidance, which is due to be published in July 1997. Guidance to NDPBs on handling conflicts of interest has recently been revised as part of the guidance on codes of practice for board members of public bodies, published last month in the White Paper "The Governance of Public Bodies: A Progress Report", Cm 3557.

Open Government

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the operation of the code of practice on access to Government information during 1996. [20732]

Mr. Freeman: I have today announced the publication of the Government's report on the operation of the code of practice during 1996, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Public Record Office

Sir Colin Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the future of the public record office in Chancery lane. [20745]

Mr. Freeman: The public record office in Chancery lane will shortly be vacated.

Discussions are taking place with the Victoria and Albert museum about the possibility of relocating the national art library and the Victoria and Albert archive of art and design to this building, but it is too early to say whether these will lead to a successful conclusion.

The Government are aware of the heritage of this building and will make every effort to ensure its preservation.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Dance and Drama School Places

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on the new interim scheme to assist young people to take up places at dance and drama schools. [20824]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 14 October, I announced plans to help more students take up places at accredited dance and drama training schools in England using funding from the national lottery and the Department of Education and Employment, in partnership with local authorities. I am delighted that the Arts Council of England has now announced the operational details of the interim scheme, following close consultation with local authority associations and representatives of the dance and drama constituencies. I am sure that the House shares my pleasure that, through the lottery, it has been possible to create an opportunity for more talented students to pursue their training.

International Sporting Events

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to attract major international sporting events to the United Kingdom. [20753]

Mr. Sproat: The Government are strongly committed to providing promotional and diplomatic support for the bidding for and staging of major international sporting events in this country. The United Kingdom Sports Council, which was established on 1 January 1997, has, as one of its priority tasks, to help attract to this country major international sporting events. To ensure that there is a clear and co-ordinated UK strategy for all major events, we have asked the United Kingdom Sports Council to take the lead. Additionally the Government have demonstrated their commitment in a number of practical ways.

My Department chairs a wide-ranging working group to assist Manchester in organising a successful 2002 Commonwealth games, and to ensure that the event has the greatest possible impact, both nationally and internationally, in terms of sporting, tourism, economic and other benefits. The Welsh Office chairs a working group to ensure the success of the 1999 rugby world cup. I am also encouraging the British Tourist Authority to work closely with the organiser of events to ensure synergy, for example between the rugby world cup 1999 and the cricket world cup 1999, with a view to maximising the tourism benefits. Building on the success of Euro 96, the Government are strongly backing the Football Association's bid to host the 2006 world cup. We have already hosted two receptions on behalf of the FA, and I am chairing a co-ordinating group of FA and Government officials to ensure that we are assisting the FA as far as we are able.

To assist further, the sports councils have recently launched their national revenue grants programmes, one of which is designed to attract and stage those events which are of genuine major significance to the UK. The UK Sports Council advises the four home nation sports councils on the distribution of national lottery funds in support of bids for, and the staging of, major events in this country as well as on the facilities required to stage them.

All of these initiatives underline the importance which the Government attach to attracting and staging major events in this country.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Fees

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the impact of new county court fees to be charged on debtors under the provisions of the County Court Fees (Amendment) Order 1996; and if he will make a statement. [19494]

Mr. Streeter: Following the judgment in R v. the Lord Chancellor ex parte Witham, the Lord Chancellor has decided that litigants in the county courts and in family proceedings should be placed on the same footing as litigants in non-family proceedings in the Supreme Court. He has therefore made orders restoring the exemption and remission provisions which applied before 15 January 1997. As a result, most debtors on low incomes will not be liable to pay court fees.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the estimated projected annual income the Court Service will receive from levying new charges for (a) fee numbers (1) 2C (ii) application by debtor to vary judgment, (iii) 2C (2) application to set aside judgment, (3) 2C (iv) application to district judge, (4) 2C (vi) application to circuit judge, (5) 4 (i) (c) second or subsequent warrant and (6) 4 (ix) application to suspend warrant and (b) entering a counter claim against the plaintiff. [19502]

Mr. Streeter: The question concerns a matter which has been assigned to the Court Service under the terms of its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Huebner to Mr. Bill Etherington, dated 17 March 1997:

PQ/304: Projected income from new court fees.

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about the projected annual income the Court Service will receive from new court fees.

These estimates do not take account of the possible impact of the judgment in R v the Lord Chancellor ex-parte Witham.

Fee number and type of process	Projected income £ million
2C(ii) and (ii) Application to vary or set aside judgment[1]	0.975
2C(iv) Application to district judge or circuit judge ex-part or by consent	8.3
2C(v)(vi) Application to district judge and circuit judge[1]	2.0
4(i)(c) Request for second or subsequent warrant	2.3
4(ix) Application to suspend warrant	0.865
Entering a counterclaim against the plaintiff[2]	No projection has been made

[1] This is a combined projection for the two fees.

[2] The new fee payable on entering a counterclaim is the same as if separate proceedings were being issued for that amount.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to review (a) the Supreme Court Court Fees (Amendment) Order 1996, (b) the County Court Fees (Amendment) Order 1996 and (c) the Family Proceedings Fees (Amendment) Order 1996; and if he will make a statement. [20641]

Mr. Streeter: The Lord Chancellor is in the process of implementing wide-ranging reforms to the civil justice system following the publication of Lord Woolf's final report. As part of this process, the current fees structure will be subject to review to ensure that fees are charged at an appropriate level and at appropriate points in the progression of a case.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the expected savings from each element of the (a) Supreme Court Fees (Amendment) Order 1996, (b) County Court Fees (Amendment) Order 1996 and (c) Family Proceedings Fees (Amendment) Order 1996; and if he will make a statement. [20643]

Mr. Streeter: The question concerns a matter which has been assigned to the Court Service under the terms of its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Huebner to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 17 March 1997:

PQ 97/318: Expected savings from court fees

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question on expected savings from court fees.

The estimated additional income from the three fees orders is as follows:

Supreme Court Fees (Amendment) Order 1996: £8.8 million

County Court Fees (Amendment) Order 1996: £24.6 million

Family Proceedings Fees (Amendment) Order 1996: £6 million

These estimates do not take account of the possible impact of the judgment in Regina v the Lord Chancellor ex parte Witham.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received (a) in favour and (b) against the (i) Supreme Court Fees (Amendment) Order 1996, (ii) County Court Fees (Amendment) Order 1996 and (iii) Family Proceedings Fees (Amendment) Order 1996; and if he will make a statement. [20642]

Mr. Streeter: According to our records 91 representations have been received by Ministers relating to the Fees (Amendment) Orders 1996, three in the form of parliamentary questions and 88 in the form of letters from Members of Parliament. The representations made have expressed concerns about the effect of particular fees rather than views on each order as a whole.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to reverse recent increases in civil justice court fees in accordance with the decision in R v. the Lord Chancellor ex parte Witham; and if he will make a statement. [20640]

Mr. Streeter: The judgment in R v. the Lord Chancellor ex parte Witham reinstates the former fee exemptions and remissions in the Supreme Court. It does not relate to the increases in civil court fees. To place county court and family proceedings litigants on the same footing as litigants in the Supreme Court, the Lord Chancellor has made orders reintroducing provisions for fee exemption and remission in these proceedings as well, and has made refunds available to those eligible.

County Courts

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received on the extent to which decisions of county courts are not implemented; and if he will make a statement. [18852]

Mr. Streeter: The question concerns a matter which has been assigned to the Court Service under the terms of its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Huebner to Mr. William O'Brien, dated 17 March 1997:

PQ 97/308: Representations received about county courts decisions that are not implemented:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of representations received about county court decisions that are not implemented.

I have not received any representations in person but written representations have been received by the Court Service. However the information requested is not collected centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93, what factors led him to revise the expenditure on the Principal Registry Family Division (Central London Accommodation) PFI project to nil. [20411]

Mr. Streeter: That project is no longer proceeding via the PFI procurement route.

Legal Aid

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many people have received legal aid in each of the last 10 years to take action against (a) the Labour party, (b) the Conservative party, (c) the Liberal Democrat party and (d) any other political party. [20286]

Mr. Streeter: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list by nationality the number of applications for legal aid made by non-British citizens, showing those which have been successful, in each of the last three years. [20624]

Mr. Streeter: Information as to an applicant's nationality is not collected and is therefore not available.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what criteria apply to overseas applicants for legal aid; and what are the procedures by which the Legal Aid Board checks the accuracy of applications. [20626]

Mr. Streeter: All applications for legal aid, from whatever source, must undergo statutory means and merits tests. A special financial application form must be used by applicants not resident in the UK. The Legal Aid Board makes its decisions based on information supplied by the applicant through their solicitor, and where this is insufficient or inconsistent further investigations will be made. The special investigations unit, set up in 1996, investigates the means of applicants with complex financial affairs, which may include foreign nationals.

Bus Employees Superannuation Trust

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to the answer from the Secretary of State for Transport to the hon. Member for Blackpool, South (Mr. Hawkins) of 27 November 1996, Official Report, columns 271–72, what legal action the Official Solicitor plans to take in respect of his duty as trustee of the BEST pension fund; and when he plans to take it. [20505]

Mr. Streeter: NBC Pension Trustees Ltd. is trustee of the BEST pension fund of which the Official Solicitor is sole shareholder. The Official Solicitor has appointed two of his staff as directors. I am informed that the trustee, NBC Pension Trustees Ltd., intends to issue proceedings seeking recovery of the pension funds paid to the Secretary of State for Transport. Allen and Overy, who have advised the former directors for several years, were instructed by the present directors when they assumed responsibility. Allen and Overy have now relinquished their retainer as there is a potential conflict of interest. The trustee has recently instructed Taylor Joynson Garret in order to carry forward the matter as quickly as possible.

Administration Orders

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the financial limit in relation to administration orders; and if he will list the dates on which the working party set up to assess section 13 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 has met to discuss this matter. [20644]

Mr. Streeter: An administration order currently provides a mechanism for a debtor who has a county court judgment and not more than £5,000 worth of debts to apply to a county court to take over the management of his or her debts. Section 13 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 would put into effect changes recommended by the civil justice review, including the removal of the £5,000 ceiling. The monitoring group which was set up to identify the implications of section 13 discussed the limit at its meeting on 29 November 1993.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Live Animal Transport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take to prevent the export of cull ewes from Dover to France on 7 March for the purpose of ritual slaughter near Paris. [19542]

Mrs. Browning: The Department's powers to regulate sheep exports are exercisable only in relation to the legal provisions concerned with the welfare of animals during transport. We shall apply the relevant rules thoroughly in the usual way. Enforcement of the rules concerned with welfare at slaughter in France is a matter for the French authorities.

Salmon

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to review the operation of the Salmon and Freshwater

Fisheries Act 1975 with particular reference to (a) the increase in the production and import of farmed salmon and (b) the enhanced value of the recreational salmon fishery to the rural economy. [19677]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 13 March 1997]: Any review of current salmon and freshwater fisheries legislation in England and Wales would need to address the issues identified by my hon. Friend. The Government will consider whether to carry out such a review in the light of their legislative plans for the next Parliament.

Newcastle Disease

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the poultry and egg production sectors to discuss the Government's response to the recent outbreak of Newcastle disease. [20051]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Officials of my Department have met representatives of the British Poultry Meat Federation on three occasions, most recently on 5 March 1997. They also met the British Egg Industry Council on 4 February and the NFU on 5 February. Industry organisations are being kept informed of all developments.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many premises have been affected by the recent outbreak of Newcastle disease. [20052]

Mr. Hogg: Between 1 January 1997 and 12 March 1997, Newcastle disease had been confirmed on seven premises in Great Britain.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has made of the cost of measures to control the outbreak of Newcastle disease to (a) the Government and (b) industry. [20053]

Mr. Hogg: As of 12 March, the Department is considering or has processed compensation claims amounting to some £4 million in respect of outbreaks of Newcastle disease in Great Britain in 1997. However, action to control Newcastle disease is still being taken, and the overall cost of control to both Government and industry will depend upon whether or not further outbreaks occur.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is being taken to (a) eradicate Newcastle disease and (b) prevent any further outbreaks. [20054]

Mr. Hogg: Movement restrictions are being imposed within infected areas as required by directive 92/66/EEC which lays down community measures for controlling Newcastle disease. Control measures include the slaughter of all poultry on premises where disease has been confirmed, the supervised disposal of their carcases, the tracing of all movements of birds, eggs, equipment and people onto and off of an infected premises before and subsequent to disease being confirmed and the thorough cleansing and disinfection of an infected premises and equipment after site depopulation.

Industry has been advised to vaccinate where this has not taken place and to ensure adequate precautions are in place to avoid the introduction of infection.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications of the recent outbreak of Newcastle disease for (a) public health and (b) consumer protection. [20055]

Mr. Hogg: There is no risk to public health from poultry meat which may contain the Newcastle disease virus and, therefore, no consequences for consumer protection.

Newcastle disease virus can be spread through the air from infected birds and contact with such birds can occasionally cause conjunctivitis, fever and flu-like symptoms in humans. The risk of human infection is low, even when handling birds known to be infected.

The Department of Health has been kept fully informed of developments.

Food Safety

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 25 February 1997, Official Report, columns 194–95, regarding food safety in the canning industry, what assessment his Department made of (a) the level of expertise and (b) the application of good manufacturing practice among small companies, in its recent review; and if he will make a statement. [20311]

Mrs. Browning: The results of the Department's survey of UK canneries, including an assessment of the level of expertise and the application of good manufacturing practice amongst small companies, are given in microbiological food safety surveillance report No. 5 on the national study of canneries. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

European Union Surpluses

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the foods currently held in storage in the United Kingdom as European Union surpluses. [20177]

Mr. Baldry: Statistics showing stocks of EC and UK agricultural produce in public intervention and assisted private storage are lodged in the Library of the House.

Meat Hygiene Service (Officials)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many officials of the Meat Hygiene Service (a) have been subject to disciplinary action, (b) have been dismissed, (c) have received formal disciplinary warnings, (d) have received formal written cautions and (e) are still under disciplinary investigation for failure to enforce specified bovine material controls in slaughter houses. [20267]

Mrs. Browning: To date, 45 Meat Hygiene Service employees have been subject to disciplinary investigation as a result of failure to ensure full compliance with SBM controls. Four employees have been dismissed—one of whom was reinstated at appeal—18 have received formal disciplinary warnings and 23 have received written cautions. one officer is still under disciplinary investigation. Before any of these staff are allowed to begin their work again they are required to undergo re-training.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what retraining officials of the Meat Hygiene Service who have failed to enforce specified bovine material controls in slaughterhouses have to undergo before they are allowed to resume their work. [20269]

Mrs. Browning: Staff training matters are the responsibility of the Meat Hygiene Service and I have asked the chief executive to reply to you direct.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. Martyn Jones, dated 17 March 1997:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) your Parliamentary Question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food about the re-training undertaken by officials who have failed to ensure compliance with the specified bovine material controls in slaughterhouses before they are allowed to resume work has been passed to me to reply. [20269]

As you are aware, the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) was established as an Executive Agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) on 1 April 1995. It took over from some 300 local authorities responsibility for enforcing meat hygiene, inspection and animal welfare at slaughter legislation in licensed fresh meat premises in England, Scotland and Wales.

The MHS is also responsible for enforcing specified bovine material (SBM) controls in slaughterhouses. It does this most rigorously. A comprehensive SBM training programme has been provided to all inspection staff. The agency's staff are fully aware that they may face disciplinary action as a result of their failure to enforce fully the controls. As you note, staff who have faced disciplinary action undergo a retraining programme prior to resuming work at a plant. Such staff are required to repeat the intensive practical plant based SBM training under the supervision of a Principal Official Veterinary Surgeon. The importance of 100% compliance with SBM controls is reiterated to these staff and they continue to be closely monitored by the plant's Official Veterinary Surgeon to ensure comprehensive and rigorous enforcement of SBM controls.

Pesticides

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the commercial composts currently marketed in the United Kingdom which incorporate (a) one or more pesticides and (b) imidacloprid; [20356]

(2) what requests he has received from manufacturers seeking to use imidacloprid in composts (a) used for growing edible plants and (b) available to the public. [20361]

Mrs. Browning: Currently there are no commercial composts containing pesticides approved for sale in the United Kingdom. However there are a number of pesticides, including imidacloprid, which have approval for use by professionals by means of incorporation to compost.

Every application for approvals of pesticides is commercially confidential until a final decision is taken on it.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that plants raised in compost containing pesticides are clearly identified as such. [20360]

Mrs. Browning: Approval is given only if scientific evaluation shows that the product can be used without unacceptable risk to people or the environment. There is thus no need for crops produced with the aid of approved pesticides to be labelled as such.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the effects of imidacloprid on human health; and if he will make a statement. [20358]

Mrs. Browning: Before approval is given to any pesticide chemical, detailed scientific data on health effects, including both acute and chronic effects for pesticide users and for food consumers, are evaluated by the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides—ACP—on behalf of the Government. The evaluation document for imidacloprid agreed by the ACP has been published and the detailed scientific data, which are protected by rules on commercial confidentiality, may be inspected at the Pesticides Safety Directorate. MAFF does not commission research into the health effects of individual pesticide chemicals.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the extent of the use of imidacloprid in commercial compost. [20357]

Mrs. Browning: Monitoring of all agricultural pesticides including imidacloprid is carried out by the working party on pesticide usage surveys in a four-year rolling programme. Imidacloprid is a recently approved chemical and does not yet feature largely in survey results. Such uses as have so far been recorded do not include application via compost.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received regarding the use of imidacloprid in the product Levington Intercept. [20355]

Mrs. Browning: Apart from approaches from the company, the Ministry has received two inquiries regarding the use of imidacloprid in Levington Intercept.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that any composts containing pesticides are clearly identified as such. [20359]

Mrs. Browning: A compost containing a pesticide chemical and intended to protect plants grown in it is subject to pesticides legislation and must be labelled as a pesticide. A compost sterilised, disinfected or otherwise treated with a pesticide but not in order to protect plants grown in it is not considered as a pesticide and not required to be so labelled. However, no pesticide may be used to treat compost in this country unless this use has been approved following full scientific evaluation of the potential consequences for people and the environment.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minster of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the results of the second survey of variable pesticides residues are now available; and if he will make a statement. [20825]

Mrs. Browning: The results of the second survey of variable pesticide residues were announced on 14 March. A copy of the announcement and of the supporting documents have been placed in the Library of the House.

The survey results show that levels of residues in the majority of fruit and vegetables fall well below recommended maximum residue levels. However, a small number of apples and peaches, including imports had higher residues than is desirable. We will be reporting these results in full to the Codex Alimentarius Commission so that it can instigate international action further to ensure consumer protection.

A large safety margin is built into the figures used when setting what can be regarded as an acceptable level. The Deputy Chief Medical Officer and Professor Sir. Colin Berry, chairman of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, have issued statements which make clear that the results of the second survey for variable residues do not change Government advice that fruit and vegetables remain a key component of a healthy diet.

Fishermen's Association Ltd.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy in respect of meetings between (a) Ministers and (b) officials and the Fishermen's Association Ltd. [20496]

Mr. Baldry: We arrange meetings with representatives of fishermen's organisations as and when appropriate. There is no distinctive policy regarding the Fishermen's Association Ltd.

Surplus Food Scheme

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the charitable organisations to which United Kingdom intervention beef will be distributed under the surplus food scheme in 1997. [20657]

Mr. Baldry: A total of 1,059 applications have been received by the Intervention Board from organisations wishing to distribute canned intervention beef under the surplus food scheme in 1997. These include charitable organisations and others such as local authorities. The distribution applications within the United Kingdom is:

England: 792

Scotland: 149

Wales: 85

Northern Ireland: 33.

These applications are being examined and the organisations considered acceptable will be formally designated in due course to distribute the canned beef.

BSE

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the possibility of establishing whether particular herds of cattle are BSE free; and what action is being taken so as to identify cattle which are affected. [18205]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The beef assurance scheme—BAS—and the export certified herds scheme—ECHS—are based on the identification and verification of factors which taken together indicate that the cattle concerned have not been exposed to a risk of BSE. The BAS is already in operation. Proposals for the ECHS were sent to the European Commission in February and will be discussed by the Commission's scientific advisory committees and the standing committee as part of the Florence framework for lifting the export ban.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect of recent publicity on the state of British abattoirs on EC officials' consideration of the lifting of the BSE ban on (a) British and (b) Northern Irish beef. [20399]

Mrs. Browning: Much of the media coverage of BSE in recent months has been unhelpful to United Kingdom veterinary interests. I hope and expect the Commission and their independent scientific advisers to consider the case on its merits.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the chance and confidence intervals for cattle developing BSE that their dam would have had BSE; and if he will break down the results to indicate the impact of whether the calf was (a) first born, (b) second born, (c) third born and (d) a later birth. [18203]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The chance of BSE offspring cases developing BSE is 1 per cent. Confidence intervals are not appropriate as this is the observed percentage from the epidemic. It is not possible to provide the breakdown of this percentage with any accuracy into first born, second born, third born or a later birth, but there are indications that the risk is greater in calves born closer to the time when a cow develops BSE than in those born earlier.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports he has received on the outcome of tests relating to the destruction of BSE infective material through incineration. [18132]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 March 1997]: No tests have been carried out on the destruction of BSE infective material through incineration.

Advice was sought from the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee on the effectiveness of the incinerators used by the Ministry for the disposal of BSE suspect carcases to destroy the BSE infective agent. The committee has advised, on the basis of its knowledge of earlier studies on the inactivation of TSE agents and proteins in general, that provided incineration was completed, the incinerators used by the Ministry were more than adequate to render the BSE agent inactive.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the modal average age of cattle which died of BSE and were born in each year from 1985 to 1993. [18200]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The table shows the modal age at slaughter of confirmed BSE cases with dates of birth between 1985 and 1993:

Year of birth	Modal age at slaughter
1985	5
1986	5
1987	5
1988	5
1989	5
1990	5
1991	4

Year of birth	Modal age at slaughter

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 194, regarding the level of infectivity in rendered meat and bone meal from cattle slaughtered in the over-30-months scheme, what is the maximum level of infectivity (in IU per gram) that is estimated to be present in the rendered material being considered for incineration. [18972]

Mr. Baldry: Very little infective material is likely to enter rendering plants as cattle suspected of showing clinical signs suggestive of BSE are destroyed by incineration. However, some animals may be incubating disease even though they do not show clinical signs of infection. In 1996 the number of such animals, based on independent research, Anderson et al, 1996, is estimated to have been around 4,600, and most of these would, we believe, have been among the 1.1 million animals slaughtered under the over-30-months scheme—0.418 per cent. BSE infectivity is most likely to be in the brain and spinal cord of cattle, which together weigh approximately 1 kg. On the assumption that the average carcase weighs 500kg, this equates to 550,000 tonnes of carcase material arising from the OTMS last year of which 4.6 tonnes—0.0008 per cent.—could have contained infectivity. In addition, the rendering process itself is expected to reduce any infectivity present fiftyfold.

The amount of infectivity per gram, if any, remaining in rendered material cannot be reliably established without conducting the tests on mice, referred to in the reply given to the hon. Member on 25 February 1997, Official Report, columns 193–94 which would take two years and would be extremely expensive.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the liability of providers of contaminated feedstuffs to the dairy and beef farming industry for the spread and costs of BSE; and if he will make a statement. [19593]

Mrs. Browning: This Department has received a number of letters from individuals and Members of Parliament querying the liability of providers of contaminated feedstuffs to the farming industry in the context of the cause and spread of BSE. To say how many and from whom they were received could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much was paid to Electophoretics International by his Department for work to find a diagnostic test for BSE. [20666]

Mrs. Browning: No money was paid to Electrophoretics International as the Ministry had not commissioned any work from it.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evaluation he has made of (a) the work to find a diagnostic test for BSE which was conducted for his Department by Electrophoretics International and (b) the value for money of that work. [20668]

Mrs. Browning: Electrophoretics International has not been commissioned to conduct work for MAFF, and no payment has been made to EI by MAFF. It is therefore not appropriate to consider evaluation or value for money.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which companies and research bodies have been commissioned by his Department to undertake work into finding a diagnostic test for BSE. [20663]

Mrs. Browning: The following organisations have been funded by MAFF to undertake work into finding a diagnostic test for BSE:

Central Veterinary Laboratory

Institute for Animal Health

Birmingham University

London Hospital Medical College

Animal Health Trust

Moredun Research Institute

University of Edinburgh.

A further contract with Newcastle University is in preparation.

An open competition for research funding for development of novel methods for the diagnosis of BSE was announced by MAFF to the international scientific community in August 1996. Proposals were reviewed by independent referees and three proposals from UK research laboratories were taken up for funding in January 1997 these are included in the list above. Two further proposals are being followed up; a joint proposal from two Swiss companies (Paul Scherrer Institute and CSEM, Centre Suisse D'Electronique Etude Microtechnique, S.A.) and the California Institute of Technology.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings took place between Ministers and officials of his Department and board members and officials of Electrophoretics International (a) prior to the contract for research into a diagnostic test for BSE being let, (b) during the life of the contract and (c) after the expiration date of the contract. [20667]

Mrs. Browning: The agreement was signed on 22 December 1995 and has not expired in respect of all its provisions. MAFF officials attended two meetings with Electrophoretics International representatives prior to the signing of the agreement and two meetings subsequently. This is in addition to contact between scientists from the Central Veterinary Laboratory, Weybridge and EI on research collaboration as provided for in the agreement.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what basis the contract between the Ministry of Agriculture and Electrophoretics International for research into a diagnostic test for BSE was tendered; how many others tenders were received; and what involvement Ministers had in the decision to let the contract to Electrophoretics International. [20665]

Mrs. Browning: The nature of the agreement between MAFF and Electrophoretics International was one of collaboration. The Ministry did not commission any work from EI. This was not a contract to develop a diagnostic test and a tendering process was not relevant.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the contract for research into a diagnostic test for BSE with Electrophoretics International ended; for what reasons it was not renewed; and what plans he has for further contracts with the company. [20669]

Mrs. Browning: MAFF has a collaborative agreement with Electrophoretics International which continues to operate. MAFF will continue to treat the company in the same way as all other bodies in relation to research and supply of materials. There are no plans for any further contracts with EI.

British Beef (Bans)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many states had banned British beef (a) before 1990 and (b) between 1990 and 1995; and how many have withdrawn their bans in the last year. [19755]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 12 March 1997]: One country introduced a ban on British beef before 1990. Thirty-four countries banned imports of British beef between 1990 and 1995. Restrictions were lifted in 14 countries before Commission decision 96/239/EC introduced a worldwide ban on the export of British beef on 27 March 1996.

Intervention Storage

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the minimum ecu prices per kilo paid to meat plants in (a) Great Britain and (b) Northern Ireland, for beef accepted for intervention storage since 1996. [20275]

Mr. Baldry: The minimum prices in ecu per kilo paid for offers of beef tendered since April 1996 are:

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the ecu prices per kilo achieved by meat plants for beef accepted for intervention storage in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland since 1996; and if he will make a statement on the reason for differential prices regionally for beef going into intervention storage. [18337]

Mr. Baldry [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1997, column 683]: Differential regional prices for intervention purposes occur only in the areas of Northern Ireland and Great Britain. Northern Ireland is considered a separate region for intervention purchases in recognition of the particular importance of the beef sector there, and the effect of its proximity to the Republic of Ireland market.

A list of the prices awarded since March 1996 follows:

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide figures for his Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93; and if he will list his latest estimates of annual totals for PFI projects, on the same basis as those given in table 5.5 of the Red Book. [20393]

Mr. Boswell: As I explained in my answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 10 March 1997, Official Report, column 50, MAFF's entry for 1999–00 in table 5.5 of the Red Book is an outline estimate for non-PFI procurement only which will be subject to change when PFI tenders have been received.

A breakdown, by project, of the schemes identified in table 5.5 of the Red Book is given in table 1. Current estimates are shown in table 2.

Correspondence

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons his Department has not replied to three letters from Mr. Comrie, the general secretary of the Association of Meat Inspectors, sent to him between June and December 1996. [20516]

Mrs. Browning: Mr. Comrie, general secretary of the Association of Meat Inspectors, wrote to me on 11 February 1997. This followed a meeting I held with the AMI on 16 January 1997 and the subsequent suggestions that the general secretary would write to me. I replied on 12 March 1997.

Aroparcin

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by livestock species the dates on which the licence for avoparcin's use as a feed antibiotic has been (a) revoked and (b) reinstated; and if he will make a statement. [20645]

Mrs. Browning: All licences for the use of avoparcin in animal feeding stuffs for all species will be revoked by 1 April 1997. The question of reinstatement does not arise.

Fisheries Organisations (Meetings)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the fishing organisations (a) he and (b) his officials have met since 1 July 1996. [20495]

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally and definitive lists could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. MAFF Ministers and officials have had meetings or other contract with a large number of national, regional and local fishing organisations since 1 July 1996 on a wide variety of matters. These have included:

Aberdeen Fish Producers Organisation;
Anglo-North Irish Fish Producers Organisation;
Anglo-Scottish Fish Producers Organisation;
Association of Sea Fisheries Committees;
Atlantic Salmon Trust;
Bideford Fishermen's Association;
British Trout Association
Cornish Fish Producers Organisation;
Cornwall Inshore Fishermen's Association;
Federation of Highlands and Islands Fishermen;
Fife Fish Producers Organisation;
Fish Producers Organisation Limited;
Fisherman's Association Limited;
Fishermen's Federation of Northumberland;
Fleetwood Fish Producers Organisation;
Fleetwood Fishing Forum;
Grimsby Fish Producers Organisation;
Leigh and Southend Fishermen's Association;
Lowestoft Fish Producers Organisation;
Mudeford and District Fishermen's Association
National Federation of Anglers;
National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations;
National Federation of Fishing and Angling Consultatives;
North Atlantic Salmon Fund;
North East Scotland Fish Producers Organisation;
North Sea Fishermen's Producer Organisation;
Northern Ireland Fish Producers Association;
Northern Producers Organisation;
Orkney Fishermen's Association;
Ramsgate Fishermen's Association;
Rye Fishermen's Association;
Salmon and Trout Association;
Scottish Fishermen's Federation;
Scottish Fishermen's Organisation;
Scottish Pelagic Fishermen's Association;
Shellfish Association of Great Britain;
Shetland Fish Producers Organisation;
South Devon and Channel Shellfishermen Limited;
South Western Fish Producers Organisation;
Southern Commercial Fishermen;
UK Association of Fish Producers Organisations;
Wales and West Coast Fish Producers Organisation;
West Mersea Fishermen's Association;
West of Scotland Fish Producers Organisation;
Whitstable Fishermen's Association;
Yorkshire and Anglia Fish Producers Organisation.

Animal Genome Mapping

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which is the lead Department for (a) animal genome mapping in the United Kingdom and (b) following up the recommendations of the committee of inquiry on ethics of emerging technologies in breeding of farm animals under the chairmanship of the Rev. Professor Michael Banner. [20421]

Mr. Boswell: (a) Whilst there is no one lead Department, research on animal genome mapping is funded by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Biotechnological and Biological Sciences Research Council. The BBSRC is administered by the Office of Science and Technology, which is part of the Department of Trade and Industry. There is close liaison between MAFF and BBSRC.

(b) The lead Department taking forward the recommendations of the committee to consider the ethical implications of emerging technologies in the breeding of farm animals is MAFF.

DEFENCE

Trafalgar Class Submarines

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place a contract for batch 2 Trafalgar class submarines; and if he will make a statement. [20655]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am pleased to announce that a contract has been placed with GEC-Marconi as prime contractors for the design, build and initial support of three batch 2 Trafalgar class submarines. The new boats will be known as the Astute class, and are expected to enter service early next century. The submarines will be built at GEC-Marconi's VSEL shipyard in Barrow.

The new vessels will be powered by the Rolls Royce PWR2 nuclear reactor, fitted with the updated weapons system of batch 1 Trafalgar class submarines, and armed with the Spearfish torpedo and Submarine-Harpoon anti-ship missile. They will be able to carry conventionally armed Tomahawk cruise missiles. The Astute class will replace the Royal Navy's existing Swiftsure class boats as these vessels reach the end of their operational lives in the early part of the next century. They will perform a wide range of roles including anti-submarine and anti-surface warfare.

The order was won in competition with VSEL, before the company was taken over by GEC-Marconi, and the decision was based on what would provide the best value for money for the taxpayer. The contract will be worth nearly £2 billion to GEC-Marconi and its sub-contractors, and will help to sustain around 7,000 jobs. It has been warmly welcomed by the Royal Navy, and is good news for Barrow and the many sub-contractors who will be working on the project across the UK.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, columns 710–11, if he will provide figures for his Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93. [20398]

Mr. Soames: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 6 March, Official Report, columns 710–11.

Eskmeals, Shoeburyness and Pendine Ranges

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will publish the consultative document on the land ranges rationalisation at Eskmeals, Shoeburyness and Pendine; and if he will make a statement. [20190]

Mr. Soames: The range at Pendine is not being reviewed as part of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency land ranges rationalisation study, which is considering defence requirements at Eskmeals, Cumbria and Shoeburyness, Essex. In the reply my hon. Friend, the Minister of State for Defence Procurement, gave my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor) on 12 March, Official Report, column 234, he said that he hoped to be in a position to approve the issue of a consultation document on the way ahead within a few weeks, and this remains his intention.

Works of Art

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made for the care and protection of works of art following the publication of the National Audit Office report in March 1996. [20323]

Mr. Soames: My Department has responded positively to the NAO's recommendations. A new system of accountability has been introduced whereby the senior staff who borrow works of art are now held personally responsible for them. Staff who move works of art without permission will lose their entitlement to borrow works and may face disciplinary action. Works of art in our London headquarters buildings are now inspected every night by our guard force and these checks will soon be extended to all our works of art.

The NAO guidance on management of works of art has been circulated throughout the Department and a seminar on this subject will be held during March.

All works of art owned by the Department or borrowed from public collections will be managed centrally and a photographic record has been compiled.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many of the 190 works of art missing from Defence establishments have been located since the publication of the National Audit Office report in March 1996; [20324]

(2) what steps he is taking to recover works of art missing from his Department's establishments. [20325]

Mr. Soames: The National Audit Office report states that, in November 1995, 184 works of art were missing. Of these, 107 were the property of my Department and the remainder were loans from other institutions. Since the publication of the NAO report, two of those belonging to my Department have been found.

Every effort is made to recover missing works of art. Details have been circulated to all staff and an inspector in the Ministry of Defence police has been given responsibility for finding missing works. Photographs of these have been published in my Department's staff magazine with a request that they should be notified to the police inspector if they are identified. We continue to make periodic searches of our buildings.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many paintings have been sold at auction by his Department in each of the past 10 years; and what were the sums realised. [20326]

Mr. Soames: No paintings have been sold at auction by my Department.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the painting of an officer of the 28th Foot on loan from the national army museum has been located. [20327]

Mr. Soames: My Department's response to the National Audit Office report stated that, despite a thorough investigation by the Ministry of Defence police, the portrait of an officer of the 28th Foot has not been found. This remains the case.

Nursery Vouchers (Overseas Personnel)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements his Department is making for those personnel stationed overseas, in respect of the Government's nursery voucher scheme; and if he will make a statement. [20807]

Mr. Soames: My Department is committed to making sure there is no educational disadvantage to families who would otherwise be entitled to receive vouchers if serving in the UK, so it intends to provide, wherever practicable, nursery education for four-year-olds overseas.

The MOD will endeavour to provide the same standard of nursery education as that on offer in the UK, but there will be a difference in the way it is run. In the UK, where there will be open competition between playgroups and schools, parents will potentially have a wide choice of places to use a voucher: overseas, the Service sponsor both schools and playgroups and the choice will inevitably be limited.

Therefore, rather than adopt the voucher system, the MOD intends to provide direct funding to schools and playgroups and nursery education will be free at source for all four-year olds who attend an accredited provider.

It is expected that there will be some locations with both schools and playgroups, some where there are only schools and some where there are only suitable playgroups. To reach the standards required by the Department for Education and Employment scheme, schools and playgroups overseas will need additional staff and training and pass inspection of an accredited authority.

Because the MOD needs to study the various option available to deliver nursery education and obtain funding, it has been necessary to delay introduction overseas from that anticipated in the UK. It is aimed to phase introduction from September 1997 to September 1998.

There will inevitably be some areas overseas, particularly smaller isolated detachments, where it will not be possible to offer the scheme that will be available in countries such as Germany and Cyprus. The MOD is though looking at ways to provide the best possible provisions wherever practicable and within the resources available—some form of voucher system to cover these locations may be considered. However, in some areas it may simply be impossible to provide any facility; parents will be warned of this in advance of being posted to such locations.

Housing (Privates)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average cost to his Department in the last year for which figures are available of housing (a) a military local service engagement private 1 and (b) a full engagement Regular private 1 band 1. [19730]

Mr. Soame: I regret that the information requested is unavailable in the format requested and figures cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost. Furthermore, the Military Provost Guard Service is only now forming.

Low Flying

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on low flying by the RAF in the vicinity of Seaham on Monday 3 and Tuesday 4 March between 12 noon and 5 p.m; [19941]

(2) if the flight paths of low flying exercises by the RAF now incorporate the vicinity of Seaham. [19944]

Mr. Soames: The RAF police have been tasked to investigate the activity of 3 and 4 March. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State will write to the hon. Member when these inquiries are complete. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Joint Services Defence College

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate his Department has made of the cost of using the temporary site at Bracknell for the joint services defence college. [19893]

Mr. Soames: To enable the joint services command and staff college to use Bracknell as its main interim site, additional capital expenditure estimated of some £10.2 million has been agreed to cover works, including the provision of temporary teaching and living accommodation, IT and relocation costs.

Pied à Terre (Quartermaster General)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of maintaining the pied à terre in London used by the Quartermaster General; and what paintings are located there. [20328]

Mr. Soames: The Quartermaster General does not have a pied à terre in London. He retains a London office on the seventh floor of MOD main building, and the following prints and paintings are hung there:

Paintings

Portrait of Princess Royal by Mark McGregor

Portrait of Duchess of Kent by Mark McGregor

Prints

"O The Roast Beef of Old England" by William Hogarth

"Sustaining Forward" by Terence Cuneo

"Sleigh Post (Russia 1919)" by Terence Cuneo.

Departmental Housing

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many homes are (a) currently owned by his Department and (b) vacant by local authority area. [20378]

Mr. Soames: There are 69,306 homes owned by the Ministry of Defence in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. The information on vacant homes is not held in the form requested and could be only provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the likely costs of making the properties at Mansergh close, Woolwich fit for habitation. [20382]

Mr. Soames: The properties at Mansergh close, Woolwich were passed as surplus to Annington Homes as part of the sale of the married quarter estate. Refurbishment costs are a matter for Annington Homes.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when construction of MOD homes at Mansergh close, Woolwich, was completed; when the properties were first occupied; for what reasons the properties are vacant; and how long they have been vacant. [20380]

Mr. Soames: There are 36 houses at Mansergh close, which were built in the late 1960s and early 1970s and occupied thereafter. The properties were vacated by June 1996, due largely to the reduction in service demand after the closure of the military hospital at Woolwich, and were passed as surplus to Annington Homes as part of the sale of the married quarters.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of Nomura Securities in the disposal of the married quarters estate. [20379]

Mr. Soames: The new owners of the married quarter estate are Annington Homes, a British-based company. MOD's continuing relationship on the married quarter estate is with this company. Finance for the transaction was arranged by Nomura International plc, the European arm of Nomura Securities, not the parent company in Tokyo.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the costs of security for the empty properties at Mansergh close, SE18; and if he will make a statement. [20381]

Mr. Soames: The properties at Mansergh close, SE18 were passed as surplus to Annington Homes as part of the sale of the married quarters estate. The security of these properties is the responsibility of Annington Homes.

Infantry

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the strength of front-line infantry for each of the past 10 years. [20363]

Mr. Soames: The figures for front-line infantry can be provided only for the past four years and are shown below.

Year	Totals
1994	28,000
1995	26,000
1997	24,000

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 March, Official Report, column 185, what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the current front-line infantry establishment to meet its responsibilities. [20362]

Mr. Soames: The infantry is fully able to meet its responsibilities.

Gulf War

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many anthrax vaccine injections were given to British soldiers in the Gulf war; and over what period. [20450]

Mr. Soames: The programme of vaccination against anthrax which was implemented by the MOD for British troops in the Gulf war commenced at the start of January 1991. It consisted of a course of three vaccinations, which were to be administered at 0, three and seven weeks. Owing to deficiencies in contemporary medical record keeping, the exact number of anthrax inoculations given to British soldiers in the Gulf war is not known.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will next meet the Russian Defence Minister. [20806]

Mr. Portillo: At the invitation of Defence Minister Rodionov, I shall be in Moscow on 17–18 March for discussions with him. I also hope to see other members of the Russian Government. We plan to sign a new memorandum of understanding covering bilateral defence co-operation between the United Kingdom and Russia, which will provide a framework for building on the significant bilateral defence relationship established with Russia in recent years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mobile Telephone Antennae

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the number of masts and antennae required to meet the projected growth in the use of mobile telephones over the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [19826]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The number of telecommunications masts required by an operator depends largely on the future coverage planned by that operator, the future volume of traffic it expects on its network in any specific area, and technological developments in antenna design. No estimates are made of the number of masts required by operators over future years since these factors are commercial matters for each individual operator.

The erection of telecommunications masts is regulated by the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 and the licence issued to operators under the Telecommunications Act 1984. The Government regard mast sharing as highly desirable in order to help keep the number of masts to a minimum, and require mobile phone operators to take all reasonable steps to investigate using an existing mast or other structure before seeking to erect a new mast.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidance he has issued on the installation of antennae required for mobile telephones (a) on school buildings and (b) on other locations used by (i) children and (ii) the sick; and if he will make a statement. [19827]

Mr. Taylor: We issue no specific guidance on the installation of mobile telecommunications equipment in these locations. The operators of the equipment have a number of recommendations and requirements to follow.

In March of last year, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales published a code of best practice on the installation of radio masts up to 15 m in height using permitted development rights. Installation of radio masts above 15m in height are governed by normal planning guidance.

A Wireless Telegraphy Act licence may specify spectrum performance requirements, for example in relation to frequency assignment and power output. All equipment installed in the UK will have been approved to the relevant national or European—European Telecommunications Standards Institute—standards on performance, and must comply with provisions of the electromagnetic compatibility directive. The operators also follow guidance from the National Radiological Protection Board on exposure to non-ionising radiation.

Precautionary advice concerning possible interference with medical equipment from mobile telecommunications devices used by the public has also been issued by the Department of Health.

Radioactive Materials (Transport)

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the civil police provide escorts for type B containers of civil radioactive materials transported by road at the request of the material's owners; and if he will make a statement. [19937]

Mr. Page: The civil police do not escort type B containers of radioactive materials transported by road. The UK Atomic Energy Authority constabulary escorts these containers when necessary.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the tasks of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority police include escorting type B containers of civil radioactive materials transported by road in the ownership of (a) the UKAEA and (b) other owners; and if he will make a statement. [19936]

Mr. Page: The UK Atomic Energy Authority constabulary provides escorts for road transport of type B containers holding certain civil radioactive materials owned by or under the control of BNFL, UKAEA and URENCO. The security standards laid down for the physical protection of nuclear material and the need for the material to be escorted are dependent on the type, form and quantity of the material, not the type of container holding it. The standards followed are in accord with international guidelines.

Atomic Energy Authority Police

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the annual cost of the UK Atomic Energy Authority police in the past five years; and what has been its establishment in each of the past five years. [19934]

Mr. Page: The annual costs of the UK Atomic Energy Authority constabulary for the past five years are as follows:

Year	£ million
1991–92	18.1
1992–93	18.8
1993–94	17.3
1995–96	17.6

Detailed information on the establishment of the AEAC is published in the AEAC chief constable's annual report. Copies of the 1991–92 and 1992–93 annual reports are available in the Library of the House, and I am arranging for copies of the 1993–94, 1994–95, and 1995–96 annual reports to be placed there. The 1996–97 report will also be placed in the Library of the House when it is published later this year.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his most recent communication with the private sector to draw attention to the problem of the millennium compliance of computer systems. [20122]

Mr. Ian Taylor: This month I am writing to 120,000 chief executives of British businesses to impress upon them the urgency and seriousness of the century date change problem. To help them focus on the main issues, I will set out a check list of seven vital questions which they should ask about the ability of their systems to handle the problem and I will explain how they can get further information.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his most recent discussions with his EU counterparts on the millennium compliance of computer systems. [20123]

Mr. Taylor: At the Telecommunications Council on 6 March, I again raised the problem of the century date change for computer systems. I have also written to Commissioner Bangemann suggesting that the Commission should draw the attention of European industry to the problem and should consider voluntary means of avoiding disruption from the failure of companies to act quickly. I also suggested that the "Definition of Year 2000 Conformity Requirement" developed by the British Standards Institution should be considered by the International Standards Organisation.

Minimum Wage

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimates he has made of the effect of a minimum wage of £4.26 per hour with 50 per cent. restoration of wage differentials on the number of jobs in the United Kingdom. [20318]

Mr. John M. Taylor: In December 1995, my officials estimated that a minimum wage set at £4.26, as advocated by last year's Trades Union Congress, would lead to the loss of more than 1 million jobs with only half restoration of wage differentials.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the President of the Board of Trade pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, column 703, if he will provide figures for his Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93. [20386]

Mr. John M. Taylor: No. Figures for my Department's PFI projects cannot be provided in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Sectary, Lord Chancellor's Department as contracts for the projects referred to in my answer to hon. Member for Darlington, on 6 March 1997, Official Report, column 703, have not yet been signed, except for the Coal Authority's IT system for mining and surface damage reports, and our estimates of the level of private sector investment are therefore commercially sensitive.

Radio Spectrum

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who has been awarded the contract for the management and licensing of the radio spectrum used for making programmes and similar activities. [20989]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I announced on 13 June 1996, Official Report, column 269 my intention to appoint a single spectrum management organisation with responsibility for licensing all programme making spectrum.

JFMG Ltd., has been awarded the contract for managing the radio spectrum used for programme making. The award followed competitive tender which the Radiocommunications Agency conducted.

The new contract runs for three years from 1 April, with the option of a two-year extension. JFMG Ltd. is authorised under the Contracting Out (Functions relating to Wireless Telegraphy) Order 1996 to grant, on the Secretary of State's behalf, licences to programme makers. These include programme production companies, broadcaster, outside broadcast companies, film companies, theatres and conference centres, and participants in sporting events.

The new contract will give all programme makers access to the available spectrum on equal terms. It will also allow the more efficient and flexible use of the spectrum in a rapidly developing industry.

The contract replaces arrangements that have operated since 1990. Under them, the spectrum available for programme making has been divided into two distinct pools. Each pool has been managed separately by ASP Frequency Management Ltd. and the Broadcasters' JFMG Ltd. Their contracts terminate on 31 March.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Telecommunications Council on 6 March. [20990]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I represented the UK at the Telecommunications Council held in Brussels on 6 March.

The Council adopted a directive on licensing in telecommunications. Greece and Germany voted against. Additionally, a decision for EU action on the introduction of satellite personal communication services was adopted without discussion.

There was political agreement to adopting shortly of a common position on a directive concerning the application of open network provision to voice telephony in a competitive environment.

Additionally, the presidency gave a progress report on co-decision procedures under way with the European Parliament and the European Commission made presentations on: a forthcoming Commission communication on universal mobile telecommunications systems; a Commission action plan in the field of satellite communications and on implementation by member states of Community legislation in the telecommunications sector.

I again raised the problem of the century date change for computer systems, having written to Commissioner Bangemann suggesting that the Commission draw European industry's attention to the problem and consider non-legislative means of avoiding disruption within the single market by failure of companies to act quickly.

Scientific Advice

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the use of scientific advice in policy making. [20991]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Scientific advice plays an essential part in policy making. We are today publishing guidelines for good practice in this area, which I am placing in the Library of the House. The guidelines, drawn up by the chief scientific adviser, Sir Robert May, will help Government Departments to maintain the highest standards of integrity and openness in their use of scientific advice. Their publication reinforces our commitment to open government.

The guidelines set out key principles on the use and presentation of scientific advice in policy making. They emphasise the need to identify potentially sensitive issues as early as possible, to draw on a wide range of expert advice and to have a presumption to openness in explaining the interpretation of scientific advice. The guidelines have been drafted in consultation with Government Departments and with the main science academies and the Council for Science and Technology.

Child Labour

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions have taken place within the World Trade Organisation concerning the use of child labour within member countries. [19607]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 12 March 1997]: The issue of abusive labour practices, including abuse of child labour, was discussed in the context of trade liberalisation objectives at the WTO ministerial conference in Singapore in December 1996. There is, however, no substantive work programme to eliminate abuse of child labour or current discussion taking place within WTO since, as it was agreed in Singapore, this is the proper preserve of the International Labour Organisation.

Unigate

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what industrial development grants (a) have been made and (b) are under consideration, and for what purposes, to Unigate for its St. Ivel operation in Liverpool. [20126]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 13 March 1997]: I cannot comment on discussion between individual companies and the Department, as they are commercially confidential.

Business Breakfast Tour

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade with whom he consulted as to the propriety of spending public money on the business breakfast tour; and if he will make a statement. [19247]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The business breakfast initiative aims to develop a dialogue between Government and business at a local level. I took advice on this initiative from my accounting officer and other officials. I have been careful to ensure that all the breakfasts have been strictly confined to presentations of Government policy and providing business representatives the opportunity to express their views.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Information Offices

Mr. Lamont: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 425, if he will list the types of offices the EU has worldwide to disseminate information, indicating (a) the number of each type of office and (b) what each type costs in pounds sterling. [20061]

Mr. David Davis: Except as noted below, European Commission offices in third countries take the form either of delegations, in countries outside the EU, or representations, in the member states. There are 128 delegations and 23 representations. Most of these 151 posts have some capacity for information activity, though the proportion of this activity to other elements of the posts' work varies, but only in Washington, New York and Tokyo do the delegations' information sections have the title information offices.

In addition, there are 32 EU business centres in Asia and Latin America, whose purpose is to promote trade between the EU and the country concerned; and 250 Euro-Info correspondence centres in the European Economic Area, central and eastern Europe and the Mediterranean area, whose purpose is to act as a link between small and medium-size businesses in the EU and third countries. EBCs and EICCs are not freestanding offices, and are normally run as part of local trade promotion organisations such as chambers of commerce, with which they are generally co-located.

There is no figure readily available showing the disaggregated running costs of the Commission's information activities overseas, but in 1996 the total budget for the running costs of Commission delegations outside the EU was £152 million. Running costs for the four Commission representation offices in the UK were £1.3 million

I gave my right hon. Friend details of the overall budget for all EU information and communication activities in 1997 in my separate answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 484.

In Council discussions of the Commission's budget, we always underline the need for the utmost rigour in all expenditure, including information activity. In recent years, the Council has regularly reduced the relevant budget allocation, but the European Parliament has restored it.

EU–British Constitutional Relationship (Referendum)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the Government's policy to hold a referendum before a major change in Britain's constitutional relationship with the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [20011]

Mr. David Davis: We have made it clear that we would not accept in the current intergovernmental conference significant constitutional change that would justify a referendum.

However, as my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 3 April 1996, if the Government decided to apply to join a single European currency during the next Parliament, that decision would be subject to confirmation in a referendum.

Prisoner Swaps

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on prisoner swaps between the United Kingdom and other countries. [20155]

Dr. Liam Fox: We believe that, on humanitarian grounds, prisoners should be able to serve their sentences in their own country.

The UK is party to the Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons and the Commonwealth scheme for the transfer of convicted offenders. In addition, we have bilateral agreements with Thailand and Egypt, and are working to conclude similar arrangements with other countries.

Venezuela (Detainees)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with the families of Stephen Miles and Paul Loseby, currently detained in Venezuela. [20156]

Dr. Liam Fox: The families of both men met Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials on 26 November, and Mr. Miles's father met embassy officials in Caracas on 28 November. Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials are in close contact with the families.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to secure the release of Stephen Miles and Paul Loseby, detained in Venezuela; what assessment he has made of the conditions in which they are detained; what representations he has (a) made and (b) received from the Venezuelan authorities on this matter, indicating the dates of all correspondence; and when he next expects to take measures to secure their release. [20189]

Dr. Fox: The release of James Miles and Paul Loseby is a matter for the Venezuelan authorities.

Following written representations by the British ambassador on 19 November 1996, the two men are being held in La Vega police cells, where conditions are better than in the prison where they would otherwise be held.

That was the last correspondence we have sent to the Venezuelan authorities, from whom we have received no representations.

Overseas Press Service

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had with commercial organisations concerning the future of the overseas press service of the Central Office of Information. [20280]

Mr. Hanley: This Department advertised the tender for the future provision of the overseas press service in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 16 August 1996. Eleven companies—all British—responded. Following evaluation, six were shortlisted and were visited for on-site presentations and discussions on how they proposed to provide the service if their bid was successful. Negotiations with the preferred bidder are close to finalisation.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to privatise the overseas press service of the Central Office of Information. [20281]

Mr. Hanley: This Department has been working towards privatisation of the overseas press service on 1 April 1997. Negotiations with the preferred bidder are close to finalisation.

St. Helena

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding British dependent territory citizenship from the Legislative Council of St. Helena. [20349]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The Legislative Councillors of St. Helena have addressed a petition to my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary on citizenship. We are considering with other Departments what might be done beyond existing arrangements to increase employment opportunities in the UK for St. Helenians. We are replying to the petition accordingly.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the reasons for the Governor of St. Helena not renewing the residence permit of Mr. Mikael Olsson to enable him to extend his stay on St. Helena. [20427]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Mr. Mikael Olsson was a visitor to St. Helena. He did not have a residence permit. After almost a year on the island, his leave to remain as a visitor expired on 8 March. This is a matter between Mr. Olsson and the immigration officer on St. Helena.

Former Yugoslavia (War Crimes)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the individuals indicted as war criminals by the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia who have not been arrested; if he will indicate the jurisdiction in which each of these is believed to reside; what actions are being taken by the national Governments responsible for these jurisdictions to carry out UN resolutions regarding the enforcement of tribunal orders; and what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to enforce the tribunal orders through the international peace force in Bosnia-Herzegovina. [20351]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Details of individuals indicted by the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and their last known whereabouts have been place in the Libraries of the House.

Those indicated by the tribunal who are still at large are believed to reside in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina. Bosnia-Herzegovina has executed two arrest warrants. It has not arrested any indictees resident in the Republika Srpksa and the Croat part of the federation on the grounds that it lacks control over these areas. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia has transferred two witnesses in detention for other reasons to the tribunal. It has not arrested any of the indictees believed to be at large in its territory. The Republic of Croatia has arrested one indictee on its territory, but he has not yet been transferred to the tribunal. Croatia negotiated the voluntary surrender of another indictee to the tribunal. Other indictees in Croatia remain at large.

NATO has decided that the stabilisation force will detain and transfer to the tribunal any indicted individuals with whom they come into contact in the course of their duties and if the situation permits.

Know-how Funds

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the funding being made available from the know-how funds during 1997 and the countries and the type of project such funding is being used for. [20179]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Planned expenditure by the know-how fund in the financial year 1996–97 is as follows:

For projects in:

	£000
Central Europe
Albania/Macedonia/Slovenia	2,400
Baltic States	2,200
Bosnia/Croatia/FRY	1,750
Bulgaria	2,700
Czech Republic	2,300
Hungary	4,500
Poland	10,600
Romania	5,000
Slovakia	2,500
Regional (multi-country), including Environment KHF	4,600
Eastern Europe and Central Asia (EECA)
Kazakhstan	2,000
Russia	28,000
Ukraine	9,000
Other EECA countries	4,600
Regional (including Chancellor's Scheme and Environment KHF)	2,630
Investment schemes (Central and Eastern Europe and Central Asia)	2,500

Expenditure is planned at similar levels in 1997–98. The KHF funds projects in a range of sectors, focusing on certain priorities. In the whole region, priorities include financial services, privatisation, small and medium enterprise development, good government and civil society. In central Europe, priorities are also management training, public administration and employment services. In Russia and elsewhere in eastern Europe and central Asia, other priorities are energy, agriculture reform and health management.

Gibraltar

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the EU social protocols apply to Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement. [19961]

Mr. David Davis: As the EC treaty applies to Gibraltar by virtue of the UK's membership, the agreement of the 14 on social policy annexed to protocol 14 to the EC treaty does not apply there.

Adriactic Section

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those individuals who are not officials of his Department who advise his Department's Adriatic section. [20330]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Officials from eastern Adriatic department consult widely with colleagues in other Government Departments. We do not employ outside advisers in this area.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, column 703, if he will provide figures for his Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer tot he hon. Member for Darlington of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93. [20387]

Mr. Hanley: I regret that publication in the form requested would not be appropriate in the case of projects involving this Department since it could prejudice the nature of the competition within the PFI process.

EU Logo

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what EU instrument a decision was made empowering EU institutions to insist on the use of the EU logo by recipients of EU grants; if it was decided by majority voting; and what was Her Majesty's Government's position at the time. [20439]

Mr. David Davis: Council regulation 2082/93 requires that member states ensure adequate publicity is given to measures carried out with financial assistance from the structural funds. Commission decision 94/342/EC sets out the detailed arrangements, including use of the EU logo, in accordance with the Council regulation.

The Council regulation was adopted unanimously as one of a package of six regulations concerning the structural funds.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Castle Buildings Talks

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will specify the powers under which he paid the income tax liabilities of delegates to the Castle Buildings talks; how much was involved; what budget the money came from; and if this facility has been made available to staff. [19929]

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 13 March 1997]: Allowances to delegates are paid under the authority of section 6 of the Northern Ireland (Entry to Negotiations, etc) Act 1996. For the current financial year, allowances to them for which tax is due will be paid at a grossed-up rate, so that individuals receive sums equivalent to the allowances untaxed. The cost for the current year in respect of the talks will be approximately £109,000. The cost falls under subhead A2 of the Northern Ireland Office vote 1. Staff employed by parties and Governments participating in the talks are not subject to the same regime of allowances, and are not therefore subject to the arrangements above.

Northern Ireland Grand Committee

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to permit the relevant policy-making civil servants to be questioned at Northern Ireland Grand Committee meetings called to discuss draft Orders in Council; and if he will make a statement about the advantages of introducing a process to amend such orders. [18753]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: No. Since it is Ministers, not civil servants, who make policy, it is for Ministers, not civil servants, to account to Parliament for the Government's legislative proposals.

Orders in council are, by their nature, unamendable once laid before the House, but in respect of Northern Ireland there are already consultation procedures, including discussion in the Northern Ireland Grand Committee, which give ample opportunity to those who wish to register their views on legislative provisions while they are still in draft form, and for Ministers to take due note of such views.

Hip Joint Operations

Mr. A Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what age criteria apply to the allocation of hip joint operations. [20364]

Mr. Moss: There are no age criteria for those seeking hip joint operations.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, columns 721–22, if he will provide figures for this Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93. [20392]

Sir John Wheeler: The table gives an update to the figures included in my answer to the hon. Member for Darlington on 6 March, Official Report, columns 721–22. The figures show the current estimate of what NI Departments expect to be agreed. The list is subject to variation as project time scales may change, new projects may arise and some of those listed may not be taken forward if they fail the value for money test:

PRIME MINISTER

Refuge Projects (Funding)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister (1) which Departments have funded children and homeless charities central London refuge projects providing temporary havens for children in the last 15 years; [20406]

(2) if he will estimate the central Government share of the average costs of providing four days refuge in a safe supervised haven project for a child aged under 16 years in central London; [20408]

(3) when Ministers last discussed the need for and possible means of funding temporary safe havens for runaway children below the age of 16 years in central London; [20407]

(4) if he will review the practicality of instigating a central London children's refuge empowered to negotiate a cost contribution with individual social services departments in order to admit a child on the first day of need. [20409]

The Prime Minister: The Department of Health has funded children and homeless charities in London on projects providing a refuge for children as defined in the Children Act 1989. Figures are not available to estimate the central Government share of the average cost of providing four days' refuge, but the Department of Health has provided £300,000 over four years in respect of the London-based Centrepoint Glaxo refuge. Department of Health Ministers have met and discussed funding arrangements with voluntary organisations running the London refuge on several occasions; the last meeting was in September 1996. The Government have introduced legislation that enables the establishment of refuges that provide safe havens for children who appear to be at risk of harm. It is for local authorities and other agencies to work together to provide strategic solutions to the provision and funding of services for children in need—including young runaways. The Department of the Environment, as part of the rough sleepers initiative in central London, has funded Centrepoint in providing accommodation for young people, usually 18 to 25-year-olds, at a hostel in Vauxhall and for its "Off the Streets" project in Soho. DOE funding for the Vauxhall hostel is £165,000 in 1996–97. In addition, Centrepoint receives funding to provide emergency shelters for young people aged 25 years and under between December and March as part of the annual winter shelter programme under the RSI. In 1996–97, the DOE is funding Centrepoint to run a winter shelter in King's Cross, providing up to 48 bedspaces.

Roisin McAliskey

Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have recently received from the German Government concerning the imprisonment in Holloway prison of Ms Roisin McAliskey; and if he will make a statement. [20426]

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, none.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Birthing Partner (Definition)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the definition of a birthing partner within the Home Office prison regulations. [19715]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 13 March 1997]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the definition of a birthing partner within the Home Office Prison Regulations.

The Prison Service has not sought to define a birthing partner outside of any definition used elsewhere. The Prison Service interprets the term birthing partner as referring to someone who will be present during the whole period of labour to provide emotional support to the mother.

Roisin McAliskey

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on whose authority a label was attached to newspapers sent to Ms Roisin McAliskey stating that they were not to be issued to her until she complained or a parliamentary question was tabled. [19716]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 13 March 1997]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about a label attached to newspapers sent to Ms Roisin McAliskey.

Ms McAliskey, like all prisoners, may receive any newspapers she requires from a local newsagent. She is not allowed to receive newspapers direct through the post. On one occasion newspapers were received in the post. They were not issued but kept so that they could be handed to her family when they visited. Again, this is standard practice with items received for prisoners which they may not have.

A sticker had been attached to the newspapers stating that the papers should not be issued until a complaint was received or a Question asked.

As soon as this was brought to the governor's attention he ordered an immediate investigation under the terms of the Prison Service Code of Discipline. The member of staff responsible for this extremely ill judged and wholly unacceptable behaviour has been orally reprimanded and warned about future behaviour.

I apologise unreservedly for this woeful episode. I am satisfied that swift and appropriate action was taken to deal with the incident.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 214, what decisions have been made concerning arrangements for the care of Roisin McAliskey's baby should she give birth while still in prison; and if those decisions were an operational or policy matter. [20072]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the decision as to whether Roisin McAliskey may keep her baby with her at Holloway prison.

Roisin McAliskey applied on 14 February to be located on the Mother and Baby Unit at Holloway with her baby after it is born. Her application was considered, following the normal processes which apply to all expectant mothers, by the Admissions Board at Holloway, who considered the views of independent experts in the development needs of babies, as well as logistical issues.

The Assessment Board has now advised the Governor that Roisin McAliskey's application should be approved, the Governor has recommended approval and this recommendation has been accepted by the Operational Director responsible for Holloway. Ms McAliskey has been told that she may keep her baby with her after the birth. She will, as do all other mothers, have to sign a compact agreeing to be of reasonable behaviour and to co-operate with the ethos and regime of the Unit. Babies in the Unit normally remain with their mothers until the age of nine months.

The decision to allow Roisin McAliskey to keep her baby has followed the standard procedures and processes that would apply to any other prisoner.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the alterations in the prison regime and rules governing the treatment of Roisin McAliskey subsequent to her recategorisation. [20019]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the alterations to the treatment of Roisin McAliskey following her recategorisation.

Following a routine review of her security status Roisin McAliskey remains a Category A prisoner but has been downgraded from high risk to standard risk within that category. As a result some of the security arrangements which have been in operation have been relaxed.

The number of strip searches to which Roisin McAliskey had been subject has been reduced and she is no longer being strip searched before and after every open visit within the prison. She is now only being strip searched on the same basis as all other prisoners at Holloway. This means before leaving the prison for court appearances and on return to the prison; as part of a cell search and drug testing procedures; on a random basis; or if there were reasonable suspicion she had secreted something about her person. These arrangements took effect on 7 March.

Further relaxations as a consequence of the security review will take effect from 13 March. As a result, she will be able to attend chapel, to use the gym and the swimming pool, and to attend ante-natal classes with other prisoners. The number of overnight security checks will be reduced so that the light in her cell can be extinguished for most of the night.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 430, if he will support the request of Roisin McAliskey to be accompanied by two close relatives during her confinement should she remain remanded in custody. [20020]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the request of Roisin McAliskey to be accompanied by two close relatives during her confinement.

As I stated in my reply to your previous question, we have already agreed to Ms McAliskey's request. She will be allowed to have the birthing partners she has requested unless the hospital staff raise any objection on medical grounds.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the security categorisation given to Roisin McAliskey; and if the determination of such categorisation is an operational or policy matter. [20018]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the security categorisation of Roisin McAliskey.

Both Ministers and the Prison Service have received numerous representations on Ms McAliskey's behalf, and many of these refer to the conditions in which she is being held. These conditions stem, in part from her status as a category A prisoner.

The decision as to the appropriate security category for an individual prisoner is an operational one. Ms McAliskey's security category was set after consideration of the reason for her detention and the risk she would pose should she escape from custody. Her security category is kept under regular review and was recently changed from category A (high risk) to category A (standard risk).

Prisons (Drugs)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers, or other prison staff, have been disciplined or dismissed as a result of being involved in the supply of drugs in prisons, for such recent years as figures are available; and whether criminal prosecutions were brought in such cases. [19760]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 13 March 1997]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Sir Ivan Lawrence, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about how many prison officers, or other prison staff, have been disciplined or dismissed as a result of being involved in the supply of drugs in prisons, for such recent years as figures are available; and whether criminal prosecutions were brought in such cases.

Since the introduction of the new Prison Service Code of Conduct and Discipline in July 1993 (which required that the outcome of all disciplinary cases should be reported to Headquarters), centrally-held records show that no members of staff have been disciplined for involvement in the supply of drugs in prisons.

However, in one case a member of staff was dismissed after he was found to be in possession of cannabis in the prison club. Three members of staff were dismissed as a result of criminal convictions involving possession of drugs, but these concerned incidents away from the prison. And, in a further two cases, members of staff resigned before any disciplinary action could be taken over allegations of illegal possession of drugs, again away from the prison.

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many investigations have been carried out by the Prison Service Agency, since its inception, into allegations of the involvement of prison officers in the supply of drugs in prisons. [19762]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 13 March 1997]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Sir Ivan lawrence, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of investigations which have been carried out by the Prison Service Agency, since its inception, into allegations of the involvement of prison officers in the supply of drugs in prison.

I regret that this information is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However, any such allegations would be fully investigated and the appropriate action taken, including referral to the police.

Prisoners (Purposeful Activity)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 January to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth), Official Report, column 352–66, on the levels of purposeful activity in individual prisons, for what reason the figures for privately managed prisons for 1995–96 were not included; and if he will make a statement on his policy towards the release of information relating to privately managed prisons. [19043]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 March 1997]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Sir Ivan Lawrence, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking about purposeful activity at privately managed prisons in 1995–96 and about what information is released about these prisons.

The figures for 1995–96 are not available on a monthly basis. The average hours per prisoner per week spent on purposeful activity in each contracted prison in 1995–96 were:

Prison[1]	Average hours per week purposeful activity[2]
Blakenhurst	25
Wolds	29

[1] Figures are not available for Buckley Hall as it was not fully operational during 1995–96.

[2] These figures were published in October 1996 in the Home Office Economics Unit's review of comparative costs and performance of privately and publicly operated prisons in 1995–96.

All four contracted prisons have been providing figures for purposeful activity on a monthly basis from April 1996.

The Prison Service releases all available information about contracted prisons that is not confidential. Information may be confidential for different reasons. It may be because the information is commercially confidential or because of reasons that apply equally to all prisons such as information about security.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what occasions (a) remand and (b) convicted prisoners in HMP Holloway are required to be strip searched; if he will place in the Library the regulations concerning how such body searches should be carried out; what training is given to officers to ensure such searches are conducted in accordance with the law; if prisoners who are pregnant are exempt from such body searches; and if he will make a statement. [19739]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 March 1997]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Max Madden, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions about strip searching of prisoners.

Both remand and convicted prisoners at Holloway are strip searched on first reception, before leaving the prison on any escort, and on their subsequent return; when their cells are searched in accordance with the local searching strategy (roughly once a month); and if they are received into the segregation unit. In addition, prisoners are liable to random strip searches after visits. The governor may also require a strip search on any occasion when this is necessary for security.

The regulations covering strip searches are contained in Prison Rule 39, and in the Prison Service Manual on Security, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Prison officers are trained in the authorised procedures for strip searching on their initial training course and receive refresher training as required.

Pregnant women are not exempt from strip searches.

Strip searching is a routine and necessary security measure to which all prisoners are subject. It enables prison officers to detect items of contraband, such as drugs or a weapon, which may be concealed about the person. It is not possible to detect some illicit items by use of X-ray portals or hand-held metal detectors.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) remand and (b) convicted prisoners, detained at Her Majesty's prison Holloway over the last year have been required to authorise the destruction of flowers sent to them; and what arrangements exist for prisoners to request that flowers which they have received are placed in other parts of the prison. [19741]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 March 1997]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Max Madden, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the requirement for prisoners to authorise the destruction of flowers sent to them at Holloway prison and the arrangements for prisoners to request that flowers are placed in other parts of the prison.

No prisoners have been required to authorise the destruction of flowers at Holloway prison. There are no established arrangements for prisoners to request that flowers they have received are placed in other parts of the prison.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the education programmes at HMP Holloway in 1997; what assessment he has made of the impact of those plans on prisoners, with particular reference to the amount of time spent confined to cells; and if he will make a statement. [19745]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 March 1997]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Max Madden, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about education programmes at Holloway prison.

There are no plans to make any changes to the level of educational provision at Holloway prison during 1997. There is currently an average of 80 prisoners on the daytime programme, studying for 21 hours a week. There is an average of 18 prisoners on evening classes for 6 hours a week.

The average time a prisoner at Holloway prison is unlocked is currently 10.5 hours per weekday.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances (a) remand and (b) convicted prisoners, detained at HMP Holloway, are required to accept deductions from income in respect of board and lodging charges; and if he will make a statement. [19742]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 March 1997]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Max Madden, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about deductions of income at Holloway prison in respect of board and lodging charges.

Deductions are made from prisoners in jobs where they are paid 'real wages'. These prisoners contribute 25 per cent of their earnings to the prison—up to a maximum of £24 a week.

There are currently six prisoners employed full-time in such positions, each earning an average of approximately £75 a week. In addition, up to 40 prisoners are employed on a casual basis earning on average approximately £20 a week.

With the exception of one of the full-time positions—which involves working outside the prison and is therefore restricted to convicted prisoners—these jobs are open to both convicted and unconvicted prisoners.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, column 699, if he will provide figures for his Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93. [20388]

Mr. Howard: A breakdown by project of the Home Office's private finance initiative schemes, as identified in table 5.5 of the Red Book, is given in table 1. Current estimates for the projects are shown in table 2.

Special Secure Units

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 27 February, Official Report, columns 289–90, if he will list those recommendations which have been implemented through amendments to the SSU operating standards; if he will introduce a system of open visits which incorporates measures to prevent the smuggling of unauthorised items to prisoners; and if he will make a statement. [20365]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the implementation of the recommendations of the Acheson Report.

The following recommendations have been implemented through amendments to the special secure unit (SSU) Operating Standards:

Recommendation 1

Given the short duration of the present regime it is premature to come to a firm conclusion on its impact on prisoners health. We therefore advised that the general health of prisoners contained in SSUs be reviewed at regular intervals, taking into account their degree of susceptibility to psychological symptoms.

Response

The Operating Standards have been amended to require that in future medical officers should undertake formal reviews of the health of prisoners detained in the SSU every three months.

Recommendation 2

A standard set of procedures applicable to all SSUs should be devised, circulated to all parties and enforced to ensure the most expeditious transfer of prisoners requiring emergency treatment to NHS hospitals.

Response

The Operating Standards have been amended to emphasise the importance of prompt action.

Recommendation 6

Sentence planning should be introduced as with other long term prisoners.

Response

The overriding consideration in determining the length of time a prisoner spends in the Unit must be security. However, the Operating Standards have been amended to provide that regular formal review of SSU prisoners should be introduced (linked to Recommendation 1 above) to cover health, behaviour and attitude, etc.

The following recommendation has not been implemented:

Recommendation 8

It is the unanimous view of the group that in the interests of health prisoners in the SSUs should have access to open visits with members of immediate family.

Response

The Prison Service has considered Sir Donald Acheson's recommendation that prisoners in SSUs should have access to open visits with members of their immediate family. The Service has made numerous improvements to the security of SSUs but closed visits represent the only guaranteed means of preventing the passage of unauthorised items between prisoner and visitors. Closed visits therefore remain a necessary security measure.

The remaining recommendations endorsed existing policy.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place (a) the 1989 Home Office research and planning unit report into special secure units and (b) the 1990 report of the board of visitors of HMP Leicester on the special secure unit in the Library. [20058]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the 1989 Home Office Research and Planning Unit Report on special secure units and the 1990 Board of Visitors report on the special secure unit at Leicester.

A copy of the 1989 Research and Planning Unit report was sent to the Library at the time of publication. The 1990 Leicester Board of Visitors report was not published. The decision on whether to publish a report from a local board of visitors to the Home Secretary rests with the board itself.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if provision of a minimum period of undisturbed rest within a reasonably dark environment for the purpose of sleep is a right or a privilege within a special secure unit; and what opportunities are available to a prisoner to complain about frequent or unnecessary interruptions of their pattern of sleep. [19940]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the provision of a minimum period of sleep for prisoners in a special secure unit.

Exceptional risk Category A prisoners in SSUs (and other Category A prisoners elsewhere) are observed at hourly intervals throughout the night for security reasons. Observation takes place from outside the cell to avoid disturbing the prisoner by opening the cell door or switching on the main cell lights.

Prisoners in SSUs have access to the same grievance procedures as other prisoners. Complaints may be made orally to prison staff or in writing in accordance with the Prison Service request and complaints procedure. Prisoners may also refer complaints and grievances to the Board of Visitors or the Prisons Ombudsman. Complaints may also be lodged via members of parliament, legal representatives, embassies (where appropriate) and others.

Prisons (Open Visits)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances a prison governor may exercise his discretion in granting an open visit to a prisoner normally on a closed visit regime. [20059]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the circumstances under which a prison governor may exercise discretion in granting an open visit to a prisoner normally on a closed visit regime.

In general, governors have discretion under Prison Standing Order 5 to impose closed visits in respect of any prisoner where security or control considerations so require. The imposition and removal of this class of closed visit restriction, for prisoners who are not categorised as Exceptional Escape risk, is entirely at the discretion of the prison governor.

All visits to Exceptional Escape risk prisoners will normally take place under closed conditions. An open visit may be authorised in exceptional circumstances by an operational Director of the Prison Service. In doing so he will seek advice from the prison governor.

Court Welfare Service

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rules exist concerning the use of probation service staff to act as the family court welfare service; what alternative sources of court welfare officers exist; and what guidance exists concerning the way in which such officers operate. [20076]

Mr. Sackville: Rule 20 of the Probation Rules 1984—Statutory Instrument 1984 No. 647—as amended, requires probation committees to assign probation officers to act as court welfare officers; and rule 35 sets out the duties which officers so assigned should undertake at the request of a court. Under section 7 of the Children Act 1989, a court may ask either a probation officer or a local authority for a welfare report. Parties to proceedings under the Act may also obtain their own reports. The principal guidance on the probation service's family court welfare work which the Home Office has issued is contained in "National Standards"—a copy of which is in the Library—which was published in 1994 and to which were annexed a number of High court family division practice directions.

Prison Medical Examinations (Video-recording)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 428, if he will take steps to ensure that video-recording equipment is positioned in such a way as to demonstrate that it is not being used. [19939]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question on the use of video recording equipment.

It is not anticipated that equipment of the kind that could potentially be used for video recording medical consultations with prisoners would ever be a permanent feature of a room within a prison. As noted in the Answer given on 28 February, permission to video record prisoners undergoing medical consultation would only exceptionally be given, and then only with the consent and knowledge of the individual prisoners concerned and awareness that a video recorder was in use.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on which occasions a category A prisoner has been patriated to (a) Ireland and (b) other countries to complete sentences in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [20366]

Miss Widdecombe: Since the Republic of Ireland brought into effect the Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons on 1 November 1995, six category A prisoners have been repatriated there. The repatriations took place on the following dates:

One on 14 May 1996:

One on 21 May 1996:

Three on 13 November 1996:

One on 19 December 1996.

Within the last five years, two category A prisoners have been repatriated to Italy. These repatriations took place on 11 November 1992 and 13 June 1996.

Colchester Young Offenders' Institute

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many inmates are currently resident at Her Majesty's young offenders' institute Colchester; [19917]

(2) what are the weekly running costs at Her Majesty's young offenders institute Colchester; [19918]

(3) what are the estimated running costs for the first full year at Her Majesty's young offenders institute Colchester. [19919]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. George Howarth, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your three recent Questions about inmate numbers and costs at Her Majesty's Young Offender Institution Colchester.

On Tuesday 11 March there were 11 young offenders at Colchester, all of whom were members of the first intake which arrived at the young offender institution on the day it opened, 20 February. Further intakes will bring the population to 32.

The current estimated running costs for the financial year 1 April 1997 to 30 March 1998 are £1,006,000 which is equivalent to an average weekly rate of £19,293. These figures exclude an estimated charge of £114,292 made by the Ministry of Defence for rental of the accommodation and a contribution in lieu of rates.

Scientific Procedures (Dogs)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the suppliers of the dogs from non-designated sources in the United Kingdom supplied to establishments licensed to carry out scientific procedures during 1995. [20661]

Mr. Sackville: Disclosure is prohibited under section 24(1) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are taken to ensure that dogs supplied from non-designated sources in the United Kingdom during 1995 to establishments licensed to carry out scientific procedures were purpose bred. [20660]

Mr. Sackville: Non-designated sources in the United Kingdom do not supply dogs purpose bred for research use.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many establishments licensed to carry out procedures under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1968 were granted exemptions under article 10(3) to allow the use of non-purpose bred dogs in 1995. [20662]

Mr. Sackville: One establishment was granted permission to use non-purpose bred dogs.

Civil Protection Exercises

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current schedule of European civil protection exercises; how many members of his Department are or will be involved in each such exercise; what is the cost to his Department of each such exercise; what are the scenarios of such exercises; and if he will make a statement about the purpose of such exercises. [20457]

Mr. Sackville: There are no European civil protection exercises currently planned.

Immigration Status Inquiry Unit

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the immigration status inquiry unit was set up; how many staff it has; how many (i) local authorities and (ii) other bodies have now registered with it; how many people suspected of immigration offences have been notified to it in each month since it was set up; in how many such cases (a) enforcement action has been taken and (b) the suspicion proved to be unfounded; and what was the average length of time taken to provide the information requested. [20628]

Mr. Kirkhope: The immigration status inquiry unit dates from the late 1970s, although it was known as the overstayer tracing and information section until 1994.

The unit currently has a complement of 42 administrative staff. A total of 251 local authorities, principally housing authorities, have registered with it. Other bodies do not register as such but may receive information from immigration and nationality directorate records only where they have an entitlement within established disclosure policy. The remainder of the information requested is not available.

Emergency Planning College Group

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the members of the emergency planning college liaison group, (b) the dates of meetings of the group since April 1992 and (c) the dates of future scheduled meetings of the group; and if he will make a statement about the purpose and remit of the group. [20458]

Mr. Sackville: The emergency planning college liaison group exists to provide a forum for discussion between the emergency planning unit of the Home Office, and representatives of the Home departments, and representatives of organisations drawing upon the services and facilities of the Home Office emergency planning college, on the college's approach and programme. Details of the membership of the group, as currently notified to the Home Office, and the dates of meetings of the group since April 1992 are as follows. I understand that no date has yet been fixed for the next meeting of the group.

Members of the emergency planning college liaison group

Name
Mrs. S. Street	Director, Fire and Emergency Planning Directorate
Miss S. Paul	Head, Emergency Planning Division
Mr. A. Blackley	Principal, Emergency Planning College
Mr. D. Bawtree	Civil Emergencies Advisor

Mr. J. Williams	Emergency Planning Society

Emergency Planning College Liaison Group Meetings since April 1992:

Tuesday 12 January 1993
Thursday 25 March 1993
Tuesday 9 November 1993
Tuesday 8 November 1994
Thursday 15 June 1995
Thursday 29 February 1996.

Prisons (Operational Emergencies)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since 1 April

1996 operational emergencies have been declared in prisons under bulletin 8, paragraph 7; if he will list the prisons concerned; and what were the reasons. [20462]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 17 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to answer your recent Question about operational emergencies declared in prisons.

Fresh Start Bulletin 8 paragraph 17 refers to an operational emergency as being one reason among others for asking staff to work longer than the sum of their conditioned hours.

No central record is kept of the occasions where this happens nor is there a requirement for local records to be kept of additional staff attendance required by such emergencies.

This information therefore, could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Metropolitan Police Manpower

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, columns 429–30, how many Metropolitan police officers were on court duty and excluded from the figure for 1 April 1992. [19483]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The commissioner informs me that on 1 April 1992 there were approximately 530 officers on court duty who were recorded on divisional strength.

Data Collection (Postcodes)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 322, what adjustments are made to account for postcode boundaries cutting across the boundaries of county police forces in police funding formulas in using ACORN—a classification of residential neighbourhoods—and what adjustments have been made in the S12 and S31 post code areas. [19611]

Mr. Howard: I regret that my earlier answer suggested wrongly that the ACORN—a classification of residential neighbourhoods—classifications used in the police funding formula were based on post code areas. The ACORN data provided to my Department by CACI Ltd. for use in the police funding formula is constructed from census information collected at the level of enumeration districts. No adjustments are, therefore, necessary in respect of post code boundaries cutting across the boundaries of county police forces.

Fire Authorities (PFI Projects)

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which schemes submitted by fire authorities have been selected as private finance initiative pathfinder projects. [20743]

Mr. Sackville: I am delighted to announce that the following eight projects have been selected as pathfinders:

Fire Stations:

Cornwall County Fire Brigade

Lancashire County Fire Brigade

Greater Manchester County Fire Service

North Yorkshire Fire and Rescue Service

Training:

Avon Fire Brigade, Gloucestershire

Fire and Rescue Service and Somerset Fire Brigade (joint project)

South Wales Fire Service

Vehicles:

London Fire Brigade

Communications:

Northumberland Fire and Rescue Service

Each of these projects will receive up to £70,000 in financial assistance in 1997–98 towards consultancy costs incurred by the brigades in taking them forward. The experience of these pathfinder projects will also assist the fire service generally to take full advantage of the potential of the private finance initiative to help meet brigades' capital requirements.

A total of 21 projects were submitted by fire authorities for consideration for financial assistance as pathfinders. This was an excellent response and clearly demonstrates the willingness of the fire service to consider positively and imaginatively how private finance can help meet its needs. We shall continue to provide advice and assistance to all brigades in exploiting the initiative.

Unrepresented Defendants (Personal Cross-examinations)

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to protect victims of rape and other offences from being personally cross-examined by unrepresented defendants; and if he will make a statement. [20741]

Mr. Howard: The Government wish to take steps to prevent the ordeal experienced by some victims of rape and other offences who have been personally cross-examined in court by unrepresented defendants. Therefore, we have undertaken a review into whether the prohibition on the cross-examination of child witnesses by unrepresented defendants in cases of sexual offences, violence and cruelty, which was introduced by the Criminal Justice Act 1991, should be extended to other cases.

In light of that review, I have concluded that it would be right for a discretionary scheme prohibiting unrepresented defendants from cross-examining vulnerable victims to be available to the courts for use in appropriate circumstances. Where a prohibition was imposed, cross-examination could be conducted only by a legal representative of the defendant.

Details of how the scheme would work, including the offences to which it should apply, will be considered further as part of the wide-ranging review of court procedures for vulnerable witnesses which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, on 23 January. This will enable the scheme to be developed in a co-ordinated way, alongside other issues covered by that review.

It is vital to encourage witnesses to come forward to give evidence against offenders and the Government have continually introduced measures to improve the treatment of victims and witnesses by the criminal justice system. A discretionary scheme to prevent cross-examianton by unrepresented defendants in appropriate cases is consistent with the Government's approach and will provide a valuable addition to existing witness protection measures.

Radioactive Material

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the owners of radioactive materials in transit are responsible for the cost of civil police escorts; and if he will make a statement. [19938]

Mr. Page: I have been asked to reply.

The civil police are not involved in the escort of radioactive materials and therefore no costs are incurred.

TRANSPORT

Bray's Detective Agency

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has paid to date to Bray's detective agency for monitoring road protests. [19226]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 17 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question asking how much has been paid to Bray's Detective Agency for monitoring road protests.

Bray's Detective Agency are employed as evidence gatherers by Treasury Solicitors on behalf of the Department. To date they have been paid £2,263,314.60 (including VAT, where applicable).

M6 Flyover (Walsall)

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct his staff to inspect the M6 flyover crossing the Darlaston road in Walsall for leakage of rainwater on to the gardens of the houses below or near the structure. [19920]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Bruce George, dated 17 March 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent question about the leakage of rainwater onto the gardens of the houses below or near the M6 fly-over crossing the Darlaston Road in Walsall.

I am arranging for a representative from our Agent Authority, Staffordshire County Council, to inspect the structure.

Motor Cycle Safety

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will extend the testing of road construction products in respect of the safety of cars to cover the safety of motorcyclists. [20087]

Mr. Watts: No. Many construction products are already tested for their suitability in terms of safety and other requirements in a general way that covers all classes of vehicle.

In the case of construction products which aim to restrain or redirect errant vehicles, testing is not undertaken specifically in respect of motor cycles as it has not been possible to devise a test that is both appropriate and repeatable because of the instability of motor cycles under such conditions. The development of tests in the UK and Europe has concentrated, therefore, on the performance of such products when impacted by cars and heavier vehicles.

London Transport (Customer Satisfaction Surveys)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the customer satisfaction surveys carried out on behalf of (a) London Buses Ltd. and (b) London Underground Ltd. [20429]

Mr. Bowis: The Department receives regular reports from London Transport concerning customer perceptions of service performance for both Buses and Underground. I understand that London Buses is considering whether to replace its current household survey with an interview survey of passengers alighting from buses. This new methodology would be similar to the one which London Underground has been using since 1990.

Rail Services (Nomura Securities)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what involvement Nomura Securities has in Angel Trains Contracts; and if he will make a statement; [20412]

(2) if he will make a statement on the role of Nomura Securities in respect of railway services in the United Kingdom. [20413]

Mr. Watts: Nomura International plc, the UK-based wholly owned subsidiary of Nomura Securities Company Ltd., arranged, underwrote and participated in the funding of the consortium called GRS Holding Company Ltd., who contracted to acquire Angel Trains Contracts in November 1995.

Bus Working Group

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish all the reports from the service provision and quality sub-group of the bus working group. [20430]

Mr. Watts: The work of the service provision and quality sub-group contributes to the on-going discussions of the bus working group. The remit of the sub-group does not include the production of reports for publication.

PFI Projects

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, column 713, if he will provide figures for his Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93. [20385]

Mr. Watts: No.

Terminal 5 Inquiry

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's evidence to the Heathrow terminal 5 inquiry with particular reference to the advantages of the M25 being widened to dual 5–6 between junctions 12 and 15. [20293]

Mr. Watts: The Department has not provided, and does not intend to provide, evidence to the terminal 5 inquiry on the justification for the proposed widening of the M25 between junctions 12 and 15.

Spofforth Bypass

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made towards constructing the Spofforth bypass in North Yorkshire using the private finance initiative. [20680]

Mr. Watts: I understand that the Spofforth bypass is being progressed as part of a package of three design, build, finance and operate road schemes by North Yorkshire county council.

The public private partnerships programme—4Ps—believes that this package of road schemes have a good chance of being developed successfully and replicated within the new PFI framework, and has therefore given the scheme pathfinder status.

If a satisfactory business case is proposed by North Yorkshire, the Department of Transport will seek Treasury agreement to the notional credit approvals which may be required.

A1

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the outturn cost of the upgrading of the A1 between Walshford and Boroughbridge in North Yorkshire to motorway standards; and what was the estimated cost at the commencement of the work. [20683]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Robert Banks, dated 17 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the costs of upgrading the A1 between Walshford and Boroughbridge in North Yorkshire.

The outturn costs will not be known until the final account for the works has been settled, which may not be for sometime.

The total tender cost for the main works was £54.35m excluding VAT.

Rail Privatisation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the improvements to passenger and station services implemented by (a) Great Western Trains, (b) South West Trains and (c) LTS Rail, referred to in his answer of 9 January 1996, Official Report, column 27. [18678]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 4 March 1997]: Improvements to passenger and station services implemented by Great Western Trains, South West Trains and LTS Rail since commencing operations, are as follows:

Great Western Trains

GWT has introduced a large number of product enhancements including family carriage and business standard services, improved first class facilities, increased capacity for the carriage of bicycles, expanded catering services, and special offers and promotions to all rail passengers.

Weekday train services have been increased and some long-distance journey times have been reduced by up to 20 minutes. By the summer, GWT will be running an additional 11 services per weekday above the summer 1995 timetable.

A £50 million rolling stock upgrading programme is under way and the first five completely refurbished and re-liveried high-speed trains are now in service. A further seven trains will be available by May.

GWT has established a new telephone inquiry bureau and six telesales offices creating 180 full and part-time jobs.

GWT has completed the refurbishment of customer waiting lounges at Swindon, Newton Abbott and Bristol Parkway. Buffet facilities at Swindon have been refurbished and a customer service desk introduced. Self-service ticket machines have been installed at seven main line stations. New customer welcome teams have been introduced at Paddington. Porters have also been re-introduced at Paddington.

Security cover is now provided at all GWT car parks through combinations of trained security guards and closed circuit television.

South West Trains

SWT has introduced two new bus links from Bordon-Liphook and Winchester-Romsey. It has also introduced more bus service information into the SWT's timetable.

More than 2,000 extra sets a day have been introduced to help ease overcrowding. Two additional morning peak services serve Teddington-Waterloo via Kingston and several trains have been lengthened. SWT also has standby trains at London Waterloo and other key locations during the peaks which can be brought into use if needed.

SWT has invested over £1 million in improving train reliability—treating traction motors on class 442s to prevent problems with snow, and solving air conditioning problems on class 159s.

SWT will shortly be placing an order for 30 new four-car electrical multiple units worth approximately £90 million.

SWT has invested £200,000 in new technology and telephone lines at Southampton telephone inquiry bureau, where there are now 25 lines available. In addition SWT is providing extra staff—Bluecoats—at Waterloo, Guildford and Southampton offering help and information to travellers.

SWT has spent or committed the appropriate expenditure on its station refurbishment programme. The first stations to benefit from this work will be Brentford, Norbiton, Twickenham and Surbiton.

Work is now under way to redevelop station buildings at Southampton Airport (Parkway) station. The existing buildings are being transformed in a project which will include new upgraded station facilities and provide an additional 53 car parking spaces to the current 530.

SWT is also carrying out work on car park extensions at Grateley, Eastleigh and Haslemere. Car park resurfacing is also being carried out at 30 SWT stations.

There is a further £130,000 project to install CCTV cameras, improve lighting and cut vegetation at 10 stations. Since the programme of CCTV installation by BR in SWT car parks began in 1993, car crime had dropped by more than 30 per cent.; 70 per cent. of SWT car park capacity is now covered by CCTV.

SWT increased its passengers charter punctuality standards by two points from February 1997.

LTS Rail

LTS Rail has introduced additional late evening trains running from Monday to Friday serving all major stations to Southend.

Passenger safety has been improved by the introduction of security guards on LTS Rail trains and at stations. In total, an extra 3,000 security guard hours per week have been deployed across the franchise.

LTS Rail has launched an experimental low-cost fare called "Early Bird" for early morning Pitsea commuters into London. An Early Bird fare to London from Chafford Hundred will be introduced in April and similar fares are being considered for other stations. LTS has also introduced minicom facilities for the hard of hearing at the Southend telephone inquiry bureau.

LTS Rail introduced its first two class 317 sliding-door trains into regular service on 9 December, operating on the Basildon and Tilbury lines in the morning and evening peaks. Since then, LTS Rail has taken delivery of five further 317s and a further two are due to be delivered on 17 March.

LTS Rail is well advanced with ordering 44 four-car EMUs. The trains will include full air conditioning, wider seats and more spacious interiors, information in every carriage and public phones.

The passengers charter performance target for punctuality will be raised from 88 per cent. to 90 per cent. from 1 April 1997 and a further two points from 1 April 1998. Similarly, the reliability target will be increased by 0.5 points on 1 April 1997 and a further 0.5 points in 1998.

LTS Rail, in partnership with Thamesway, has introduced a joint rail/bus ticketing arrangement. From 2 March, commuters from Benfleet station have been able to buy one ticket valid on Thamesway buses, LTS Rail services and London Underground.

LTS Rail has improved the cleanliness of stations through increased overnight cleaning.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 5 March, Official Report, columns 607–609, what are the lengths of road classified as (a) orange and (b) red for traffic congestion according to the maps produced by the national roads network assessment systems for (i) 1995, (ii) 2005 and (iii) 2015 in (1) London, (2) Southern, (3) Midland and (4) Northern regions. [20135]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 13 March 1997]: The table indicates the lengths of road (miles) classified as orange or red according to the stress maps produced by the national roads assessment system. The figures are given by region for 1995 and forecast years 2005 and 2015 for low and high traffic growth forecasts.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Examination Results

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many and what percentage of children (a) sat and (b) achieved grade A to C in (i) history, (ii) geography and (iii) Latin (1) GCSEs and (2) A-levels in 1996; and if she will make a statement. [19885]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 11 March 1997]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, the following table shows the number and percentage of pupils who (a) attempted and (b) achieved grades A to C in (i) history, (ii) geography and (iii) Latin GCSE and GCE A/AS level in England in 1994–95, the latest year for which data are available. The figures for GCSEs relate to 15-year-old pupils in schools and those for GCE A/AS level to 17-year-old pupils in schools.

GCSE achievements of 15-year-old pupils in schools

	Number attempted	Percentage	Number achieved A–C*	Percentage
GCSE history	223,357	38.6	119,448	20.7
GCSE geography	259,291	44.8	130,295	22.5
GCSE Latin	11,790	2.0	10,817	1.9

GCE A/AS level achievements of 17-year-old pupils in schools

	Number attempted	Percentage	Number achieved A–C	Percentage
GCE A/AS history	24,292	17.2	13,850	9.8
GCE A/AS geography	26,373	18.7	13,683	9.7
GCE A/AS Latin	1,314	0.9	1,088	0.8

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many and what percentage of children (a) sat and (b) achieved a grade A to C in (i) one, (ii) two and (iii) three or more live foreign language A-levels in 1996; and if she will make a statement. [19884]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 11 March 1997]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, the following table shows the number and percentage of 17-year-old pupils who attempted GCE A/AS modern foreign languages and achieved grades A to C in (i) one, (ii) two and (iii) three or more modern foreign languages in England in 1994–95, the latest year for which data are available.

	Number of 17-year-old pupils	As a percentage of 17-year-old pupils
Attempted GCE A/AS language	22,233	15.8
Achieved 1 grade A–C	10,676	7.6
Achieved 2 grades A–C	2,765	2.0
Achieved 3 or more grades A–C	45	0.0

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many and what percentage of children (a) sat and (b) achieved a grade A to C in (i) one, (ii) two and (iii) three or more science A-levels in 1996; and if she will make a statement. [19882]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 11 March 1997]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, the following table shows the number and percentage of 17-year-old pupils who attempted a GCE A/AS level in any science subject and achieved grades A to C in (i) one, (ii) two and (iii) three or more science subjects in England in 1994–95, the latest year for which data are available.

	Number of 17-year-old pupils	As a percentage of 17-year-old pupils
Attempted GCE A/AS science	54,344	38.6
Achieved 1 grade A-C	17,201	12.2
Achieved 2 grades A-C	11,514	8.2
Achieved 3 or more grades A-C	1,825	1.3

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many and what percentage of children (a) sat and (b) achieved a grade A to C in (i) one and (ii) two or more live foreign language GCSEs in 1996; and if she will make a statement. [19883]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 11 March 1997]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, the following table shows the number and percentage of 15-year-old pupils who attempted a GCSE in any modern foreign language and achieved grades A to C in (i) one and (ii) two or more modern foreign languages in England in 1994–95, the latest year for which data are available.

	Number of 15-year-old pupils	As a percentage of 15-year-old pupils
Attempted at least one GCSE language	427,808	74.0
Achieved one grade A*–C	153,675	26.6
Achieved 2 or more A*–C grades	43,561	7.5

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many and what percentage of children (a) sat and (b) achieved a grade A to C in (i) one and (ii) two or more science GCSEs in 1996; and if she will make a statement. [19881]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 11 March 1997]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, the following table shows the number and percentage of 15-year-old pupils who attempted a GCSE in any science subject and achieved grades A* to C in (i) one and (ii) two or more GCSE science subjects in England in 1994–95, the latest year for which data are available.

	Number of 15-year-old pupils	As a percentage of 15-year-old pupils
Attempted at least one GCSE science	523,189	90.5
Achieved one grade A*–C	14,288	2.5
Achieved 2 or more A*–C grades	232,884	40.3

Teaching Qualifications

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students on completion of a postgraduate certificate of education or equivalent qualification gained qualified teacher status in (a) mathematics and (b) physics in each year from 1990 to 1996. [19902]

Mr. Forth [holding answer 11 March 1997]: The number of successful initial teacher training completers[1], trained for secondary education, whose first or second subject of ITT was either mathematics of science[2] from 1990 to 1995 are shown in the following table. Information for 1996 is not yet available.

	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Mathematics	890	950	1,250	1,450	1,640	1,660
Science	1,250	1,270	1,620	1,780	2,030	2,200

[1] Students who have successfully completed a course of initial teacher training leading to qualified teacher status (QTS).
[2] Students who have been trained to teach both maths and science have been recorded once only and assigned to their first subject.

Teachers' Superannuation

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in what respect the terms and conditions of the teachers' superannuation arrangements for fee-paying schools differ from those for the state sector. [20159]

Mrs. Gillan: Teachers at maintained schools become members of the teachers' superannuation scheme unless they elect not to do so. Those at independent schools become scheme members if the establishment is an accepted school under regulation B4 of the Teachers Superannuation (Consolidation) Regulations 1988 (as amended). There are no other appreciable differences between the provisions for maintained and independent schools.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what additional financial provision has been made for the teachers' superannuation regime for fee-paying schools. [20160]

Mrs. Gillan: In common with other employers of teachers, fee paying schools will benefit from the reduction in the employers' contribution rate from 8.05 per cent. to 7.2 per cent. with effect from 1 July 1997. In the independent sector, the reduction will save £9 million in a full year. That money can be used to fund premature retirements, if independent schools wish to use it for that purpose.

Teachers (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers are currently employed in the London borough of Wandsworth; and how many were employed in each of the past three years. [20178]

Mr. Forth: The information is as shown.

Full-time equivalent (fte) numbers of teachers in the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special education sector in the London borough of Wandsworth

January	Full time equivalent
1993	1,880
1994	1,800
1995	1,720
1996	1,750

Excludes sixth form colleges throughout.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 20 November 1996, Official Report, column 553, if she will make a statement on the impact of the schools environmental assessment method on the work of schools in respect of their evaluation of their environmental impact. [20308]

Mr. Robin Squire: The schools environmental assessment method—SEAM—was published in October. SEAM is being used by local authorities in environmental education and energy conservation outreach to schools. The 480 eco-schools participating in the green flag award scheme run by the Tidy Britain Group and sponsored by the Department of the Environment have been sent copies of SEAM so that they can take their environmental assessment further. Having carried out an initial SEAM assessment schools are encouraged to continue environmental monitoring. The Building Research Establishment is at present sending all schools a free copy of its software "The School Toolkit" which enables easy environmental monitoring by pupils or staff. These initiatives together with the work of groups like Learning Through Landscapes and Groundwork provide a framework for schools to evaluate, monitor and improve their environmental impacts.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 20 November 1996, Official Report, column 553, what percentage of schools met the revised energy targets for new school buildings included in the schools environmental assessment method; and if she will make a statement. [20309]

Mr. Squire: The information requested is not collected centrally for all schools.

However, of a recent sample of schools in five LEA areas 78 per cent. were below the highest band of energy consumption recommended for existing schools, and 58 per cent. were below the highest band recommended for new schools.

It is hoped that schools whose energy consumption is above the maximum recommended bands will be encouraged by SEAM to adopt no-cost good housekeeping measures or low-cost energy saving measures to reduce their energy consumption.

Teachers

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was (a) the average age of teachers entering the state and maintained sector, (b) the average age of teachers in that sector and (c) the youngest and oldest teachers who took voluntary redundancy or early retirement (i) in the latest year for which figures are available and (ii) in 1989–90. [20215]

Mrs. Gillan: The average age of new entrants and the average age of all teachers in the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sector is as follows. The youngest age at which a teacher may be granted premature retirement is 50, and the oldest 64, and those are the ages of the youngest and oldest teachers granted premature retirement in the two years in question. The Department does not collect information on voluntary redundancies.

	1989–90	1994–95
Average age of new entrants	28	28
Average age of all teachers	41	42

Departmental Expenditure Plans

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what changes have been made to her Department's expenditure plans in consequence of the initial claim for additional grant in aid submitted by the Further Education Funding Council in respect of demand-led element enrolments. [20164]

Mr. Paice: The initial claim from the Further Education Funding Council, of £82 million in this financial year has been met in full by the Department. This has been managed by drawing on existing underspends across a range of DfEE budgets. The underspends which have been used to meet the initial claim would otherwise have been returned to the Exchequer at the end of this financial year.

Internet

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance her Department is providing to schools regarding the supervision of access to the Internet by pupils. [20196]

Mr. Robin Squire: At the Department's request the National Council for Educational Technology has published guidance for teachers and parents on the use of the Internet. Through its network of curriculum IT support projects, the Department has also funded the development of materials to support teachers in the use of technologies such as the Internet in the delivery of national curriculum subjects.

The Government are also supporting the evaluation of the educational potential of new technologies and models of implementation through their piloting programme, the Education Department's superhighways initiative. Several of these projects are piloting the use of the Internet, including Internet services designed specifically for schools. The outcomes of these evaluations will be made available later this year, accompanied by guidance for schools on purchasing and good practice in the use of new technologies.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, column 706, if she will provide figures for her Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93. [20384]

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 6 March, Official Report, column 706. The estimate in table 5.5 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98" is based on the aggregate potential for PFI in the Department's and Employment Service's own estates and infrastructure; it is not yet directly attributable to specific projects, other than the two which have already been concluded. These projects are not yet fully operational and their details therefore remain commercially sensitive.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list in rank order the pupil-teacher ratio for (a) secondary and (b) primary schools of each local education authority and their ranking in respect of number of GCSE grades A to C. [20533]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list in rank order the amount and percentage of the nursery voucher withheld by each local education authority from nursery schools in its control and indicate in each case whether the schemes have received her Department's approval. [20531]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on the amounts of nursery grant, if any, which local education authorities plan to hold back from their schools is not supplied to the Department. Proposals for variations to schemes for local management of schools are still being processed; decisions on all of these will be made by 31 March 1997.

Key Stage 2

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reasons she has calculated average results for each local education authority's primary schools in key stage 2 on the basis of unweighted averages of individual schools' performance; and if she will publish weighted averages for authorities based on the numbers of pupils in each school. [20685]

Mrs. Gillan: The primary school performance tables published on 11 March show how many pupils reached level 4 or above in the 1996 key stage 2 tests and teacher assessments, as percentages of the number of eligible pupils at each school.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Intestacy

29. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Attorney-General how many people died intestate with no known kin in the last year for which figures are available; how much in money and belongings was left by them; and if he will make a statement. [18858]

The Solicitor-General: For England and Wales, excluding the Duchies of Lancaster and Cornwall, some 2,400 cases were referred to the Treasury Solicitor in 1996 which appeared to concern the estates of persons dying intestate with no known kin. The total of balances on estates, after setting liabilities, accounted for in 1996 following completion of their administration by the Treasury Solicitor was £8,603,204.

Lenient Sentences

30. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases referred to the Appeal Court on grounds of undue leniency have resulted in higher sentencing tariffs, in the last year for which figures are available. [18860]

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Attorney-General how many unduly lenient sentences he has referred to the Court of Appeal in the last year; and what was the rate of success. [18859]

The Attorney-General: During 1996, 70 sentences were referred to the Court of Appeal on grounds of undue leniency; 62 have been heard, and an increased sentence resulted in 46, or 74 per cent. of them.

Right-wing Groups

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions are pending arising out of alleged threats against individuals by neo-Nazi, fascist or other extreme right-wing bodies or persons. [18854]

The Attorney-General: Proceedings are pending against three defendants for alleged offences of publishing and possessing racially inflammatory written material with a view to distribution, contrary to part III of the Public Order Act 1986. The written material contains extreme right-wing ideology and contains threats against, and advocates the harassment of, named individuals.

Disclosure Procedures

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to review the guidelines on disclosure of unused material and on the handling of identification in criminal cases when statutory provisions relating to prosecution disclosure and modified committals are implemented. [20812]

The Attorney-General: On 27 May 1976, Official Report, columns 287-88, the then Attorney-General outlined guidance, in the light of the Devlin report on identification, on the handling of criminal cases where it appeared likely that identification would be an issue. That guidance has largely been overtaken by developments in the common law and statutory provisions, including the amendment to the general nature of committal proceedings provided for by section 47 of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 which takes effect on 1 April 1997.

On 18 December 1981, Official Report columns 251–52, the then Attorney-General announced guidelines on disclosure of unused material by prosecutors. Those guidelines have also now been largely superseded and the law relating to prosecution disclosure will be placed on a statutory footing when part 1 of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 is implemented, also with effect from 1 April 1997. I have therefore revoked both sets of the guidelines with effect from that date.

WALES

Unemployment Rates

10. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the unemployment rates for (a) Wales and (b) the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [18837]

Mr. Hague: The labour force survey provides data on unemployment which are comparable across the European Union. In autumn 1996, the International Labour Organisation unemployment rate for Wales from this source was 8.2 per cent. This compares with ILO unemployment rate of 11.9 per cent. for the Republic of Ireland in October 1996. These figures are not seasonally adjusted.

13. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the unemployment rates for Wales relative to those of Catalonia. [18840]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available figures for Wales and Catalonia, on a comparable basis published by Eurostat, are for April 1995 when the ILO unemployment rate for Wales was 8.7 per cent. and that for Catalonia was 19.9 per cent. These figures are not seasonally adjusted.

Teachers (Supply)

11. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the supply of teachers to schools. [18838]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I am confident that schools in Wales have a sufficient number of qualified teachers to meet their needs.

Bathing Beaches (Standards)

12. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many bathing beaches in Wales comply with European standards; and how many did so at the time of water privatisation. [18839]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Last year, 52 Welsh bathing waters met mandatory European standards compared with 40 in 1989.

Inward Investment (North Wales)

14. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has recently been made in attracting more inward investment to north Wales. [18841]

Mr. Hague: Significant progress has been made as demonstrated by the almost 1,000 jobs and £130 million of capital investment promised by the announcements by Toyo Seal; Baumeister and Ostler; JCB Transmissions; Toyota; British Aerospace; Hoya Lens; Shotton Paper; and Eastern Group.

Patient Statistics

15. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients were treated in NHS hospitals in Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what were the figures in 1979. [18842]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of in-patients and day cases treated in Welsh hospitals has more than doubled between 1979 and 1995–96 from 381,000 to 774,000. The number of out-patients rose by over 40 per cent. in the same period from 1,803,000 to 2,569,000.

Manufacturing Output

16. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the level of manufacturing output in Wales. [18843]

Mr. Hague: Over the past three years, manufacturing output in Wales has grown by 13.9 per cent., compared to 7.2 per cent. in the UK as a whole.

Nursery Vouchers

17. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the introduction of the nursery voucher scheme in Wales; and what plans he has for extending the scheme to primary education. [18844]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In addition to ministerial correspondence, the Welsh Office has received some 6,000 letters and some 60 petitions about the nursery voucher scheme. There are no plans currently to extend the scheme beyond four-year-olds.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the social services departments which have agreed to apply for nursery vouchers for children in foster care; and what assessment he has made of the reasons why some departments have not applied. [20287]

Mr. Evans: The social services departments that have said that they will apply for nursery vouchers for foster children are Blaenau Gwent, Flintshire, Merthyr Tydfil, Monmouth, Neath Port Talbot, Newport, Swansea, Torfaen and Wrexham. The majority of the remainder have not said whether they will be applying.

Class Sizes

18. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many classes in Wales for five, six and seven-year-olds have over 30 pupils. [18845]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Information on class sizes is published in "Statistics of Education and Training in Wales; Schools 1996". It is not collected by age range.

A494

19. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the budget for the road improvement scheme of Drws-Y-Nant on the A494 Dolgellau to Bala road; when will work begin on the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [18846]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In the light of other, higher priorities, it is not expected that funds will be available for a start of works in 1997.

Hospital Closures (Dyfed Powys)

20. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives of Dyfed Powys health authority to discuss hospital closures. [18847]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The chairmen of Dyfed Powys health authority met my right hon. Friend on 10 March to tell him about the authority's consultation document on the future provision of health services in Dyfed Powys.

School Standards

21. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action has recently been taken to improve school standards in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [18848]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The latest phase of the bright future programme is set out in "Beating The Previous Best" published in February.

Fishing Restrictions (Milford Haven)

22. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in lifting fishing restrictions in Milford Haven. [18849]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The majority of restrictions on commercial fisheries, put in place following the Sea Empress oil spill, have been lifted. The only commercial fishery still affected is the oyster fishery in the Milford Haven estuary.

Restrictions are also being maintained as a protective measure for casual pickers of shellfish (excluding crustaceans), and on edible seaweed and samphire in the intertidal area between St. David's head and Port Eynon point. Monitoring and sampling work is continuing so that these remaining restrictions can be lifted as soon as possible.

The Economy

23. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the economy in Wales. [18850]

Mr. Hague: The Welsh economy is doing very well. Unemployment is falling fast. Manufacturing output is rising faster than in the UK generally. Manufacturing productivity is well above the UK average. Industrial disputes are low. Wales is a favoured location for inward investment. Business confidence is rising faster in Wales than in almost every other UK region, and independent forecasters say that the Welsh economy will grow faster than that of the UK in the future.

GP Services

24. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the development of GP services (a) in Rhymney and (b) in Wales. [18862]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Health authorities have responsibility for developing GP services in their area and the National Health Service (Primary Care) Bill, which is currently before Parliament, will give authorities more flexibility for developing GP health care provision.

Special Needs Schools

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by local education authority area the total expenditure per pupil at maintained special schools for each of the last five years. [15706]

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 14 February 1997]: The latest available information is for 1994–95 and 1993–94 and is given in the following table. Expenditure for special schools is not separately identifiable for earlier years as it is combined with expenditure on special education in hospitals, social services establishments and at home.

Total expenditure per pupil at LEA maintained special schools[1]

	1993–94	1994–95
Clwyd	10,534	9,158
Dyfed	12,727	13,476
Gwent	17,406	19,252
Gwynedd	10,533	11,329
Mid Glamorgan	9,786	9,502
Powys	13,920	14,770
South Glamorgan	9,597	9,564
West Glamorgan	14,972	14,694
Wales	11,401	11,201

[1] Figures shown are for net current expenditure and gross capital expenditure divided by the full-time equivalent pupil numbers in maintained special schools at January in each year. Total expenditure figures exclude special education in special education units attached to primary and secondary schools, hospitals, social services establishments and at home.

School Administration Costs

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each local education authority in Wales the expenditure per pupil of the school's budget on administration in 1995–96 and estimated to be so spent in 1996–97. [15938]

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 14 February 1997]: The information requested is given in the following table.

The details for 1995–96 are:

Clwyd	47.73
Dyfed	46.90
Gwent	30.87
Gwynedd	40.89
Mid Glamorgan	19.92
Powys[1]	2.86
South Glamorgan	44.88
West Glamorgan	27.04

The figures for Clwyd, Dyfed and West Glamorgan LEAs are based on section 42 budget statements as the outturn statements for 1995–96 have yet to be submitted to the Secretary of State.

[1] Costs relating to the management and administration of general schools budget expenditure have been included with the budgets of those services that the authority has chosen to retain centrally. Details of these costs are not available.

The provisional details for 1996–97 are:

Isle of Anglesey	35.49
Blaenau Gwent	37.69
Bridgend	32.95
Caerphilly	35.52
City and County of Cardiff	18.70
Carmarthenshire	48.82
Ceredigion	62.09
Conwy	60.77
Denbighshire	62.65
Flintshire	43.28
Merthyr Tydfil	35.24
Monmouthshire	38.88
Neath Port Talbot	21.48
Newport	49.61
Pembrokeshire	60.03
Powys[1]	0.00
Rhondda-Cynon-Taff	18.33
City and County of Swansea	20.79
Torfaen	49.18
Vale of Glamorgan	43.24
Wrexham	49.39

[1] Costs relating to the management and administration of general schools budget expenditure have been included with the budgets of those services that the authority has chosen to retain centrally. Details of these costs are not available.

Rented Housing Starts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new rented housing starts he estimates will be made by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations in 1997–98. [19214]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Housing associations are the main providers of new subsidised housing. Housing for Wales expects to start 1,850 dwellings in its 1997–98 programme, of which up to 1,300 will be for rent. The remainder will be for low-cost home ownership. The number of starts will be increased by transfers to housing associations by those local authorities which will have bids approved under the £5.5 million home ownership, efficiency and rural housing challenge fund. No estimate is available for new rented housing starts by local authorities in 1997–98.

Departmental Web Site

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department established its Internet site; what representations he has received and what data he has collated on the use and utility of the site; and what steps he is taking to increase the amount of information available via the site. [19151]

Mr. Hague: My Department established Internet pages on the CCTA server in May 1995. This site now contains hospital performance information. A pilot site for the Welsh Office Industry and Training Department was set up in September 1995 and this contains mainly industry related information. Information on the number of accesses is collected weekly for both sites. A study is currently being carried out to establish how my Department can make best use of the Internet to disseminate information in the future.

National Health Service Resources

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional resources have been given to the national health service in Wales since 1992. [18829]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Since 1992–93, an additional £455 million has been provided for the national health service in Wales, including provision for 1997–98. This represents a cash increase over the period of 23.8 per cent. and 10.3 per cent. in real terms.

Planning Guidance (Agricultural Land)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he gives to local authorities on giving planning permission for building housing estates on grade 2 agricultural land. [20289]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Advice on the development of grade 2 agricultural land is contained in planning guidance (Wales): planning policy (May 1996), technical advice note (Wales) 6: development of agricultural land (November) 1996 and annex A to planning policy guidance note 7, "The Countryside and the Rural Economy" (January 1992). In development control decisions, considerable weight should be given to protecting grades 1, 2 and 3a land from development because of its special importance. Within these grades, where there is a choice between sites of different grades, development should be directed to land of lower quality.

Trunk Road Programme (Property Purchases)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that private companies carrying out negotiations relating to compensation for property purchased by compulsory purchase order for trunk road improvements in Wales will have a detailed knowledge of the north Wales property market. [20322]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Yes.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that private companies carrying out negotiations relating to compensation for property purchased by compulsory purchase order for trunk road improvements in Wales will be able to provide a full Welsh language service where it is required. [20321]

Mr. Jones: Yes. In line with the requirements of the Welsh Office Welsh language scheme, which came into effect on 13 January, contractors are bound by the terms of their contract to communicate appropriately in the medium of Welsh where it is relevant to the services they are providing for the Department.

Annual Departmental Report

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the annual departmental report. [20218]

Mr. Hague: I expect to publish the Welsh Office departmental report for 1997 on Thursday 20 March.

NHS Trusts (Mergers)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date his Department was first told of the proposed merger between Derwen and Pembrokeshire trusts; if his Department participated in meetings of the trusts to develop the merger proposals; and if he will list the dates of such meetings and the levels of participation. [20222]

Mr. Hague: My Department was first informed of the proposed merger on 1 July 1996. From that date, Welsh Office officials maintained links with senior trust staff by telephone, correspondence and meetings to advise them on the processes necessary to complete the merger.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what merger proposals for trusts other than Derwen and Pembrokeshire trust have been notified to his Department; what merger-related meetings have taken place (a) on his Department's premises and (b) at other locations with departmental participation; and if he will list the dates and attendance at such meetings. [20223]

Mr. Hague: My Department has not received any other proposals for NHS trusts to merge. Trust configuration is on occasion raised in discussions between my Department and the NHS about service improvements and financial performance. A review is being undertaken by the Welsh ambulance policy and advisory group which might, in due course, produce a formal expression of interest to reconfigure the ambulance NHS trusts in Wales.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received (a) in support of and (b) against the merger of Derwen NHS trust with Pembrokeshire NHS trust; and if he will list the (i) organisations and (ii) individuals from whom he has received representations. [20290]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A list of those organisations and individuals that responded to the public consultation on the application to merge the Pembrokeshire and Derwen NHS trusts, detailing their preferences, has been placed in the Library of the House.

Highway Works

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he gives to local authorities undertaking highway works as to the desirability of not closing to traffic highways affected. [20288]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Advice on procedures to be used when undertaking highway works is contained in the traffic signs manual, chapter 8 "Traffic Safety Measures and Signs for Road Works and Temporary Situations".

School Classes

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by local education authority (a) the number of classes with mixed aged groups and (b) the number of children taught in them in each of the last five years, and in 1979, 1983 and 1987. [20625]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is not available centrally.

Primary Schools (League Tables)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what reasons he has not published the league tables for Welsh primary schools. [20545]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Teacher union action disrupted the assessments in Wales during 1995; data collection and validation arrangements were then subject to comprehensive test in 1996. Extensive information on key stage 2 results, by local authority area, was published on 24 February. Now that the assessment arrangements are firmly established, performance tables giving key stage 2 results by named schools will be published after this year's round.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March Official Report, column 725, if he will provide figures for his Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. member for Darlington of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93. [20391]

Mr. Hague: No.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing and Land

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the link between housing land shortages and the house price increase of the late 1980s; and if he will make a statement. [19023]

Sir Paul Beresford: In 1990, my Department commissioned Gerald Eve, chartered surveyors in association with the department of land economy, University of Cambridge to undertake research on the relationship between house prices and land supply.

The study concluded that it would require significant additional land release, on a national scale and over a considerable period of time, to have a measurable effect on reducing average house prices.

Further research will be commissioned in the coming financial year to examine whether the links between planning and land and property prices can be further clarified.

Ponds and Lakes

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the Landscape Foundation to discuss the improvement of ponds and lakes in (a) parks and (b) nature reserves. [19654]

Mr. Clappison: As far as I am aware the Secretary of State has not met the Landscape Foundation.

Hereditaments (Local Taxation)

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the average (a) domestic rates (b) community charge (c) council tax per household and (d) non-domestic rates payment per hereditament for each year since 1989–90 [20013]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is not available on a completed consistent basis across all years. The available information for England is as follows. All figures are net of benefit, transitional relief and non-domestic rate relief.

	Local domestic taxes per hereditament £	Non-domestic rates per hereditament £
1989–90	[1]454	[4]2,647
1990–91	[2]524	[5]5,603
1991–92	[2]331	[5,6]6,408
1992–93	[2]368	[5,7]6,029
1993–94	[3]376	[8]6,082
1994–95	[3]393	[8]6,173
1995–96	[3]416	[8]6,382
1996–97	[3]445	[8]6,918

[1] Calculated as net domestic rate yield (i.e. net of non-collection), divided by the number of domestic hereditaments. No information is available about the domestic rate debit (i.e. gross of non-collection) raised in the year.

[2] Calculated as estimated net community charge yield (net of non-payment), divided by the estimated number of chargeable dwellings. The 1991–92 figures is net of £140 per adult community charge reduction grant. No information is available on the amount of community charge debit (i.e gross of non-collection) raised in each year.

[4] Calculated as non-domestic rate yield (i.e. net of non-collection), including crown contributions in lieu, divided by the number of non-domestic hereditatments. The definition of a non-domestic hereditament was changed on 1 April following the introduction of the national non-domestic rate. There were a number of changes to the definition of a non-domestic hereditament at this time, for example lock up garages were taken out of rating. No information is available about the non-domestic rate debit (i.e. gross of non-collection) raised in the year.

[5] Calculated as the rateable value on local rating lists for the year, multiplied by the non-domestic rates multiplier, less estimated rate reliefs, divided by the number of hereditaments on local rating lists. This figure is gross of non-collection, and taken no account of the effect of subsequent appeals on the rates payable for the year.

[7] The average rate payable decreased in 1992–93 because successful appeals resulted in a lower average rateable value for the year.

[8] Calculated as non-domestic rate debit for the local rating list for the year, divided by the number of hereditaments on local rating lists.

Drains and Sewers (Maintenance Responsibility)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which bodies have a duty to ensure that the structure and operation of all drains and sewers, hitherto in public ownership, are maintained to a standard that minimises the risks to public and environmental health; who issues standards for those operations; how they are monitored; and which bodies are charged with monitoring the contents of sewage effluent with particular reference to changes in the volumes of bacteria or viruses prejudicial to human and animal health. [20021]

Mr. Clappison: All sewerage undertakers have a statutory responsibility, enforceable by the Secretary of State or the Director General of Water Services, to maintain all public sewers to ensure their area is effectually drained. No trade effluent may be discharged to a public sewer without the consent of the sewerage undertaker who may impose strict conditions on the discharge. It is an offence if such a discharge is made to the sewer without consent or any other matter is discharged which may be dangerous, a nuisance or likely to cause injury to health. Responsibility for any public health matters arising from sewers initially rests with the environmental health department of the local authority.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the bidding guidance for round 4 of the single regeneration budget challenge fund will be published. [20310]

Mr. Curry: The guidance will be published in due course.

Tree Preservation Orders

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tree preservation orders have been served throughout the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [20187]

Mr. Clappison: The information requested is not held centrally. Responsibility for making tree preservation orders rests with local planning authorities.

Cryptosporidium

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many incidents relating to cryptosporidium in drinking water are awaiting assessment and report by the drinking water inspectorate; [20088]

(2) if he will list the incidents by water company and date relating to cryptosporidium in drinking water reported to the drinking water inspectorate since 1 January 1993. [20089]

Mr. Clappison: Water companies in England and Wales are required to report all incidents in which drinking water quality might be affected. All incidents are investigated by the drinking water inspectorate. Most incidents are relatively minor happenings.

The most significant risk to drinking water quality is the presence of cryptosporidium oocysts. On cryptosporidium, the notification to the inspectorate can relate either to the detection of cryptosporidium oocysts in treated water, or to an increase of the illness cryptosporidiosis in the community, or both. The transmission of the illness occurs in a number of ways and often through contact with animals. One recent outbreak of cryptosporidiosis was found to be associated with the failure of a milk pasteurisation plant. The source of any outbreak has to be established through epidemiology.

A case of South West Water Services Ltd. allegedly supplying water unfit for human consumption during 1995 because of cryptosporidium is currently before the courts.

Notifications of events involving cryptosporidium since 1 January 1993 are listed under three headings together with the status of the investigation. It should be noted that not all notifications become confirmed as incidents.

Cryptosporidium oocysts detected in treated water but no reported increase of cryptosporidiosis in the community

No incidents relating to cryptosporidium other than those listed are awaiting assessment or report.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the drinking water inspectorate will report on the Shipley/Bingley incident of cryptosporidium in drinking water on 11 June 1993. [20090]

Mr. Clappison: The investigation by the drinking water inspectorate of this incident is continuing. As is standard practice, as part of its investigations, the inspectorate is considering whether there is a case for prosecuting Yorkshire Water plc, under section 70 of the Water Industry Act 1991, for the alleged offence of supplying water unfit for human consumption.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Office of Water Supply regarding compensation to be paid to the customers affected by the cryptosporidium incident in the area of the Three Valleys Water Company. [20094]

Mr. Clappison: None. The drinking water inspectorate has commenced a full investigation to establish whether the recent outbreak of cryptosporidiosis is linked to the water supply. After this investigation is completed, the Director General of Water Services will consider whether there is any case for compensation.

Water Meters

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the cost of the free installation of water meters was paid for by (a) increased domestic customer charges and (b) shareholders in 1996. [20091]

Mr. Clappison: This is a matter for the Director General of Water Services who informs me that in setting price limits at the 1994 periodic review he allowed for the costs of metering to be met by metered customers, other than the costs of excavation for meter boxes. This did not have a significant effect on price limits. Price limits have not been increased to allow for the subsequent introduction by some companies of a free meter space and these costs are therefore met by the shareholders, at least until new price limits are set.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation the Office of Water Supply has held with non-metered householders about the costs to them of free meter installation. [20093]

Mr. Clappison: Since price limits were set by the Director General of Water Services in 1994, he informs me that there have been no costs to unmeasured household customers associated with companies' subsequent introduction of free meter installation. The director has not therefore specifically consulted about this. Ofwat liaises on a day to day basis with its 10 customer service committees about matters affecting customers.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent by water companies in 1996 on (a) the installation of and (b) the administrative costs of household metering. [20092]

Mr. Clappison: This is a matter for the Director General of Water Services, who informs me that this information is not available in the form requested.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken by his Department to promote the decontamination of contaminated land and its development in preference to green field sites; and if he will make a statement. [20319]

Mr. Clappison: My Department's contaminated land policies, funding of research, technical guidance on topics such as techniques for site investigation, risk assessment of sites, take-up of new technologies and potential environmental liabilities and support under the single regeneration budget and through English Partnerships are all designed to enable the use of brown field sites in preference to green field sites.

Property Disposals (Residuary Body)

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties the residuary body, established under section 22 of the Local Government Act 1992, has dealt with or disposed of to date; and if he will list those properties. [20291]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State has no role in deciding which particular properties vest in the residuary body. This is a matter for the body and the local authorities concerned. I understand from the residuary body that it is dealing with the archives owned by the former Humberside county council and has disposed of an interest in Carlisle House, Goole, an office building formerly owned by Boothferry district council. The residuary body has put forward recommendations to the Secretary of State for the disposal of the Humberside archives.

English House Condition Survey

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide for the combined regions of the north (northern, Yorkshire and Humberside and north-west), Greater London (inner London and outer London) and the rest of England (east midlands, west midlands, south-west, east anglia and rest of south-east) from the 1991 English house condition survey the figures for (a) construction date by tenure, (b) unfitness by tenure, (c) worst or best condition by tenure, (d) unfit vacants by tenure, (e) unfitness by dwelling type and tenure, (f) reason for vacancy by tenure and (g) variation of general comprehensive and urgent repair costs by tenure. [20217]

Mr. Clappison: Tables (a), (b), (c) and (g) are presented as requested. The information requested in (d) is part of table (b). The sample of dwellings surveyed in the 1991 English house condition survey is too small to provide (e) and (f).

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, columns 730–31, if he will provide figures for his Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93. [20383]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My answer of 6 March to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) provides the maximum possible information on capital investment in individual projects, without releasing commercially sensitive details, particularly for those projects still in procurement.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide figures for local authority PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93; and if he will list his latest estimates of annual totals for local authority PFI projects, on the same basis as those given in table 5.5 of the Red Book. [20397]

Mr. Jones: The Red Book gives estimates for total capital spend by contractors on PFI projects. Information in this form for individual projects is not held centrally. We have announced support for up to £250 million of PFI investment to the end of 1997–98. The public private partnerships programme has recently announced a series of PFI patherfinder projects which are expected to be signed in the forthcoming months.

Salisbury Bypass (Report)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library (a) the draft report and (b) the final report by English Nature to the Highways Agency on the crossing of the River Avon south of Salisbury by the proposed Salisbury bypass. [20294]

Mr. Clappison: I have today placed in the Library of the House (a) a copy of English Nature's final working draft advice on the proposed Salisbury bypass and (b) a copy of its formal advice to the Highways Agency, as endorsed by English Nature's council.

Isles of Scilly (Homelessness Legislation)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make special provision for the Isles of Scilly under the homelessness legislation; and if he will make a statement. [20515]

Mr. Curry: In view of the unique situation of the Isles of Scilly—its small scale and limited resources—the Secretary of State has made an order under section 225 of the Housing Act 1996 which relieves the Council of the Isles of Scilly of an obligation to rehouse persons applying for assistance under part VII of the Housing Act 1996 who have not resided in that authority's area for at least two-and-a-half years of the last three years.

Accidents (Dangerous Substances)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the major accidents notified to the Health and Safety Executive under the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations 1984 since January 1993, indicating in respect of each such accident (a) the dangerous substances involved, (b) the number of casualties, (c) the emergency measures taken to protect lives and property, (d) the extent of consequential restrictions placed on the consumption of food or drinking water and (e) details of any damage to the environment. [20456]

Sir Paul Beresford: The list of major accidents that have occurred at sites subject to the Control of Industrial Regulations Major Accident Hazards 1984 since January 1983 and notified to HSE is as follows. The table lists where the off-site emergency plan was activated. HSE has no information on any restrictions placed on the consumption of food or drinking water as a result of these incidents.

The taking of emergency measures to protect lives and property is the responsibility of the local authority emergency services and therefore HSE has only limited information on the emergency measures taken to protect lives and property.

Albino Frogs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect on other life forms and the environment of the reported increase in the number of albino frogs. [20546]

Mr. Clappison: English Nature, the Government's scientific advisers on nature conservation issues, advises that albinism is highly unlikely to have any impact whatsoever on other life forms or the environment. The only effect that it may have is that for a short while predators on frogs may have an easier time in locating their prey. I am satisfied that, at this time, this issue is not of any conservation significance.

Building Research Establishment

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what indications have been given to the in-house bid team seeking to acquire the Building Research Establishment about the level of Government support for the Building Research Establishment in the immediate future and the type of work which would be covered by Government contracts. [20636]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Information memorandum sent to all pre-qualified bidders contained information about the work the Department intended to commission from BRE post privatisation, comprising both on-going contracts and new work to be let on a single tender basis to BRE. Detailed information about this work was placed in the data room for the benefit of shortlisted bidders, and updated as appropriate. In addition, both shortlisted bidders were given the opportunity to talk to DOE customers about future opportunities.

It will be for other Government Departments to decide for themselves what work they might wish to commission from BRE in the future.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if the Government plan to accept any liability for redundancy costs arising from the proposed privatisation of the Building Research Establishment; [20637]

(2) what discussions have been held between his Department and the two bidders for the Building Research Department about provision for redundancy among existing Building Research Establishment employees and the liability for redundancy payments. [20639]

Mr. Jones: It was made clear to all bidders that decisions on, and funding of, any redundancies post privatisation was a matter for the future owners of BRE. However, the calculation of expected restructuring costs—including redundancies—has been an important aspect of valuing BRE and, for prospective purchasers, for deciding how much to bid. Therefore in order to maintain a level playing field, all pre-qualified bidders were provided with assumptions regarding redundancy costs for different categories of staff, which they were requested to use in preparing their indicative bids.

The two shortlisted bidders were given access to the data room which contained:

a note by the Government Actuary's Department on redundancy entitlement in the Civil Service;

the civil service compensation scheme report and explanatory booklet "PCSPS Early Retirement and Redundancy"; information from the Government Actuary's Department relating to estimated redundancy costs by category of staff.

At both stages, subsequent discussions were held with those bidders who requested them—including both short-listed bidders at stage 2—in order to clarify where necessary the figures and the basis on which bids were to be submitted.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff are currently employed at the Building Research Establishment; and how many redundancies are forecast in the in-house bid team's proposals. [20638]

Mr. Jones: At close of play on 14 March 1997 there were 660 people employed at BRE, 633.2 full-time equivalent staff.

Information given to the staff and trade unions by the management bid team indicates that they expect there to be in the order of 115 job losses following transfer to the private sector.

Mr. Garel-Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be in a position to make a statement about the Building Research Establishment. [20826]

Mr. Jones: On 15 March my Deaprtment entered into a contract to sell the Building Research Establishment to the preferred purchaser, the management bid team. The consideration is £1.7 million, plus an adjustment based on the balance sheet at completion. The sale agreements include provision for the Department to benefit from any windfall gain the purchaser may receive in respect of property, intellectual property, or reduced business rates. We hope to complete this transaction shortly.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on what date he received the formal request from the Environment Directorate of the European Commission for his observations on the complaint in respect of the Cardiff bay barrage; when he expects to make his response; and if he will place a copy of his response in the Library; [20521]

(2) what information he proposes to supply to the Environment Directorate of the European Commission in response to the request for United Kingdom Government observations on the complaint regarding the Cardiff bay barrage; if he will include details of the Treasury's cost-benefit analysis of the barrage in his response; and if he will make a statement; [20522]

(3) what information the Environment Directorate of the European Commission has requested concerning progress on the Gwent levels bird reserve project as part of the United Kingdom Government's observations on the complaint regarding the Cardiff bay barrage. [20520]

Mr. Clappison: The European Commission decided not to proceed with the complaint in respect of the Cardiff bay barrage in February 1996. It confirmed that they were satisfied with the compensatory measures put forward by the Government. Since then we have kept the Commission closely informed of progress on these measures, both in correspondence and in a series of discussions between the relevant officials. The Government have received no formal request for information from the Commission pursuant to any further complaint.

Environment Agency (Charging Schemes)

Sir Jim Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the Environment Agency charging schemes for Integrated Pollution Control and Radioactive Substances Act Regulation for 1997–98. [20823]

Mr. Clappison: The Environment Act 1995 requires the Environment Agency to make charging schemes to recover the cost of carrying out its regulatory functions.

With the consent of Treasury, and of the charging schemes for Radioactive Substances Act Regulation, the consent of my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food; and following consultation with those likely to be affected by the schemes, the Environment Agency has now made charging schemes for Integrated Pollution Control and Radioactive Substances Act Regulation for 1997–98. The schemes will take effect from 1 April 1997. I have placed copies of them in the Library.

The subsistence charge for integrated pollution control has been set at £1,755 to effect full cost recovery. This is a reduction of £50 on the charge in 1996–97. There are some minor changes to the charging schemes. Copies of the schemes will be sent to relevant operators and to other interested bodies shortly.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what performance targets he has set for the Planning Inspectorate agency for the financial year 1997–98. [20804]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have today set key targets for the Planning Inspectorate in England in furtherance of the dual objectives of securing improved efficiency, and safeguarding the impartiality and quality of the agency's work. These targets form part of the phased programme of performance which I initiated last year. The targets for 1997–98 are:

Timeliness

(a) 80 per cent. of all planning appeals decided by written representations to be determined in 20 weeks, reducing to 18 weeks by 1998–99;

(b) 80 per cent. of all planning appeals decided by hearings to be determined in 33 weeks, reducing to 24 weeks by 1998–99;

(c) 80 per cent. of all planning appeals decided by inquiries to be determined in 44 weeks, reducing to 36 weeks by 1998–99;

(d) to provide an inspector for 80 per cent. of local plan inquiries on request within 26 weeks of the end of the objection period, and to deliver 90 per cent. of inspectors' reports to local authorities by the dates agreed in service agreements;

Financial

(a) unit costs of planning appeals decided by written representations not to exceed £690;

(b) recover 90 per cent. of receipts within eight weeks of invoice date;

Efficiency

generate a 3 per cent. efficiency improvement in the use of running costs compared with 1996–97;

Quality

to satisfy the Advisory Panel on Standards, and thus the Secretary of State, annually and following rigorous monitoring, that the quality of the inspectorate's work is being maintained at a high standard with 99 per cent. of its casework free from justified complaint;

Information and guidance to carry out a customer satisfaction survey of the quality of Inspectors' reasoning in decision letters.

Council Leaseholders (Service Charges)

Sir Jim Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further plans he has to assist council leaseholders facing difficulties with service charges. [20822]

Mr. Clappison: We issued the Social Landlords Discretionary Reduction of Service Charges (England) Directions 1997 and the Social Landlords Mandatory Reduction of Service Charges (England) Directions 1997 on 4 February. We issued a further direction on 13 March giving Wandsworth borough council discretion to waive or reduce service charges for works in respect of defects on the Ackroydon and Queensmere estates. We have no plans at present to issue further directions, but we shall consider carefully any requests that are put to us.

Greening Government Initiative

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the greening government initiative. [20821]

Mr. Gummer: Green Ministers have taken stock of the Government's approach to the environmental appraisal of its policies and to green housekeeping.

The Government's commitment to assess the potential environmental impact of new policy proposals has been restated in successive White Paper annual reports on sustainable development, and "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" requires all Departments to ensure that papers for Cabinet and ministerial committees should, where appropriate, cover any significant costs or benefits to the environment. Green Ministers have specifically reaffirmed that their Departments will carry out environmental appraisal of policies where appropriate and agreed to ensure that departmental procedures are in place to check that this happens and to keep them under review. They have also agreed to consider publishing those appraisals where there is a significant environmental impact. In 1991 my Department published "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" giving extensive guidance on how to integrate environmental considerations into Government policy. Consultants (KPMG) have been appointed to evaluate the practical application of environmental appraisal and are due to finalise their report shortly.

The Government are also fully committed to running their own operations and buildings in accordance with best environmental practice as an integral part of their contribution to the UK's sustainable development strategy. All Government Departments have had green housekeeping strategies in place since 1992 and have achieved a great deal. Energy efficiency on the Government estate has improved by almost 15 per cent. in the five years to March 1996 and a new target of an overall 20 per cent. improvement by March 2000 has been endorsed by the Prime Minister.

New Government buildings and major refurbishment will be assessed under the Building Research Establishment's environmental assessment method, or an equivalent scheme. The Department of the Environment's office services division has achieved accreditation for its environmental management system under BS 7750 and ISO 140001; this makes the United Kingdom one of the small number of countries that are investigating the application of such techniques in central Government. Work is under way by Government Departments to review the scope for reducing the impact of their travel and transport patterns on the environment and the scope for introducing green commuter plans to encourage staff to switch from the car to public transport, walking or cycling.

Green Ministers have now agreed a further programme of action to take forward the green government initiative. The KPMG report and its case studies will be published as soon as it has been finalised. Green Ministers agree with the thrust of KPMG's emerging findings on the environmental appraisal of policies. Specifically they have agreed to:

(a) prepare a short aide memoire, widely available and targeted more towards policy advisers than appraisal specialists, and showing the range of techniques available;

(b) provide more detailed material on good practice for those needing further specialist advice; the Department of the Environment will be ready to advise other Departments without such expertise, and more generally (including considering the dissemination of case studies using both written material and seminars);

(c) review in their Departments the systems and processes they have in place to deal with environmental issues in policy appraisal where there are significant; although requirements differ across Departments, they will provide a clear point of contact for officials seeking advice;

(d) take responsibility for ensuring that the necessary systems and processes are being properly used and, where the environmental impacts are significant, demonstrate publicly how they have taken account of environmental considerations in policy development. Collectively Green Ministers will review the situation periodically to satisfy themselves that arrangements are working well.

The Government's corporate strategy on green housekeeping signals the Government's determination to build on the action already taken and to follow sound environmental principles across its operations. In particular, the Government will work to the target of a 20 per cent. improvement in energy efficiency over 1990 levels by 2000, and explore new ways of measuring performance by standard performance indicators. We shall ensure that new buildings and major refurbishments are designed to achieve high standards of environmental performance.

The Government will also monitor targets set by Departments for reducing their waste in accordance with the UK strategy for sustainable waste management and promote the concepts of reduction, re-use, recovery and recycling with disposal as the least favourable option. New guidelines will be issued to Government Departments on taking environmental factors into account in purchasing goods and services consistent with the need to achieve value for money.

Departments will reduce the use of hazardous substances, materials and goods and, where they are essential, dispose of them safely and in an environmentally preferable manner. Furthermore, Departments will minimise the environmental impact of the transport needs of Government operations, promote environmentally sensible choices in the way staff travel to work and provide them with the information and training they need to carry out their duties with the minimum impact on the environment.

Green Ministers recognise that the achievement of improved environmental performance requires the commitment of all staff from senior management downwards and depends on Departments developing proper management systems. Where they have not already done so, Departments will consider whether it would be practicable, and whether it would bring extra value, to seek accreditation under BS 7750 and ISO 14001 or to have their systems assessed by auditors trained in environmental management.

SCOTLAND

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown by project of PFI schemes for which his Department is responsible as identified in table 5.5 of the Red Book. [18934]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 6 March 1997]: Table 1 gives a breakdown of the forecasts for Scotland in table 5.5 of the Red Book. It is possible to give a meaningfull breakdown of the forecasts by project only for the Scottish Office's own projects and those of its agencies and nationalised industries. Forecasts for other sectors are based on information supplied by the public bodies concerned and the views of the Scottish Office and the Forestry Commission of the likely progress of the PFI in these sectors.

Table 2 lists the latest forecasts on the same basis.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures for his Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93; and if he will list his latest estimates of annual totals for PFI projects, on the same basis as those given in Table 5.5 of the Red Book. [20395]

Mr. Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) today.

NHS Staff

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (i) by health board and (ii) overall the number of (a) doctors, (b) nurses, (c) midwives, (d) health visitors, (e) administration and clerical staff and (f) managers in the NHS in Scotland in each year from 1990 to 1996. [18894]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 March 1997]: As the information requested is lengthy, I have arranged for copies to be placed in the House Library.

Market Testing Unit (Costs)

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the costs of his Department's market testing unit in each year since 1992, indicating for each year the (a) staff costs, (b) running costs and (c) costs of work commissioned by the unit. [19155]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The information available on the costs of market testing is given in the table. This shows staff costs for the period up to June 1994 and the full costs to date of consultancy support. Information on staff costs since June 1994 and non-staff running costs is not available centrally and could be gathered only at a disproportionate cost.

£ million

Year	Staff costs	Consultancy costs
1992–93	0.965	0.917
1993–94	1.239	0.469
1994–95	0.095	0.064
1995–96	Not separately identified	Nil
1996–97	Not separately identified	Nil

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what have been in each year the (a) consultancy, (b) advertising and (c) other fees associated with the establishment of nursery vouchers in Scotland. [19157]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The information as at 4 March 1997, excluding VAT, is as follows:

	1995–96 £	1996–97 £
Consultancy fees	0	4,188
Advertising fees	520	113,400
Other fees	9,350	203,518

"Other fees" include translation and production fees subcontracted by advertising agents, and fees to Capita Managed Services for the issue and redemption of vouchers, helpline staffing and associated services. Charges made by local authorities and others for the secondment of staff as development officers and for work on the curriculum framework, by Stirling university for research on the pilot schemes, and by press and television firms for the carriage of advertising (these latter amounting to nil in 1995–96, £212,901 in 1996–97), have been excluded.

Scallop Conservation

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to implement the results of the consultation on scallop conservation measures in Argyll and Bute; and if he will make a statement. [19493]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The results of the 1996 UK consultation exercise on scallop conservation were largely inconclusive. No specific measures are proposed for Argyll and Bute. Discussions are continuing in the context of the European Commission's proposed revision of the technical conservation regulation.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of food poisoning in Scotland were notified to his Department in (a) 1996 and (b) each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [20193]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table. Notifications of cases of food poisoning are made to the Common Services Agency for the Scottish health service. Notifications of food poisoning cases are made by doctors but, since February 1995, cases ascertained by laboratories and environmental health officers have also been included in the totals.

Notifications of Food Poisoning[1,2] in Scotland, year ending 31 December 1979–1996

Year	Total

Mr. W. J. Duff

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions, and from what date, the Common Services Agency dental practice division undertook ad hoc checks on dental payment claim forms submitted by Mr. W. J. Duff; what were the conclusions; and what action was taken following each occasion. [19264]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1997]: The Common Services Agency's dental practice division undertakes ad hoc checks where dental payment claim forms are rejected during processing for any reason such as when there is incomplete information on the form. In such cases, payments are not made and the forms are returned to the dentist for correct completion. Because these checks are ad hoc, no records are kept.

Drug Services (Funding)

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy in regard to the ring fencing of funding provision to health boards for drug services. [20198]

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: In order to ensure that sufficient priority is given to tackling the problem of drug misuse in Scotland, the Government's policy is that the ring fencing of funding provision to health boards for drug services is essential and should continue.

Radioactive Materials

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the civil police provide escorts for type B containers of civil radioactive materials transported by road at the request of the material's owners; and if he will make a statement. [19932]

Mr. Page: I have been asked to reply.

The civil police do not escort type B containers of radioactive materials transported by road. The UK Atomic Energy Authority constabulary escorts these containers when necessary.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the owners of radioactive materials in transit are responsible for the cost of civil police escorts; and if he will make a statement. [19933]

Mr. Page: I have been asked to reply.

The civil police are not involved in the escort of radioactive materials and therefore no costs are incurred.

HEALTH

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with disabilities, living in NHS hospitals or residential accommodation, currently receive the mobility component of the disability living allowance. [20130]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

People with entitlement to disability living allowance mobility component at 21 January 1997 who were in hospital for over 28 days (84 days for children)

Community Care

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library the responses to his Department's draft guidance for local authorities on the implementation of the Community Care (Direct Payments) Act 1996; and if he will make a statement. [19205]

Mr. Burns: Copies of all responses have been placed in the Library, except where respondents have indicated that they wish their reply to be excluded from this arrangement. In those cases, confidentiality has been respected.

We have received 206 replies to the consultation throughout the United Kingdom. These comprise 86 replies from local authorities, 70 from voluntary organisations, and 50 from independent providers, health bodies, statutory bodies and individuals.

Pepper Gas

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 13 February, Official Report, column 287, for what reasons his Department compiled the report on pepper spray; and if his Department has prepared other reports on this subject since 1991. [19088]

Mr. Horam: The report to which the hon. Member refers was prepared by officials at the Department of Health at the request of the Home Office. No further scientific reports on this subject have been produced by officials.

Extra-Corporeal Membrane Oxygenation

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospitals which have facilities to provide extra-corporeal membrane oxygenation for children aged (a) up to six months and (b) six months and over; and how many paediatric intensive care beds there are in each of the units with extra-corporeal membrane oxygenation facilities. [19497]

Mr. Horam: On the basis of recently published evidence of the effectiveness of extra-corporeal membrane oxygenation in neonates, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 8 January that, from 1 April this year, an ECMO service for neonates and premature babies up to six months suffering from respiratory syncytial virus will be purchased centrally from Great Ormond Street hospital for sick children, London; Glenfield hospital, Leicester; and the Freeman hospital, Newcastle upon Tyne. All three have the necessary neonatal and paediatric facilities to support ECMO treatment for this group of babies.

The information requested on the number of paediatric intensive care beds with ECMO facilities is not held centrally.

Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Brian David Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the hospitals in the west midlands that have had recorded incidents of MRSA since 1992; [19721]

(2) how many (a) cases of and (b) deaths from MRSA have been recorded in (i) the west midlands and (ii) west midlands hospitals in each year since 1992; [19719]

(3) how many cases of MRSA have been recorded in Walsgrave hospital, Coventry in each of the last five years, broken down by age bands of 10 years; [19720]

(4) what has been the percentage change in the annual incidence of MRSA in west midlands hospitals from 1990–91 to 1995–96. [19722]

Mr. Horam: Information on the total number of cases of infection or colonisation with methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus is not collected centrally. Some health authorities monitor the occurrence of MRSA, but these are likely to be subject to local variations in the type of data collected and the methods of collection used.

Data on the occurrence of MRSA compiled by the public health laboratory service are derived from isolates submitted voluntarily by hospitals in England and Wales for typing.

The data held by PHLS of the number of hospitals in the West Midlands health region reporting incidents of MRSA from 1992 to 1996, the number of patients affected and the year-on-year percentage change of number of patients affected are shown in the table. The names of individual hospitals are not available. An incident is defined as three or more patients with the same strain of MRSA in a month from the same hospital. It is not known in how many of these cases MRSA contributed to or caused death.

Incidents of MRSA: West midlands health region 1992 to 1996

NHS Trusts

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which NHS trusts (a) have had their establishment orders altered, and when, and (b) are currently being considered for alterations to their establishment orders. [19824]

Mr. Horam: Copies of establishment orders for national health service trusts are available in the Library.

Establishment orders for the following trusts are being considered for alteration:

Black Country Mental Health trust

Bromley Hospitals NHS trust

Chichester Priority Services NHS trust

Leeds Community and Mental Health Services Teaching NHS trust

Leicester Ambulance and Paramedic Services NHS trust

Lifecare NHS trust

Riverside Mental Health NHS trust

South Lincolnshire Community and Mental Health Services NHS trust.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to alter the establishment orders of NHS trusts involved in negotiating private finance initiative projects. [19823]

Mr. Horam: A decision will be taken following consultation with the local community health council in respect of trusts which require changes to their establishment order as a result of a private finance initiative project.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) negotiations he is undertaking with and (b) representations he has received from, (i) NHS trusts, (ii) community health councils, (iii) health authorities, and (iv) private sector private finance initiative partners concerning alterations to NHS trust establishment orders. [19825]

Mr. Horam: Alterations to trust establishment orders are generally requested by the trusts concerned. A decision is made on amendment following consultation where that is applicable. The consultation process where an alteration to an establishment order is due to a change in service provision is carried out by the Department involving the trust and the local community health council. Health authorities and the private sector are not directly involved.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 569, concerning NHS trusts' funding, if the establishment order for each NHS trust named permits it to sign a contract for the private finance initiative project it is currently negotiating; and if he will make a statement. [20070]

Mr. Horam: The position is set out in the table.

Trust	Establishment order compliant with PFI
Bishop Auckland NHS trust	Yes
Bromley Hospitals NHS trust	Consultation in progress
Calderdale Healthcare NHS trust	Amending order made 13 March 1997
Carlisle Hospitals NHS trust	Amending order made 13 March 1997
Dartford and Gravesham NHS trust	Yes
Greenwich Healthcare NHS trust	Consultation required
Hereford Hospitals NHS trust	Yes
North Durham Acute Hospitals NHS trust	Yes
Oxleas NHS trust	Yes
St. James and Seacroft University Hospitals NHS trust	Yes
Swindon and Marlborough NHS trust	Yes
Walsgrave Hospitals NHS trust	Consultation required
Wellhouse NHS trust	Amending order made 13 March 1997
Worcester Royal Infirmary NHS trust	Yes

Art Therapy

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received recently regarding art therapy services in London; and if he will make a statement on the matters raised by the hon. Member for Woolwich in his letter of 5 March regarding Lewisham and Guys NHS mental health trust; [19514]

(2) with whom the final decision to delete art therapy services in the Lewisham and Guy's NHS mental health trust rests; and if he will make a statement; [20332]

(3) what was the basis upon which the decision to cease to provide art therapy services in the Lewisham and Guy's NHS mental health trust was taken; and if he will make a statement. [20333]

Mr. Burns [holding answer 10 March 1997]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has received a number of representations concerning art therapy in London. The decision to discontinue some of the art therapy services provided by Lewisham and Guy's mental health trust was made by Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham health authority, in consultation with the trust. The decision followed a review of patient needs and priorities in the south-east London area.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance is given by his Department regarding the notice given by service providers for terminating work with long-term clients, with special reference to art therapy; and if he will make a statement; [20334]

(2) what assessment he has made of the implications of his decision in respect of the recognition of art, music and drama therapy for NHS funding, priority setting and the provision of such services. [20331]

Mr. Burns: We have not issued central guidance on arrangements for terminating art therapy services. The funding, priority setting and provision of art therapy services are matters for the national health services to determine in the light of local circumstances. In recognition of the part art therapists play, we have agreed that they should be registered in accordance with the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the additional funds which he has provided for mental health services in London can be spent on art therapy services. [20335]

Mr. Burns: There is no reason in principle for excluding art therapy from the range of services to be funded from the mental health challenge fund or from target funds, provided that their provision relates to the needs of people with severe mental illness, and that bids have been soundly based within the criteria which govern the allocation process.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for the City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) of 29 January, Official Report, columns 271–72, concerning NHS PFI projects, what information he has received regarding (a) the date that contracts, including financial agreements, will be signed and (b) the likely start date and time scale for construction work at each of the sites named. [20071]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 13 March, Official Report, column 341. Financial agreement on a private finance initiative contract is expected three or four months after the commercial contract has been signed. Shortly after financial agreement, work can begin on site.

Negative Equity Buy-out

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many, and which, health authorities and trusts operated negative equity buy-out or similar relocation schemes prior to October 1994; and how much was paid by each health service body under such schemes in each year. [20117]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 13 March 1996, Official Report, column 621.

Residential Care for the Elderly (London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each London borough the number of residential places for the elderly in (a) 1987 and (b) 1997 in (i) local authority and (ii) other homes by category. [20014]

Mr. Burns: Information for 1987 and 1996, the latest available year, is given in the table.

Hepatitis B Vaccinations

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many vaccinations against hepatitis B were administered in each of the last three years; [20023]

(2) what was the cost, in each of the last three years for which figures are available, of programmes to vaccinate groups at risk from hepatitis B. [20025]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Liver Cancer

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the number of deaths from liver cancer and (b) the cost to the NHS of treating liver cancer, in each year since 1994. [20027]

Mr. Horam: Information on the number of deaths from liver cancer in 1994—latest available figures—is contained in "Mortality statistics: cause, England and Wales, 1993 (revised) and 1994" (Series DH2 no. 21), published by the Office for National Statistics, copies of which are available in the Library.

Information on the costs to the NHS of treating liver cancer is not collected centrally.

Health Spending (East Sussex)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS spending in East Sussex is on people over retirement age. [20017]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact John Lewis, chairman of East Sussex Brighton and Hove health authority for details.

Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the current structure and membership of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation. [20026]

Mr. Horam: Current membership of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation is as follows;

Professor Sir David Hull (Chairman)—formerly Professor of Child Health, Nottingham.

Dr. R. Aston—Consultant in Communicable Disease Control, Bolton.

Dr. B. Bannister—Consultant in Communicable Disease Control, Coppett's Wood Hospital (Royal Free Hospital).

Dr. H. Bowyer—Consultant in Public Health Medicine, Borders Health Board.

Dr. K. Cartwright—Director, Gloucester Public Health Laboratory.

Dr. S. Conway—Consultant in Paediatric Infectious Diseases, Leeds.

Professor D. Goldblatt—Senior Lecturer/Honorary Consultant, Institute of Child Health.

Professor D. Hall—Professor of Community Paediatrics, University of Sheffield.

Dr. D. Joynson—Director, Swansea Public Health Laboratory.

Dr. C. R. Kennedy—Consultant Paediatric Neurologist, Southampton University Hospital.

Dr. J. Lunn—formerly Consultant in Occupational Medicine, Northwick Park Hospital.

Dr. K. Nicholson—Senior Lecturer and Honorary Consultant in Infectious Diseases, Leicester University and Leicester Royal Infirmary.

Dr. M. Ogilvie—Senior Lecturer and Honorary Consultant Medical Virology, Edinburgh University Medical School.

Professor L. Ritchie—General practitioner and Professor of General Practice, Aberdeen.

Dr. R. Smithson—Consultant in Communicable Disease Control, Western Health and Social Services Board.

Two new members to advise on nursing matters and paediatric epidemiology are currently being appointed and will replace outgoing members Mrs. D. Roden and Professor C. Peckham.

Drug-related Incidents (Weekends)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what data his Department collates on the number of people currently treated on average on (a) Friday and (b) Saturday nights at accident and emergency units for (i) ecstasy, (ii) cocaine and (iii) heroin-related incidents; [20354]

(2) how many people are currently being treated in hospital for ecstasy-related health problems; [20415]

(3) what research he has (a) evaluated and (b) commissioned into the long-term effects of taking ecstasy; [20401]

(4) what is his estimate of the number of people who currently use ecstasy on a weekend in the United Kingdom; and on what data these figures are based; [20376]

(5) what research he has (a) evaluated and (b) commissioned on the side effects of taking ecstasy; [20400]

(6) how many people have died in 1996 as a consequence of taking ecstasy or attending ecstasy-related events. [20414]

Mr. Burns: The Department of Health does not collect information by day of the week on drug-related incidents in accident and emergency units, but anecdotal evidence from a number of hospitals suggests that incidents related to the drug known as ecstasy are common at weekends. It is not possible, because of its clandestine nature, to determine accurately the level of ecstary misuse, but surveys suggest that about 1 per cent. of 16 to 29-year–olds take the drug on a regular basis.

Information on the number of patients treated for ecstasy-related health problems is not collected.

The Department of Health has commissioned a literature review to evaluate existing research on both the short-term side effects and long-term health risks of taking ecstasy and has received advice from the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs on these issues, which was the subject of a question tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, North (Mr. Jenkin) on 28 February 1997, Official Report, columns 441–42. The Department of Health is considering, in the light of this work, what further research may be necessary on the health risks of this drug.

Figures for the number of deaths from ecstasy in 1996 are not yet available, but there were 10 deaths in 1994 attributed solely to the misuse of ecstasy.

Oral Contraceptives

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will require the Medicines Commission to review the operation of the Committee on Safety of Medicines in October 1995; [20481]

(2) if he will list the dates between 1 June 1995 and 19 October 1995 when he met the chairman of the Committee on Safety of Medicines; [20622]

(3) if he will publish the documents of 16 October 1995 relating to the instructions his Department gave to the Medical Direct Mail Organisation; [20561]

(4) when data from the World Health Organisation study into oral contraception were first made available to the Medicines Control Agency; and if he will make a statement; [20559]

(5) when his Department's formal written request of 11 October 1995 relating to desogestrel and gestodene was acknowledged by (a) the Committee for Proprietary Medicinal Products and (b) the European Medicines Evaluation Agency; [20482]

(6) on what date the licensing authority received the abstract relating to the transnational study, subsequently presented at the British Pharmacological Society; and when the abstract was seen by the Committee on Safety of Medicines; [20623]

(7) if Ministers asked the Medicines Control Agency to arrange the meeting of the Committee on Safety of Medicines held on 13 October 1995; [20562]

(8) on what dates after 13 October the Committee on Safety of Medicines considered matters relating to the safety of oral contraceptives containing desogestrel and gestodene; [20483]

(9) on whose instructions the letter over the signature of the chairman of the Committee on Safety of Medicines of 18 October 1995 was issued. [20560]

Mr. Malone: The hon. Member, and the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) have already pursued these matters in great detail. I refer the hon. Member to the statement to the House by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 23 October 1995 at columns 701–10 and to the replies I gave on 12 June 1996 at columns 250–71, 7 November 1995 at columns 679–80, 11 December 1995 at columns 522–23, 19 December 1995 at columns 1148–50 and 1152–54, 8 February 1996 at columns 343–48, 7 March 1996 at column 321, 14 March 1996 at column 752, 21 March 1996 at columns 317–18, 25 March 1996 at column 428, 28 March 1996 at column 748, 1 April 1996 at column 53, 2 April 1996 at columns 184–86, 24 April 1996 at columns 172–74, 25 April 1996 at column 281, 30 April 1996 at columns 497–99, 9 May 1996 at columns 243–44, 10 May 1996 at columns 280–82, 5 June 1996 at columns 447–49, 13 June 1996 at columns 245–247, 17 June 1996 at column 358, 20 June 1996 at columns 570–71, 21 June 1996 at columns 667–68.

Blister Packs

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what ways British standards covering the strength of blister packs for pharmaceutical products differ from those applying in other European Union countries. [20541]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not available centrally.

Medical Personnel (Voluntary Work Overseas)

Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made since the NHS executive letter of 28 June 1995 in facilitating the release of medical personnel for voluntary work overseas, with special reference to Medical Emergency Relief International; what new proposals he has to facilitate their release; and if he will make a statement. [19610]

Mr. Malone: Executive letter (95)69 makes plain that decisions on whether to release staff to work overseas are matters for local national health service employers. I understand that a number of trusts have made agreements with Voluntary Services Overseas about releasing health professionals to work in developing countries.

Treatment Costs

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the average cost per patient treated in each NHS trust in England. [19718]

Mr. Horam: The information available, in the form of average cost per finished consultant episode, has been placed in the Library.

Health Service Chairmen (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the chairman of each NHS trust and health authority in west Yorkshire; when each was appointed; and when their current period of office comes to an end. [20108]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is listed in the table.

Health authority	Chairman	Appointed from	Appointed to
Bradford	Zahida Manzoor	1 April 1996	31 March 1998
Calderdale and Kirklees	Allan Templeton	1 April 1996	31 March 2000
Leeds	Clive Leach	1 April 1996	31 March 2000
Wakefield	Anne Bolter	1 April 1996	31 March 2000

NHS trust	Chairman	Appointed from	Appointed to
Airedale	Peter Bell	1 December 1993	30 November 1997
Bradford Community Health	John Watson	2 December 1996	30 November 2000
Bradford Hospitals	Linda Pollard	15 July 1996	31 October 1999
Calderdale Healthcare	Ian Hughes	15 July 1996	31 October 1999
Dewsbury Healthcare	John Hemingway	1 November 1995	31 October 1999
Huddersfield Healthcare	Garrick Graham	1 November 1994	31 October 1998
Leeds Community and Mental Health Services	Bill Kilgallon	1 November 1994	31 October 1998
Pinderfields Hospitals[1]	Vacancy
Pontefract Hospitals[1]	Christine Searby	1 November 1996	31 October 1997
St. James's and Seacroft University Hospital	Tony Hughes	1 April 1995	30 November 1998
United Leeds Teaching Hospitals	David Hall	1 April 1995	30 November 1998
Wakefield and Pontefract Community Health	Roy Widdowson	1 November 1996	31 October 2000
West Yorkshire Metropolitan Ambulance	Alan Titterington	1 November 1996	31 October 1998

[1] Applications are currently being considered for the chairmanship of the merged Pinderfields and Pontefract Hospitals trust.

Ambulance Trusts

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) emergency vehicles and (b) vehicles for non-emergency services were in service with each NHS ambulance trust in each of the last three years. [20128]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not collected centrally. The second report of the Health Committee in Session 1994–95, copies of which are available in the Library, provides some information about the number of emergency ambulances in service at that time.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vehicles and of what type are (i) owned and (ii) leased by each NHS ambulance trust; and, for each type, how many are (a) less than one year old, (b) between one and three years old, (c) between four and seven years old and (d) eight or more years old. [20129]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available centrally.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current average waiting time between a child being referred for speech therapy, an assessment taking place and referral for treatment. [20132]

Mr. Burns: The information requested is not available centrally. Under the childrens charter, parents can expect to be told the local charter standard for the maximum waiting time before their child is seen.

Trust Boards (Disabled People)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with disabilities are members of NHS trust boards; and what percentage this is of the total membership. [20131]

Mr. Malone: Information on all trust board members is not available. Of 845 non-executives appointed since monitoring began in July 1996, nine—1.06 per cent.—considered themselves to have a disability. Information about executive trust board members with disabilities is not collected centrally.

Residential Care Charges

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that the partial equity release insurance scheme will form part of the long-term care partnership proposals set out in the draft Community Care (Residential Charges) Bill. [20127]

Mr. Burns: The Government remain willing to explore options for making equity release a safe and affordable way of financing the purchase of long-term care insurance, as made clear in paragraph 29 of the policy statement "A New Partnership for Care in Old Age" (Cm 3563), copies of which are available in the Library.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning were notified to his Department in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [20194]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary gave the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Dr. Strang) on 27 February 1997, Official Report, columns 307-308. Data for the preceding years are available from the same source.

Medicinal Drugs (Third World)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to persuade other nations to reduce the distribution of surplus medicinal drugs in third world and other countries following the recent medicinal drug deaths in Nigeria, Haiti and Lithuania. [20292]

Mr. Malone: The United Kingdom will continue to work with other countries and appropriate international organisations, particularly the World Health Organisation, in pursuit of agreed standards and guidelines regarding drug donations and their safety.

Funding (Market Forces Factor)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of overall funding reflects the pay element of the market forces factor in the allocations of resources in each health authority. [20461]

Mr. Horam: The market forces factor is one component of the weighted capitation formula used to calculate health authority targets which in turn inform allocations.

There are six elements within the MFF adjustment and their corresponding weightings are shown in the table:

Element	Weighting Percentage
Staff	57.31
Medical and dental London weighting	8.68
Non pay	22.57
Land	1.17
Buildings	7.94
Equipment	2.33
Total	100

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of the market force factor in his health authority funding formula in areas which his Department has identified as having low rates of pay largely based on Whitley Council agreements. [20459]

Mr. Horam: The staff market forces factor enables all health authorities to meet trust prices which reflect national pay agreements.

Anti-anthrax Vaccination

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the recommended interval between each injection in a course of anti-anthrax vaccination. [20449]

Mr. Horam: This information is contained in the book "Immunisation Against Infectious Diseases" issued by the Health Departments, which was issued to all practising clinicians and copies of which are available in the Library. The information is also routinely included in the insert included in every pack of vaccine.

Four injections of 0.5 ml is recommended. There should be an interval of three weeks between the first three injections, and six months between the third and fourth. Subsequent reinforcing doses of 0.5 ml are recommended at annual intervals.

Oakleaf Rehabilitation Centre, Guildford

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will pay an official visit to the Oakleaf rehabilitation centre in Guildford. [20473]

Mr. Burns: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has no plans to visit the Oakleaf rehabilitation centre.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 March, Official Report, column 114, how much money was spent by fundholding general practitioners practices in (a) North Yorkshire, (b) Yorkshire region and (c) Northern region on purchasing hospital and community health services from private sector providers as defined by sub-code 160 in form FAA23 in the accounts filed by health authorities in each year since general practitioner fundholding started. [20690]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is given in the table.

Expenditure by GP fundholders on the purchase of healthcare from non-NHS providers

1. The 1995–96 figures are provisional.

2. Northern and Yorkshire Regions merged in 1994–95, though South Cumbria transferred to the North West region.

3. Expenditure in North Yorkshire family health service authority is included under the Yorkshire region for 1991–92 to 1993–94 and the Northern and Yorkshire region total for 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Anti-depressants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment his Department has made of the (a) short-term and (b) long-term effects of (i) tricyclic anti-depressants and (ii) selective serotinin re-uptake inhibitors; and if he will make a statement. [20537]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 6 February 1997, Official Report, at column 723, which referred to benzodiazepines and tricyclic anti-depressants. The answer to that question also applies to selective serotonin re-uptake inhibitors.

Funding (Private Health Care Investment)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account is taken of the level of investment in private health care in the formula used to distribute resource allocations to health authorities. [20460]

Mr. Horam: The national weighted capitation formula determines health authorities' shares of available resources and its aim is for health authorities to be able to purchase similar levels of health services for resident populations in similar need. The formula does not take explicit account of levels of private medical insurance and therefore allocations are not directly affected.

The national health service is available to all, regardless of ability to pay, and people with private medical insurance always have the option to use the NHS.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the number and proportion of pensioners in each region of the United Kingdom who received (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) council tax benefit. [17484]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the tables. The information for May 1994 corrects that given in my reply of 9 January 1996, Official Report, columns 171–72.

Income support pensioner recipients by region: May 1995

Gulf War Victims (Compensation)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost to the social services of the delay in the payment of compensation to United Kingdom victims of the Gulf war through the United Nations Compensation Commission. [18726]

Mr. Heald: None. The United Nations compensation arrangements relate to United Nations peace-keeping operations. Operation Granby in the Gulf conflict was a multinational force operation mounted under a UN resolution and is not therefore covered by those compensation arrangements.

Private Finance Initiatives

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, column 720, if he will provide figures for his Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93. [20390]

Mr. Burt: Information on the Department of Social Security's private finance initiative projects is not available in the format requested. Disaggregating the figures quoted in table 5.5 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" into individual, identifiable projects at this stage would involve publishing commercially confidential material, harm the competitive position of a third party and prejudice the Department's position in on-going and future project negotiations.

Basic Pension Plus

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cumulative cost of the basic pension plus proposals between 2020 and 2040. [20488]

Mr. Heald: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 11 March, Official Report, column 194.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of (a) average pensioner incomes, (b) the distribution of future pensioner incomes and (c) the number of pensioners living on incomes under half the national average for the years before pension benefits will be paid under the basic pension plus scheme. [20469]

Mr. Heald: The available information is contained in Government economic service working paper No. 129, titled "PENSIM: A dynamic simulation Model of Pensioners' Incomes", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many pensioners he estimates would be reliant on means-tested benefits in retirement if people made contributions only at the minimum 5 per cent. level under the basic pension plus proposals; and what assumptions about the level of means-tested benefits underlie this estimate; [20500]

(2) what would be the impact on the retirement income of (a) people on (i) a quarter, (ii) a half, (iii) three quarters and (iv) average earnings and (b) public spending on means-tested benefits under the basic pension plus scheme if people made contributions only at the minimum 5 per cent. level. [20499]

Mr. Heald: The rebates will be around £9 a week plus for employees—around 5 per cent. of earnings on which national insurance is payable. The basic pension guarantee will ensure that everyone gets at least as high a basic pension as they would from the current state scheme; and the investment of their funds gives a good prospect of higher pensions. The number of pensioners reliant on income-related benefits could be lower than under the present scheme, even if there were no increase in the number making voluntary additional provision.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his basic pension plus proposal will involve any alteration to the rates of national insurance contributions set out in table 3 of the Government Actuary's report on the 1994 Pensions Bill. [20440]

Mr. Heald: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 11 March, Official Report, columns 197–98.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions underlay his estimate of £10 billion for the continuing cost of the basic pension guarantee after 2040. [20442]

Mr. Heald: The broadly estimated cost of the basic pension guarantee is £10 billion per annum, on the assumptions that broadly the same proportion of the work force as now will accrue credits, and that because of low charges and simple but effective regulation there will not be many funds which fail to produce the required minimum return of 4.25 per cent. per annum.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions he has made about the number of employees opting out of their occupational pension scheme in his basic pension plus proposals. [20490]

Mr. Heald: It has not been assumed that anyone would opt out of an occupational pension scheme as a result of basic pension plus. Members of occupational pension schemes will be able to opt to have their basic pension plus funds managed as an additional voluntary contribution by the occupational scheme.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions he has made in his basic pension plus proposal about the level of additional contributions beyond the 5 per cent. minimum contribution level. [20498]

Mr. Heald: In costing the basic pension proposal, no assumptions have been made about additional contributions beyond the minimum rebates of £9 a week plus 5 per cent. of earnings to fund the state pension. Everyone will have their own pension fund and will have the opportunity to make additional contributions.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate he has made of the value of the pension earned under the basic pension plus for (a) a male and (b) a female on (i) a quarter and (ii) three quarters of male and female average earnings, relative to average male and female earnings in 2040; [20463]

(2) what estimate he has made of the value of the pension earned on entering the basic pension plus in the years (a) 2010, (b) 2020, (c) 2030 and (d) 2040, for those on (i) a quarter, (ii) a half, (iii) three quarters and (iv) average earnings relative to average earnings when they can expect to retire; [20467]

(3) what estimate he has made of the value of the pension earned under the basic pension plus for a woman on average earnings, relative to overall average earnings in 2040. [20464]

Mr. Heald: Generally, at least as good as the pension available from the present state scheme or better.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will assess the impact of altering the capital limits on benefits on the incentive to save under the Government's basic pension plus proposal. [20475]

Mr. Heald: The incentive to save under the basic pension plus proposal will come from the existence of a basic pension plus fund for each individual, to which they can add. The effect on the propensity to save of a change in the capital limits on eligibility for income-related benefits is independent of the basic pension plus proposal.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if public employees who opted out of their pension scheme, or moved to a job in the private sector, would be able to move their pension into a funded private sector pension scheme under the basic pension plus proposals. [20492]

Mr. Heald: Yes. Under current legislation, public service employees who terminate their pensionable service more than one year before the scheme's normal pension age have a statutory right to transfer the cash equivalent of their accrued rights. The transfer payment may be made to another occupational pension scheme, personal pension scheme or suitable insurance policy able and willing to accept it.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what level of charges was assumed for years when people are not contributing to the scheme under the basic pension plus proposals; and what is the estimated effect of this level of fees and charges for years when people are not contributing to the scheme on expected pension benefits. [20502]

Mr. Heald: As the technical note, paragraph 19, explained, the Personal Pensions Investment Authority will publish a list of personal pension providers whose charging structures do not penalise people who take career breaks, intentionally or unexpectedly.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his assumptions for the costs of his basic pension plus proposals allow for behavioural effects resulting from the proposed change in tax relief. [20497]

Mr. Heald: No. There is no reason to believe that there will be significant behavioural effects resulting from the proposed change in tax relief. We will consult the pensions industry and other interested bodies to ensure that any changes are made in a way which preserves, undiminished, the immense contribution that existing pension schemes make to people's pension provision. Pension savings will remain an attractive form of investment for individuals.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions were made about the proportion of occupational pensions schemes

(a) providing salary-related benefits and (b) operating money purchase arrangements under the basic pension plus proposals. [20491]

Mr. Heald: None.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what level of fees and charges was assumed in calculations of the pension benefits under the basic pension plus proposals; what are the administrative costs of occupational pension schemes; and if he will make a statement on the impact of fees and charges on pensions under the basic pension plus proposals relative to the impact of administrative charges in occupational pension schemes. [20501]

Mr. Heald: The assumptions are consistent with those made by the Government Actuary in his report "Occupational and Personal Pension Schemes: review of certain contracting-out terms" Cm 3221. There is currently a range of different cost structures for occupational pension schemes.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated public expenditure cost under the basic pension plus proposals of top-ups for employees with national insurance contributions of less than £9 per week. [20441]

Mr. Heald: Whether such top-ups should be classified as public expenditure is under consideration.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of pensioners who will retire on incomes under half the national average under the basic pension plus scheme. [20468]

Mr. Heald: The number is expected to be smaller than under the current state pension scheme.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the additional contributions necessary for people on (a) a quarter, (b) half, (c) three quarters and (d) average earnings to receive a pension equivalent to the value of the single and married person's tax allowances for those over the age of 65 years if these allowances are uprated in line with (i) prices and (ii) earnings under the Government's basic pension plus proposals. [20476]

Mr. Heald: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what point the Government would use their powers to impose a ceiling on charges under the basic pension plus proposals; and for what reasons the Government have not used their existing powers to limit the charges imposed by existing providers of personal pensions. [20503]

Mr. Heald: During the period prior to legislation we will consult extensively about means of ensuring competitive pressures bear down on costs and charges, but we will not hesitate to use legal powers to impose a ceiling on charges should they not reflect those reduced costs.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the amount of money recovered by the compensation recovery unit in respect of benefits paid to persons who subsequently received compensation for accident, injury or disease in the first six months of the fiscal year 1996; what projection he has made as to the level of such payments in the period April to September 1997; and if he will make a statement. [20647]

Mr. Roger Evans: From April to September 1996, just over £69 million was recovered by the compensation recovery unit. It is estimated that approximately £75 million will be recovered during the same period in 1997. These figures are provisional and subject to change.

Benefit Reliance (Evaluation)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on reliance on means-tested benefit and the impact on the incentive to save. [20474]

Mr. Roger Evans: Two recent studies commissioned by the Department provide information relating to the relationship between receipt of income-related benefits and savings. DSS research report No. 38, "Managing Money in Later Life", explored older people's knowledge of the capital limits for income support and their attitudes towards asset holding in relation to these limits. Research report No. 53, "Moving Off Income Support: Barriers and Bridges" provided information on the extent to which income support claimants have savings.

Private Pension Schemes

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to adjust the level of rebates to reflect changes in the Government Actuary's assumptions about the rate of return which private pension schemes can expect to earn. [20443]

Mr. Heald: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) on 11 March, Official Report column 198.

Pensioner Numbers

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the increase in the number of pensioners (a) between 2020 and 2040 and (b) after 2040. [20487]

Mr. Heald: Estimates of the number of pensioners are published in "National Insurance Fund Long Term Financial estimates: Report by the Government actuary on the Third Quinquennial Review" under section 137 of the Social Security Act 1975 (HC160).

All Work Test (Appeals)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals against incapacity benefit all work test decisions are currently outstanding in Greenock and Port Glasgow; what is the average waiting time for such appeals to be heard; what was the number of all work test decisions made in Greenock and Port Glasgow in 1996; and if he will make a statement. [20646]

Mr. Burt: There are currently 317 appeals against incapacity all work test decisions outstanding in Greenock and Port Glasgow. The average waiting time for such appeals to be heard is 25 weeks and a total of 200 all work test decisions were made in Greenock and Port Glasgow in 1996.

Social Fund Funeral Payments

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to change the provision of social fund funeral payments. [20953]

Mr. Roger Evans: Amending regulations and a copy of the Social Security Advisory Committee's report, along with my response, have been laid before the House today. After having carefully considered the committee's report, we have decided to proceed with the main changes as originally proposed.

The changes will target help more precisely on those most in need. In cases where there is no surviving partner, where a parent, son or daughter of the deceased exists, and neither they nor their partner are in receipt of an income-related benefit, it will be considered unreasonable for someone who is receiving such a benefit to take responsibility for the funeral expenses.

The level of help available will increase and be much easier to understand. The person responsible for arranging the funeral will be free to decide which elements they wish to be included, taking into account the level of help available from the social fund. This includes the choice of either burial or cremation, for which the necessary cost will be met separately. In the case of a burial, this cost alone can exceed £1,500 in some parts of the country.

Where the deceased lived in a remote area of the country, or died away from home, extra help will be available. In addition, up to £600 will be available for other funeral expenses.

The revised scheme aims to balance the needs of someone who has good reason for taking responsibility for arranging a funeral and the taxpayer who has to fund the cost.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes were recorded in each borough by the Metropolitan police within each category of crime in 1996; how many incidents of theft or unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle and of theft from a motor vehicle were recorded in each borough; how many of the burglaries recorded in each borough were in a dwelling; and how many were in another building. [20192]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 17 March 1997]: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes have been reported in each of the London boroughs in 1997 to date, broken down by type of crime and clear-up rate. [20176]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not yet available centrally.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the compliance of his Department's policy in respect of the detention of asylum seekers convicted of using false documents with the terms of article 31 of the UN convention relating to the status of refugees; and if he will make a statement. [20277]

Mr. Kirkhope: It is for the prosecuting authorities to decide whether to prosecute a person for using false documents. The prosecution of people who have not sought asylum in the United Kingdom, but have attempted to enter or leave the country using false documents, is not a breach of article 31 of the United Nations convention. Any subsequent application for asylum in the United Kingdom would be determined on its individual merits. Detention solely under Immigration Act powers would be authorised only if there were good grounds for believing that the person would not comply with the terms of temporary admission.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to open a new detention centre for asylum seekers at Dover; and if he will make a statement. [20278]

Mr. Kirkhope: We are examining the case for seeking to locate an immigration detention centre in the Dover area, but no firm proposals have yet been developed.

Police Authorities (Staff)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police authority in England and Wales the number of (a) police officers and (b) civilian staff employed (i) in 1979, (ii) in 1990 and (iii) at the latest available date. [20649]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The information requested is given in the table.

Police Cautions

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police authority the number and percentage of people arrested who were released after receiving a police caution in (a) 1990, (b) 1994 and (c) the latest available date. [20529]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 17 March 1997]: Detailed data on the number of people arrested are not collected centrally.

Information available on the number of people cautioned by police force area is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Volume 3". Table S3.7(A) in the 1990 and 1994 editions and table S3.6(A) in the 1995 volume contain that information.

Copies are available in the Library.

Acquittals

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each (a) magistrates court and (b) Crown court the percentage of defendants acquitted in (i) 1990, (ii) 1994 and (iii) the latest available date. [20530]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 17 March 1997]: Readily available information is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables".

Magistrates court data for individual petty sessional divisions can be found in the 1990 volume 5, table S5.1 and in volume 4, table S4.1, of the 1994 and 1995 editions.

Data for individual Crown court centres are published in the 1990 volume 3, table S3.6(A) and in volume 2, table S2.3, of the 1994 and 1995 editions.

Copies are available in the Library.

Child Support Agency

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the annual additional costs of police time arising out of CSA decisions; and if he will make a statement. [20172]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally. The cost of specific activities and operations carried out by the police is a matter for chief officers. The Government would not collect data of this kind unless there was a specific and justifiable need to do so.

Possession of Cannabis (Court Proceedings)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police authority in England and Wales the number, and percentage, of people arrested for possession of cannabis who were (a) cautioned, (b) tried in a magistrates court and (c) tried in a higher court in (i) 1990, (ii) 1994 and (iii) the latest available date. [20528]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 17 March 1997]: Detailed data on the number of people arrested are not collected centrally.

Information available on the number of people cautioned, proceeded against at magistrates courts and tried at the Crown court for 1994 and 1995 by police force area is given in the tables. Comparable 1990 data for offences of possession of a controlled drug do not distinguish the type of drug.

Police Stations

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the parliamentary constituencies in the United Kingdom which do not contain a police station. [20214]

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has responsibility for the police service in England and Wales. The information requested is not kept centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The position in Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for the respective Secretaries of State.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

"Competing for Quality"

Sir Kenneth Carlisle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the Government's response to the "Competing for Quality" policy review. [21077]

Mr. Freeman: The "Competing for Quality" policy review endorsed the Government's policy of improving efficiency and quality through competition and the involvement of the private sector and made a large number of recommendations for enhancing "Competing for Quality" programmes.

Since the review was published, the Government have been considering their recommendations and have consulted the CBI and the Council of Civil Service Unions.

I am happy to announce now that the Government accept the large majority of the review's recommendations. I expect Departments to follow the advice of the review in their "Competing for Quality" programmes.

In particular, I want to stress:

Departments should continue to develop co-operation with the private sector, in order to maximise the opportunities for improvement in value for money.

the leadership of senior management in Departments continues to be important for success and they should encourage the scope of innovation and improvement through competition to be continuously widened.

staff are our key asset and they should be properly trained for and supported in managing competition programmes. The concerns of those affected by competitions should be addressed.

improving quality and improving value for money should go hand in hand.

transparency is important for success and will be achieved through the Government's initiatives on open government and by the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting.

The Government are not able to accept fully the review's recommendations on:

imposing minimum cost thresholds for competition

The review points out that high process costs have eroded, or in some cases exceeded, savings made by submitting to competition small or low cost areas of work. It suggests a minimum threshold below which competition should be avoided. The Government consider that this is too inflexible and could inhibit Departments from making worthwhile gains even in relatively small areas. In any competition, Departments should package small activities together as well as looking for other ways to minimise process costs. Then they should satisfy themselves that the benefits would be worth the process costs involved. But the Government do not plan to impose rigid cost thresholds, as proposed by the review.

restructuring activities in preference to competition

The review recommends that internal restructuring options should be pursued before putting activities out to competition. It also recommends that, in general, strategic contracting out (that is, competition between private sector organisations to supply services to Government, without any in-house teams competing as in a market test) is to be preferred to market testing, because the net savings are likely to be higher and because it may offer a better way of handling staff interests. The Government's policy, as was set out in the "Continuity and Change" White Paper (Cm 2627), continues to be to improve efficiency and quality through competition and by involving the private sector. But within this policy, Departments are free to make informed judgements of the relative benefits of internal restructuring, market testing and contracting out.

indemnities for contractors' against redundancies after staff transfer under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations, 1981, as amended ("TUPE")

The review recommends contractors should be indemnified by the Government against the cost of future redundancies in case work is abolished at the end of a contract. Indemnities would create contingent liabilities and, in general, the Government believe the interests of the taxpayer are best served by a clean break. But indemnities can be negotiated exceptionally, with the agreement of the Treasury, on the basis of criteria issued in 1994.

The review also recommended that indemnities should be given against the effects of any future amendments to the European acquired rights directive, on which TUPE is based. The Government do not give indemnities against changes in legislation, but would be prepared to consider whether any transitional arrangements were needed in the event of significant changes to the directive which resulted in the need to amend TUPE.

In due course, the forthcoming Government's "Guide to Competing for Quality" will give fuller guidance to Departments.

Civil Service Salaries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the average increase in civil service salaries since February 1993. [20653]

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available in the precise form requested but I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) on 24 February, Official Report, column 125.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in how many cases, in the last 12 months, he was advised that the cost of answering a parliamentary question would exceed £450; and in how many of those cases he declined to provide an answer on grounds of disproportionate cost. [20652]

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 5 March 1997, Official Report, column 618.

HMSO

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals there are to change the 1996–97 cash limit for Her Majesty's Stationery Office. [21044]

Mr. Freeman: The cash limit for Her Majesty's Stationery Office, class XVII, vote 4, will be reduced by £50,000 from £1,191,000 to £1,141,000. This reflects the partial offset of increased expenditure in the Office of Public Service, class XVII, vote 1, as announced in a previous answer on 31 January 1997, Official Report, column 386.

Government Business

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidance is issued to Government Departments on the conduct of Government business once an election is announced. [21045]

Mr. Freeman: The guidance covering the conduct of Govnerment business once an election is announced was issued to Departments yesterday and copies of it have been placed in the Library of the House.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the last 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19779]

Mr. Streeter: The information requested is as follows:

1982–83: 1
1983–84: 4
1984–85: 4
1985–86: 4
1986–87: 4
1987–88: 3
1988–89: 2
1989–90: 3
1990–91: 2
1991–92: 0
1992–93: 2
1993–94: 1
1994–95: 4
1995–96: 4.

With two exceptions—one in 1984–85 and the other in 1994–95—all of the Bills were passed by Parliament. The figures include measures of law reform, but not consolidation Bills.

Justices Chief Executive (Hartlepool)

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what decision he has reached concerning the application of the justices chief executive in Teeside to acquire the responsibilities of the justices clerk in Hartlepool; and if he will make a statement. [20839]

Mr. Streeter: My Department has not yet received such an application.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the last 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19766]

The Attorney-General: Save for consolidation Bills, which are not treated as departmental business, none.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Treaties

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many international treaties the United Kingdom has signed in each of the last 15 years; how many were judged to require Acts of Parliament prior to notification; and how many times in that period a Bill to give effect to a treaty was not passed by Parliament. [19781]

Dr. Liam Fox: A total of 1,381 treaties have been signed by the United Kingdom since 1 January 1982:

1982: 67
1983: 78
1984: 69
1985: 65
1986: 99
1987: 105
1988: 81
1989: 110
1990: 113
1991: 92
1992: 89
1993: 122
1994: 117
1995: 84
1996: 90.

The treaties cover a wide range of subjects and in a majority of cases Government Departments other than the FCO would have been responsible for determining what legislation, if any, was involved. This information is not recorded in treaty records and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the last 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19764]

Dr. Liam Fox: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office, including the ODA, sponsored the following number of Bills in each of the last 15 years:

1982: 1
1983: 0
1984: 0
1985: 4
1986: 2
1987: 3
1988: 3
1989: 3
1990: 1
1991: 3
1992: 1
1993: 2
1994: 2
1995: 3
1996: 2

All of the Bills have been passed by Parliament.

Montserrat

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the new jetty in the north of Montserrat will be completed; and what assessment he has made of the risk from a volcanic eruption to the people working in the harbour. [20840]

Dr. Liam Fox: The stub of the new jetty was completed in February 1997. It can now be used for limited movement of people and supplies. The full jetty is due for completion in late May 1997. There is continual appraisal of the risk by the scientific team on the island. Contingency plans are in place for the rapid departure of essential workers from the harbour if the circumstances change.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Trans-Pennine Trail

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action she is taking to expedite the completion of the trans-Pennine trail. [18481]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Departmental Web Site

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when her Department established its Internet site; what representations she has received and what data she has collated on the use and utility of the site; and what steps she is taking to increase the amount of information available via the site. [19141]

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage web site, www.heritage.gov.uk, was established in March 1996. The Department's web site allows people to provide feedback on the pages. Representations have been received from bodies wishing to have a link to their web site added to the Department's.

A monthly report is produced which identifies the most commonly accessed information held on the site as well as the total number of people who have visited the site. There are a growing number of DNH publications on the web site with the most recent addition being "Reading the Future—A Review of Public Libraries in England". Future DNH publications will also be posted on the Department's web site and the range of information provided is under review in the light of the recent Green Paper on government.direct.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Treason Charges (Nigeria)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has received on the treason charges bought against Nigerian dissidents on 12 March; and if he will make a statement; [20766]

(2) what reports he has received on (a) the cases of the Nigerian political activists charged with treason by the Nigerian authorities on 12 March and (b) the conditions in which those detained are being held. [20767]

Dr. Liam Fox: Our high commission in Lagos has reported that, on 12 March, 15 people were arraigned before a magistrates court in Lagos, four in absentia, charged with two counts of treason against the Nigerian Government. The case has been adjourned until 9 May. We have no information, at this stage, about the conditions in which the 11 Nigerian-based detainees are being held, but our high commission is following the case closely.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

McDermott v. Diana, Princess of Wales

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the industrial tribunal application in the case McDermott v. Diana, Princess of Wales, was withdrawn or an award was made consequent on negotiations between the applicant and the respondent. [19960]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The industrial tribunal application in the case of McDermott v. Diana, Princess of Wales was settled prior to the tribunal hearing on 5 March, as result of an agreement reached between the applicant and the respondent.

Internet

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps here Department is taking to prevent access by children to the adult material content of the Internet. [20195]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 17 March 1997]: My Department has worked extensively with the industry, the Home Office and the police to develop an appropriate approach to this important issue. We have encouraged the industry in a self-regulatory approach, backed-up by the application of existing law, and the existing penalties, in the Internet environment. As a result, on 23 September 1996, I was able to launch an industry led initiative—now known as "Internet Watch"—with the backing of the police and the Home Office.

An independent "Internet Watch Foundation"—IWF—was created by the industry to provide a hot-line service where illegal material can be reported and acted upon with the involvement of the service providers and the police as necessary. IWF is also developing, with the help of an advisory board which includes child protection organisations, ratings systems to advise users and suppliers of the normal content of news groups and web pages. This provides both the means to uphold the existing law "on-line", and to provide advisory ratings for other material, which while legal, might be considered unsuitable for children or other vulnerable groups.

Service providers have undertaken to support the availability of ratings material and the facilities in browsing software to screen out material which parents do not wish their children to encounter. This is a major step forward in promoting responsible use of the Internet and in giving parents the tools with which to exercise their own responsibilities for their children "on-line". Copies of the proposal describing the scheme, which has been operating successfully for several months, were placed in the Library of the House at the time the scheme was launched, under the name of "R3 Safety-Net".

British Bankers Association (Code of Practice)

Mr. Richards: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the British Bankers Association proposal to produce a binding code of practice in respect of holders of floating charges giving notice to companies of their intention to appoint an administrative receiver. [21261]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The British Bankers' Association—BBA—has today launched a statement of principles entitled, "Banks and Businesses: Working Together". I, along with my hon. Friends the Minister for Small Firms and the Economic Secretary, believe that this is a positive step in the direction of better communications between bankers and their business customers. As such, we believe it should be of major benefit to both small to medium enterprise—SME—companies and other businesses.

The primary aim of the statement of principles is to bring about increased and improved communications in bank-customer relationships, particularly where financial difficulties are encountered. The banks will aim to provide businesses with early warning of any concerns they may have together with a reminder of the benefits of taking appropriate advice. By addressing problems at an early stage the statement of principles will underpin the banks' stated commitment to support sustainable rescues. It will also give business access to banks' complaints procedures and, where applicable, the banking ombudsman. For these reasons the statement of principles has potential additional benefits which would not be delivered by the five days notice proposal. At present 90 per cent. of the SME market will be covered by it.

All the major clearing banks have agreed to be bound by the statement of principles but some of the smaller banks have yet to sign up. I strongly encourage them to do so without delay.

The Government welcome the statement of principles and the issue of whether legislation is still needed will be reviewed in the light of whether it is delivering the expected benefits to business.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Timms: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 10 March, Official Report, column 35, if he will make a statement on how the methodology set out in the note placed in the Library on 2 February 1990 was used to assess the employment consequences of a national minimum wage on the basis of the 1995 new earnings survey. [20763]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The methodology was used in the same way as set out, in detail, in the note placed in the Library of the House on 2 February 1990. The calculation incorporated the latest earnings data from the April 1995 NES and employment figures for the first quarter of 1995 from the "Workforce in Employment". This gave a figure of around 1 million jobs lost from the introduction of a national minimum wage set at £4 an hour, assuming half restoration of pay differentials.

TRANSPORT

Ringway Parliamentary Support Group

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on each meeting between Ministers in his Department acting in an official capacity and the ringway parliamentary support group. [20313]

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend met the group on 26 February 1997. The main subject of discussion was the liberalisation of bilateral air services agreements.

In addition, my right hon. Friend attended a reception organised by the group in Westminster Hall in July 1995 and opened a small exhibition about the airport in the Upper Waiting Hall in July 1996. My noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping also attended a reception held in conjunction with the above exhibition in July 1996.

Bus Working Group (Consultation)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultation has taken place between the bus working group and its sub-groups and (a) local authorities and (b) members of the public. [20445]

Mr. Watts: Consultation takes place by means of the membership of the bus working group and its sub-groups, all of which include representatives of the local authority associations and the National Federation of Bus Users. The membership of the bus working group was set out in my answer of 18 December columns 658-59 to the hon. Member.

Bus Companies (Customer Complaints)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to encourage bus companies to follow good practice in handling customer complaints. [20444]

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 25 February, Official Report column 142–43.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the past 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19763]

Mr. Bowis: The information is set out in the table. All of the Bills were passed by Parliament, with the exception of one—the Civil Aviation Bill of 1985—which was withdrawn.

Salisbury Bypass

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the Highways Agency report on its reviews of the crossing of the River Avon south of Salisbury by the proposed Salisbury bypass. [21014]

Mr. Watts: Copies of the Highways Agency review report, which is in three volumes, were placed in the Library on 17 March. The report identified two possible alternative routes to the published route for the bypass which would avoid land having to be taken from the newly designated East Harnham meadows site of special scientific interest in the Avon valley. In accordance with undertakings given when my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment announced their views on the proposed bypass last October, we will shortly be affording interested parties an opportunity to comment on the agency's report.

Marine Aids to Navigation

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future provision of marine aids to navigation by the general lighthouse authorities. [21125]

Mr. Bowis: The general lighthouse authorities carried out a consultation exercise during 1996 to determine user views on the future provision of marine aids to navigation. The major proposals, which were supported by respondents, were that the UK should provide a differential global positioning system, adopt the Loran C system as provided by the north-west Europe Loran C system agreement and discontinue the Decca navigator system and the radiobeacon service as soon as was reasonable. The GLAs proposed to maintain traditional aids to navigation, subject to regular reviews.

We welcome the GLAs' proposals and accept the need to establish a civil marine navigation plan as a sound basis for planning the future provision of aids to navigation into the next century.

We support the broad thrust of the proposals which are in line with developments in the international maritime community and will assist the transition to a civil global navigation satellite system. The balance of opinion following the consultation exercise supports the provision by the GLAs of DGPS for marine users based on the global positioning system at a relatively small cost to the general lighthouse fund. The system offers improved navigational accuracy while maintaining the system integrity of GPS, as well as the prospective benefits of providing future interface with electronic charting, integrated bridge system vessel traffic services and transponder systems.

The UK is interested in adopting the NEL system to replace the Decca navigator system as the terrestrial back-up to GPS. We cannot commit the UK to NELS until its future has been placed beyond doubt. In the meantime, users should be aware that the GLAs are unlikely to operate the Decca navigator system beyond the year 2000.

The GLAs' proposals can be implemented within the income provided by the reduced level of light dues that we announced on March 6. They will save an estimated £32 million over the next 20 years while offering the prospect of improved accuracy to the navigator. Further reductions in user costs after 2000 are expected from the GLAs' on-going reviews of traditional aids to navigation which will be carried out in consultation with users.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Government will revoke the line orders for the east London river crossing. [21126]

Mr. Bowis: I am pleased to announced that the ELRC revocation order has now been made and is being prepared for publication on 26 March.

The ELRC orders have remained in place while alternatives for crossing the Thames between Beckton and Thamesmead were being considered in order that businesses and residents directly affected by the scheme could continue to benefit from the statutory compensation which accompanied the orders.

DEFENCE

Future Large Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment the Royal Air Force has made of the European staff requirement for the European future large aircraft. [20709]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We assess that the European staff requirement for the future large aircraft, as it is currently drafted, satisfies the United Kingdom's minimum technical requirements for a tactical military airlifter. We are currently considering whether our conditions for re-entry to the FLA programme set out by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) on 16 December 1994—Official Report, column 823—have been met.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it remains his policy to seek to purchase between 40 and 50 future large aircraft. [20694]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside on 11 February this year—Official Report, column 131–32.

Army Technical Support Agency

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the key targets for the chief executive of the Army Technical Support Agency for 1997–98. [21122]

Mr. Soames: The chief executive of the Army Technical Support Agency has been set the following key targets for 1997–98.

1. Influence equipment design by attaining a 15 per cent. increase to 80 per cent. in Procurement Executive integrated logistic support project involvement where ATSA's contribution is equal to or greater than one half-year-man effort.

2. Achieve a 10 per cent. gross cost saving in advanced order recommended spares purchasing without reducing sustainability or availability of land systems equipment.

3. Answer 92 per cent. of ad hoc inquiries within two working days.

4. Achieve an average response time of nine working days for demand for technical publications.

5. Complete 90 per cent. of operational projects and 75 per cent. of priority A projects before the agreed target date.

6. Ensure for at least 70 per cent. of projects that the maintenance specific spares, required to support an equipment throughout its service life, are identified and encoded on to the stores system record by the target date agreed with the equipment manager.

7. Satisfy 90 per cent. of customers when undertaking technical projects.

8. Improve efficiency by 3.6 per cent. over 1997–98 outturn.

9. Respond to 100 per cent. of equipment failure report (or its equivalent) submissions within 14 calendar days of receipt.

RAF (Reserve Personnel)

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the use of the RAF's Reserve personnel; and if he will make a statement. [21154]

Mr. Soames: I am delighted to announce that three new Royal Auxiliary Air Force squadrons are to be formed. An Air Transportable Surgical Squadron will form at Royal Air Force Leuchars on 1 April 1997, with an establishment of 71 reservist personnel. Two Training and Standardisation Squadrons are also to be formed—the first at Royal Air Force Halton also on 1 April 1997, with an establishment of 21 personnel, and the second at Royal Air Force Shawbury on 1 June 1997, with an establishment of nine. In addition, the establishment of No. 4624 (County of Oxford) Movements Squadron Royal Auxiliary Air Force based at Royal Air Force Brize Norton will increase by 69 posts from 1 April 1997. From the same date, the establishment of the Inspectorate Royal Auxiliary Air Force also at Royal Air Force Brize Norton will increase from two posts to four. The new Role Support Squadron concept, which I announced in the House last year with the formation of the Helicopter Support Squadron, is developing in an encouraging way.

Service Personnel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of personnel have (a) committed suicide and (b) suffered a fatal accident in each of the armed services in each of the past seven years; and if he will make a statement. [20033]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 13 March 1997]: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Analytical Services Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. Paul Atobell to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 18 March 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the percentages of personnel in the Services who have committed suicide or died as result of an accident since 1990. As Chief Executive of Defence Analytical Services Agency this matter falls within my area of responsibility.

The information you request is detailed in the attached table. Please note that the figures and percentages shown in the table represent the position based on information we have received as at 3 March 1997 for compatibility with your earlier questions. The figures for suicides ware still provisional for the later years as some Coroners verdicts' are still awaited.

I hope you find these figures useful.

The percentage of armed forces personnel who committed suicide or who were killed in accidents from 1 January 1990 to 31 December 1996 (based on information reported to DASA as at 3 March 1997)

Loan Service Personnel

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for 1991 those countries (a) where British service personnel categorised as loan service personnel were based and (b) in which training exercises took place involving British service personnel. [19914]

Mr. Soames: According to available records, in 1991 British loan service personnel were deployed in the following countries:

Antigua
Australia
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belize
Bermuda
Brunei
Colombia
Dominica
Fiji
Gambia
Ghana
Grenada
Hong Kong
Jordan

Kenya
Lesotho
Malaysia
Mauritius
Namibia
New Zealand
Nigeria
Oman
Qatar
Saudi Arabia
Singapore
St. Lucia
St. Vincent
Swaziland
Turks and Caicos Islands
United Arab Emirates
Zimbabwe

The full records of exercises involving British service personnel in 1991 are not available. According to available records, British service personnel exercised in or with forces from the following countries and dependent territories in 1991:

Ascension Island
Australia
Bahamas
Bahrain
Belgium
Belize
Bermuda
Botswana
Brunei
Canada
Colombia
Cyprus
Denmark
Dominica
Falkland Islands
France
Germany
Gibraltar
Greece
Hawaii
Hong Kong
Italy
Jamaica
Jordan
Kenya
Kuwait
Luxembourg
Malaysia
Namibia
Netherlands
Netherlands Antilles
New Zealand
Norway
Oman
Portugal
Saudi Arabia
Singapore
Spain
Sweden
Thailand
Trinidad and Tobago
Turkey
UAE
United Kingdom
United States

In addition, UK forces exercised with the states of the regional security system and the West Indies Guardship, as part of her routine deployment, would have exercised with many of the Caribbean countries and dependent territories.

Foreign Military Personnel (Training)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many foreign military personnel were in the United Kingdom undergoing military training on 1 March; and if he will list the countries from which they came. [20175]

Mr. Soames: According to our records, on 1 March 1997, a total of 831 military personnel from the following countries were attending training courses in the United Kingdom;

Antigua
Australia
Austria
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Belarus
Belgium
Belize
Botswana
Brazil
Brunei
Bulgaria
Canada
Chile
China
Czech Republic
Denmark
Egypt
Estonia
Fiji
France
Germany
Georgia
Ghana
Greece
Guatemala
Guyana
Hungary
India
Indonesia
Ireland
Israel
Italy
Jamaica

Japan

Saudi Arabia
Senegal
Sierra Leone
Singapore
Slovakia
Slovenia
South Africa
Spain
Sri Lanka
Sweden
Tanzania
Thailand
Tonga
Trinidad and Tobago
Turkey
Ukraine
Uruguay
United Arab Emirates
USA
Yemen
Zimbabwe

In addition, an exercise involving some 2,021 personnel from Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Netherlands, Norway, Spain and USA was taking place in UK waters on that date.

Gulf War

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each of the vaccinations administered to armed services personnel and medical support staff who served in Operation Granby, indicating the reasons in each case for the decision to administer the respective vaccination. [20454]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 21 January 1997—Official Report, column 550.

Service Accommodation

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1997, Official Report, column 552, when the Treasury initially introduced the non-movers package; when responsibility for relocation expenses was transferred to Government Departments; and what additional changes to the terms originally on offer they are permitted to make. [20209]

Mr. Soames: The arrangement for civilian staff that is not known in the Ministry of Defence as the non-mover's package was first introduced by the Treasury in 1989.

The Treasury delegated to Departments the responsibility for determining relocation expenses for civil servants in May 1993.

Departments have a degree of flexibility to make changes within the rules laid down in the civil service management code.

Nuclear Test Programme (Participation)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account he has taken of (a) the case of Kenneth McGinley and EE v. United Kingdom and (b) the ensuing report of the Europe Commission of Human Rights in determining his policy towards compensating participants in the nuclear test programme. [19136]

Mr. Soames: The European Commission of Human Rights concluded in its report on the case of McGinley and EE v. UK that there was a violation of article 6(1) of the convention because, in its opinion, the applicants' lack of access to "relevant records", defined as yield and radiation level records contemporary with the nuclear tests, prevented effective access to the pensions appeal tribunal. It is normal for the Commission to make proposals for compensation to provide "just satisfaction" for a breach of the convention. The Commission's proposals on compensation, however, expressly did not relate to a finding of increased mortality, cancers or other illnesses with participation in atmospheric nuclear tests. As the Committee of Ministers has referred the case to the European Court of Human Rights, the question of compensation no longer falls to be considered at this stage. Compensation would be a matter for the court to decide should it determine a violation of the convention. The Government intend to contest the case.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the last 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19765]

Mr. Soames: The number of Bills sponsored by my Department in each of the past 15 years is as follows:

1982: 1
1983: nil
1984: 1
1985: nil
1986: 2
1987: 1
1988: nil
1989: nil
1990: 1
1991: 2
1992: 1
1993: 1
1994: nil
1995: nil
1996: 2

All the Bills were passed by Parliament.

Retirement Pensions

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of each former two-star appointment and above in (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Air Force and (c) the Royal Navy who is currently in receipt of a retirement pension and the date of their retirement. [20056]

Mr. Soames: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, columns 710–11, if the organophosphate pesticide investigation team report has been sent to the organisations which represent service men and women who served in the Gulf war; and if he will list the main conclusions of the report. [20342]

Mr. Soames: The OPPIT substantive report—Parts One to Three—which contains details of what is now known about the use of organophosphate pesticides by British service personnel during the Gulf War, was published on 10 December 1996 and a copy was placed in the Library of the House. Copies were requested by and sent to a number of Gulf veterans, but not specifically to any veterans organisations. Further copies are available from the Ministry of Defence. The report contained 14 findings and eight observations.

Otterburn Training Area

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how many years the (a) multi-launch rocket system and (b) AS90 self-propelled gun are planned to be in service in the Otterburn training area. [20553]

Mr. Soames: The multiple-launch rocket system is due to remain in service until 2025. The AS90 is expected to remain in service until at least 2020. The Army has made proposals for the development of the Otterburn training area to provide facilities for training regiments equipped with MLRS and AS90 throughout their in-service lives. The notice of proposed development of Otterburn is now subject to a non-statutory public inquiry which commences on 22 April.

Defence Estate Organisation

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of the Defence Estate Organisation. [21121]

Mr. Soames: The Defence Estate Organisation will launch as a defence agency of the Ministry of Defence, on 18 March 1997. The agency will be responsible for assisting MOD in managing the optimum estate of land, buildings and installations to meet the operating needs of the Department. While the management of the estate will remain the responsibility of the occupying MOD budget holder, the DEO plays a vital role in: supporting budget holders estate staff; improving MOD's stewardship of the estate; ensuring MOD receives best value for money for estate services, property management and new works procurement; acting as MOD's centre of estate expertise; and maintaining a strategic overview of the defence estate.

The DEO agency has about 1,400 staff in offices throughout the UK and abroad. The DEO's new headquarters will be at Sutton Coldfield.

The DEO's chief executive, Mr. Brian Hirst, is a widely experienced chartered surveyor recruited from the private sector, who has considerable public sector experience. He has been set the following key targets to be achieved by March 1998, by the end of DEO's first full year of operation:

1. Strategic Overview:
   (a.) To develop the information systems infrastructure necessary to support a strategic overview of the Defence Estate by March 1998.
   (b.) To develop a series of output-based targets for strategic overview.
2. To complete 30–35 establishment development plans across the Defence estate in FY 97–98.
3. To achieve 90 per cent. of total disposals' receipts within year against the 1997–98 target.
4. To meet the following contracts targets:
   (a.) To complete 75 per cent. of construction contracts within one month of the contracted completion date.
   (b.) To complete 90 per cent. of construction contracts within three months of the contracted completion date.
   (c.) To have less than 10 per cent. average variation on financially complete construction contracts.
5. To meet the following efficiency targets:
   (a.) To achieve a reduction in operating costs of 25 per cent. compared with the 1996–97 outturn.
   (b.) To develop a volume measure for all of DEO's business, baseline it and propose targets for subsequent years.
6. To complete the rural defence estate maintenance CFQ scoping and feasibility studies by end of March 1997 and to complete a CFQ scoping study for the whole of the DEO by December 1997.
7. To develop a mechanism for measuring customer satisfaction, establish a baseline by September 1997 and propose targets for subsequent years.
8. To put in place an integrated compliance audit and effectiveness review system for projects by March 1998.

I have arranged for copies of the agency's framework document and corporate plan to be placed in the Library of both Houses.

Gulf War (Carcases)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the carcases of camels, sheep and other animals killed during the Gulf war were (a) flow to Boscombe Down airfield, (b) transported thence to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down and (c) tested for the causes of their deaths, indicating the results of the tests. [19518]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 10 march 1997]: At present my Department has no verified information concerning reports of dead animals being found during the Gulf war. The Chemical and Biological Defence sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, situated at Porton Down, has no record of any dead animals being received or analysed in connection with the Gulf war. However, a search for information relevant to this subject is currently underway.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Visits

5. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to make an official visit to Romford. [19196]

The Prime Minister: During the next few weeks, I hope to visit all parts of the United Kingdom.

Employment Prospects (Lichfield)

8. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the effects of Her Majesty's Government's policies on employment prospects in Lichfield. [19200]

The Prime Minister: The Government's sound economic policies and labour market reforms have encouraged employment creation throughout the country. Unemployment has fallen by more than a million in the United Kingdom, by more than 20,000 in the county of Staffordshire, and by more than 2,000 in Lichfield.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 18 March. [19537]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 18 March. [19538]

The Prime Minister: This morning, I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness (Disabled People)

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many disabled people were accepted as homeless and in priority need by local authorities in England during 1996. [20352]

Mr. Curry: Information is given on the numbers of households for whom local authorities accepted responsibility to secure accommodation, under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985, in the quarterly information bulletin entitled, "Households found accommodation under the homelessness legislation: England", the latest issue covers 1996. Table 3 provides a breakdown of acceptances by category of priority need, including one for households with a member who is vulnerable due to physical disability. Copies of the bulletin are in the Library.

Hedgerows

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department offers to local planning authorities on how to ensure that a hedgerow's importance is accurately evaluated within the statutory 28 days if those days fall outside the wildlife breeding season; and if he will make a statement. [20272]

Mr. Clappison: The draft Hedgerows Regulations, which were laid in both Houses on 3 March, allow a local planning authority a period of 42 days to respond to a hedgerow removal notice, and so to evaluate the importance of the hedge. The draft regulations also provide that whether the hedgerow contains rare or endangered wildlife species shall be determined either by a site survey or by reference to previous records, as set out in schedule 1. Guidance on the implementation of the regulations, including how local planning authorities should apply the evaluation criteria, will be issued before they come into effect.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made over the last two months of the representations he has received regarding hedgerow protection; and if he will make a statement on how future (a) proposals and (b) legislation will ensure that targets set out in the biodiversity action plan are achieved. [20273]

Mr. Clappison: A total of 465 responses to the Government's consultation on draft Hedgerows Regulations were included in the analysis reported on by the consultants ERM. A copy of their report is in the House Library. These reponses were carefully considered and taken into account in the revised draft regulations laid in Parliament on 3 March 1997.

Once passed by Parliament, implementation and enforcement of these regulations to protect important hedgerows will contribute towards the targets set out in the biodiversity action plan on ancient and/or species rich hedgerows. The group which will review progress and take forward this action plan, chaired by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, will meet on 24 April.

Straw Bale House Construction

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the scope for straw bale house construction in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [20270]

Mr. Clappison: The Department of the Environment has made no assessment of the use of straw bales for house construction in the UK. However, at the end of last year, staff of the Building Research Establishment inspected a single storey demonstration project in Belfast and it has since agreed to undertake some monitoring studies.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the (a) environmental and (b) financial benefits of straw bale built housing; what Government training opportunities are available in this construction method; and if he will make a statement. [20271]

Mr. Clappison: The Department of the Environment has made no assessment of the environmental and economic benefits of straw bale built housing. There are no Government training opportunities available at present.

Water Pollution

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have been made under section 85 of the Water Resources Act 1991 for offences in north Staffordshire; and if he will make a statement. [20165]

Mr. Clappison: There have been 11 prosecutions for illegal discharges under section 85 of the Water Resources Act 1991 in the two Environment Agency pollution control districts which cover most of north Staffordshire. Seven of these offences related to pollution caused by agricultural discharges, three to industrial premises and one breach by a sewage treatment works of a consent condition in respect of colour.

Sewerage Discharges

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on sewerage discharge in upper Trent; and if he will make a statement. [20166]

Mr. Clappison: None.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many samples of discharge have been taken by the Environment Agency since 1 April 1996 in Stoke-on-Trent, North; of these, how many showed a breach of discharge consent under the Water Resources Act 1991; and in each case what was the nature of the breach. [20167]

Mr. Clappison: Statistics relating to the area of Stoke on Trent, North are not available. However, for the two relevant pollution control districts of the Environment Agency, since 1 April 1996, 567 sampling visits have been undertaken during which 364 samples were obtained. Of these, 19 indicated a breach of the conditions of a discharge consent. I understand that the Environment Agency has already provided the hon. Member with details of these cases and the results of subsequent investigations.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many cases the Environment Agency has granted new discharge consent without advertisement in north Staffordshire. [20168]

Mr. Clappison: Since the formation of the Environment Agency only one discharge consent has been issued in the two relevant pollution control districts of the agency. This related to the discharge of minewater and site drainage and was not advertised.

Water Protection Policy

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 5 March, Official Report, column 682, when he estimates his Department will issue the discussion paper on using economic instruments to achieve water protection policy objectives; and if he will make a statement. [20312]

Mr. Clappison: The Government intend to issue the paper during the spring.

UN Environment Programme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the current financial position of the UN Environment Programme. [19137]

Mr. Clappison: The 19th governing council of the United Nations environment programme met in Nairobi from 27 January to 7 February. The Government's main objective was to secure decisions which would restore confidence in UNEP and hence reverse the sharp decline in UNEP's funding over recent years. Satisfactory proposals on the governing structure and UNEP's mandate were proposed by the president of the Governing Council, and gathered a wide measure of support from developed and developing countries, but were resisted by some member of the Committee of Permanent Representatives. The governing council was suspended and the Secretary of State took the view that we should suspend our voluntary contribution to the environment fund until these issues are resolved. The United States and Spain took the same view. The Government are now actively seeking ways of resolving this problem with all interested parties.

Chemicals Convention

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards proposed negotiations on a chemicals convention at the UN General Assembly special session. [19138]

Mr. Clappison: The Government supported the recent UNEP governing council decisions on negotiation of legally binding instruments on prior informed consent for trade in certain hazardous chemicals, and on persistent organic pollutants. The governing council also invited the executive director of UNEP to develop a report outlining options for enhanced coherence and efficiency among international activities related to chemicals, including the instrument on the prior informed consent procedure under development and a likely future agreement on persistent organic pollutants. We will consider the conclusions of the report, including any proposal for a chemicals convention, when it is completed.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the last 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19770]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department has been responsible for a total of 63 Government Bills between 1982 and 1996. The breakdown for each year is as follows:

1982: 4
1983: 5
1984: 5
1985: 9
1986: 2
1987: 5
1988: 5
1989: 2
1990: 6
1991: 9
1992: 3
1993: 2
1994: 1
1995: 2
1996: 3

All of these Bills were approved by Parliament, except for one in 1983.

Water and Sewerage Companies

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total indicative value of the water and sewerage companies calculated for each year between 1989 and 1994. [20339]

Mr. Clappison: The total indicative value of the 10 water and sewerage companies calculated in 1989 was £15.2 billion. Indicative values were not recalculated for subsequent years.

Show Houses (Taxation)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusion he has reached following his consideration of the representations recently made to him about the taxation of show houses; and if he will make a statement. [20554]

Sir Paul Beresford: We are still considering our response to representations from the House Builders Federation and the Manufacturing and Construction Alliance that shows houses should be subject to the council tax rather than non-domestic rates. If we decide that show houses should be treated as domestic, we could effect this change through secondary legislation.

Advisory Committee on Release to the Environment

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the dates of, and attendees at, the meetings of his Department's release committee since its inception; what matters were discussed at each meeting; and if he will place in the Library copies of the agendas and papers discussed at each meeting. [20759]

Mr. Gummer: The Advisory Committee on Release to the Environment—ACRE—has been meeting several times a year since its inception as a statutory committee in 1993. I will write shortly to the hon. Gentleman with a list of dates of meetings, and attendees at the meetings. However, a description of the matters which were discussed at each meeting could be compiled only at disproportionate expense. It would be impracticable to place in the Library copies of the agendas and papers discussed at each meeting, but the advice provided by ACRE on consent application for the release and marketing of genetically modified organisms, together with key papers, is maintained in a public register at the Department of the Environment offices in Romney house, Marsham street, London.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the Health and Safety Executive in regard to proposed amendments to European Council directive GO/219/EEC on genetically modified micro-organisms; what action he has taken following the consultations; and if he will make a statement. [20760]

Mr. Gummer: Following the European Commission's adoption in December 1995 of its proposed amendment to the directive, I agreed a strategy for negotiation of the proposal with the Health and Safety Executive based on support for its essential elements. This was reflected in an explanatory memorandum cleared by the Scrutiny Committees of both Houses of Parliament last year.

The proposal has been discussed at three meetings of the Environment Council which I have attended during 1996. The Health and Safety Executive was consulted and full account was taken of its advice. At the last Council, held on 9 December 1996, there was broad agreement between member states that the essential elements of the Commission's proposals should be supported.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports he has received from the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes in respect of the environmental implications of genetically modified organisms. [20761]

Mr. Gummer: None. The Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes advises Health and Agriculture Ministers and the heads of Departments of Health and Social Services and of Agriculture for Northern Ireland on any matters relating to the irradiation of food or to the manufacture of novel foods or foods produced by novel processes.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the amendments proposed by the European Parliament report, A4-0070/97, to the proposal for a Council directive amending directive 90/219/EEC on the contained use of genetically modified micro-organisms (COM (95) 0640-C4-0271/96-95/0340 SYN). [20764]

Mr. Gummer: The Health and Safety Executive, in consultation with officials in the Department of the Environment and other interested Departments, studied the amendments in the light of the objectives which I agreed following the European Commission's adoption of its original proposal. Most of the amendments were consistent with the United Kingdom's objective of reducing ineffective administrative burdens at the same time as improving protection of human health and the environment by targeting areas of highest risk. A substantial number, however, would have undermined that objective.

The European Parliament voted on the proposed amendments on Wednesday 12 March. I am pleased that most of the amendments contrary to our objectives were rejected. A significant minority, however, were passed. Of particular concern is the proposal to alter the legal base of the directive from that which provides for the establishment of minimum safety standards for human health and the environment to that concerned with the establishment of harmonised standards to enhance the functioning of the internal market. The contained use of genetically modified micro-organisms has nothing to do with the internal market, so the proposed change of legal base would be quite inappropriate.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conferences his Department (a) has sponsored and (b) been represented at since January 1996 on genetically modified organisms and the environment. [20765]

Mr. Gummer: (a) On 10 March, my Department sponsored a national conference on biotechnology at which I made the opening speech. This conference was chaired by Lord Selborne, and the outcome of the conference will be reported to me shortly. The conference was informed by the outcome of three consultation conferences. One of those, on the environment applications of biotechnology, was sponsored by my Department.

(b) My officials attend conferences on genetically modified organisms from time to time, but we do not keep a central register of such attendances.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the (a) containment measures, (b) targeting of areas of risk, (c) incorporation of technological changes and (d) notification periods in Council directive GO/219/EEC on the contained use of genetically modified micro-organisms. [20771]

Mr. Gummer: In administering and enforcing the regulations which implement this directive inadequacies have been shown in all four areas.

(a) The containment measures set out in the directive are based on what is appropriate to large-scale activities. Safety would be better ensured by a more flexible approach to containment measures which would enable users of genetically modified micro-organisms to select those most appropriate to the particular type of activity they propose to undertake.

(b) The directive bases notification requirements on the classification of GMMs according to their inherent properties and on an inflexible test of the purpose and scale of intended activities. These criteria are not properly risk-based and therefore result in a disproportionate focus by competent authorities on activities of negligible risk.

(c) The procedure for amending some of the key technical annexes to the directive is far too protracted to allow scientific developments to be taken quickly into account.

(d) The notification periods are unnecessarily long. We have found that notifications can be processed long before the expiry of the periods prescribed in the directive. Notifiers must, however, observe the prescribed periods. The consequence is that the planning schedules of those engaged in contained use activities are needlessly extended and work is delayed.

I am pleased that the European Commission's proposal for amendment of the directive, currently under negotiation, includes provisions which would go a long way to remedying these inadequacies.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has evaluated from the Nuffield Council on Bioethics on the impact of the release of genetically modified organisms into the environment on human health and environmental protection. [20772]

Mr. Gummer: I have received no recent representations from the Nuffield Council on Bioethics on this subject.

Abattoirs (Liquid Waste Discharges)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regulations cover the discharge of liquid wastes from abattoirs; how these regulations are implemented; and what plans he has to review their operation. [20768]

Mr. Gummer: Discharges from abattoirs into the public sewer are regulated by the relevant sewerage undertaker under powers contained in the Water Industry Act 1991. Discharges from abattoirs directly into controlled waters are regulated by the Environment Agency under powers contained in the Environment Act 1995.

Slaughtered Cattle (Disposal)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what advice he has issued on the environmental implications arising from the disposal by (a) landfill and (b) incineration of cattle slaughtered in connection with the BSE crisis; [20828]

(2) what advice has been requested in the last year from (a) his Department and (b) the Environment Agency on the best practical environmental option of disposing of the backlog of cattle slaughtered under the over-30-months scheme. [20829]

Mr. Clappison: Cattle suspected of displaying signs of BSE are slaughtered and their carcases sent for direct incineration in plants contracted to MAFF, which are subject to authorisation by the Environment Agency or relevant local authority under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Agriculture made it clear in the House on 16 April 1996 that cattle wastes from the over-30-months scheme would be treated primarily by rendering, with the resultant material being disposed of by the best practicable environmental option. The disposal of wastes from the scheme is subject to Commission Regulation (EC) 716/96. The regulation requires that the wastes be directly incinerated, or processed at a rendering plant and then destroyed. The regulation does not permit landfill. Rendered material—meat and bonemeal and tallow—is either being incinerated or stored safely pending destruction by the best practicable environmental option—for example, incineration, burning for energy recovery by power stations.

The Government have sought advice from the independent Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee on methods of dealing with cattle wastes. SEAC's conclusions were published on 7 June 1996 in a news release issued by MAFF. A copy is available in the Library of the House. SEAC's advice has been made available to relevant enforcement bodies.

Green Belt, Nottinghamshire

Sir Jim Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to protect the Nottinghamshire green belt from development proposals in the local plan. [21015]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Following a public local inquiry last year into objections to the Nottingham local plan, I understand that the inspector has recommended acceptance of the city council's proposals to release some green belt land for development. It is now for the council to decide whether to accept the inspector's recommendations, and publish any proposed modifications prior to adoption of the local plan.

In making this decision, the council will need to take account of national planning policies. In this regard, the Government remain committed to the protection of green belts, and to ensuring that opportunities for reuse of urban land for developments are maximised. I shall therefore need to be fully satisfied that loss of green belt land is unavoidable in order to meet the future development needs of Nottingham, when I come to consider the council's proposed modifications to its draft plan.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what performance targets have been set for the Ordnance Survey executive agency in the year 1997–98. [21123]

Sir Paul Beresford: The following performance targets have been set for Ordnance Survey in 1997–98:

1. To recover at least 86 per cent. of the costs incurred by the agency, representing an increase of 3 per cent.
2. To ensure that, by 31 March 1998, 97 per cent. of existing major detail is surveyed and available to customers in the national topographic database at any one time—an increase of 1 per cent. over 1996–97. The target will increase to 99 per cent. by the year 2002.
3. In order to provide a quality service to customers, to despatch products in response to orders as follows:

   95 per cent. of all land-line digital map units within five working days—reduced from six days; and

   92 per cent. of small scale products within five working days—an increase of 2 per cent.
4. To increase by 3 per cent. the annual revenue earned per number of staff employed.

These targets are closely associated with the main corporate aims of Ordnance Survey and demonstrate the agency's continuing commitment to customers and to improved value for money for all its stakeholders. These more stringent targets represent significant improvements and will deliver an increasing level of services.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action he proposes to take against those local authorities whose direct labour and direct service organisations failed to meet their statutory financial objectives in 1995–96. [21124]

Sir Paul Beresford: On 14 January this year, 52 statutory notices were served on 36 local authorities concerning the failure of their direct labour and service organisations to meet the required financial objectives in 1995–96. My right hon. Friend has now considered the responses to those notices, and has decided to give 40 directions to 31 local authorities.

The directions take the following forms:

Preventing the authority from carrying out the work if it fails to meet the financial objective in 1996–97 or 1997–98.

for Wolverhampton MBC (grounds maintenance),

Preventing the authority from carrying out the work if it fails to meet the financial objective in 1997–98 or 1998–99.

for Liverpool city council (other catering, building maintenance) for New Forest district council (other catering),

Requiring the authority to retender the work and to seek the consent of the Secretary of State if proposing to award the work in-house.

for Aylesbury Vale district council (refuse collection), for Carrick district council (other catering), for Cheltenham borough council (highways and sewers), for Harborough district council (refuse collection), for London borough of Merton (vehicle maintenance), for London borough of Newham (grounds maintenance), for North Hertfordshire district council (building maintenance), for Oxfordshire county council (schools and welfare catering), for Peterborough city council (other cleaning), for Rochdale MBC (building maintenance),

Requiring authorities to retender work if they fail to meet the financial objective in 1996–97 or 1997–98, and to seek the Secretary of State's consent where the work has to be retendered and where the authority subsequently wish to award work in-house.

for Amber Valley district council (other cleaning), for Bassetlaw district council (refuse collection), for Birmingham city council (grounds maintenance), for London borough of Brent (other cleaning), for Knowsley MBC (other catering), for London borough of Newham (highways and sewers), for Northumberland county council (schools and welfare catering), for Nottinghamshire county council (schools and welfare catering), for Pendle borough council (refuse collection), for Rochdale MBC (schools and welfare catering), for Sefton MBC (vehicle maintenance), for South Lakeland district council (refuse collection), for South Tyneside MBC (schools and welfare catering), for Stoke on Trent city council (highways and sewers), for Westminster city council (grounds maintenance), for Wolverhampton MBC (schools and welfare catering).

Requiring authorities to retender work if they fail to meet the financial objective in 1997–98 or 1998–99, and to seek the Secretary of State's consent where the work has to be retendered and where the authority subsequently wish to award work in-house.

for Amber Valley district council (grounds maintenance), for Barnsley MBC (schools and welfare catering), for Cannock Chase district council (highways and sewers), for Cheltenham borough council (building maintenance), for Oldham MBC (vehicle maintenance, building maintenance, highways and sewers), for Peterborough city council (building maintenance), for Wyre borough council (other cleaning).

Requiring authorities to retender work if they fail to meet the financial objective in 1998–99 or 1999–2000, and to seek the Secretary of State's consent where the work has to be retendered and where the authority subsequently wish to award work in-house.

for Tynedale district council (building maintenance).

The Secretary of State has also decided to take no further statutory action in respect of financial failure in 1996–96 by:

Bedfordshire county council (building cleaning, grounds maintenance, other catering)

Co. Durham district council (new construction over £50,000),

Corby borough council (sports and leisure management),

Hart district council (other catering),

London borough of Merton (other catering),

North Hertfordshire district council (sports and leisure management),

Peterborough city council (grounds maintenance),

Preston borough council (highways and sewers),

Wyre borough council (highways and sewers, vehicle maintenance).

This action demonstrates our commitment to protect the interests of local taxpayers, and ensure that they receive value for money services from their local authorities. Where authorities' in-house teams have failed to achieve their financial targets, and where they do not seem to have taken the steps necessary to bring about an improvement in their performance, we will not hesitate to take statutory action.

Community Alarm Systems

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has following his recent consultation exercise on local authorities' powers to provide community alarm systems; and if he will make a statement. [21127]

Mr. Curry: Having carefully considered the more than 100 responses received to our consultation, we have concluded that local authorities should be empowered to provide community alarms to anyone resident in their area, and to be able to charge for such services. Community alarms can help the elderly to continue to live in their own homes, disabled people to lead independent lives, and can also be useful in tackling crimes such as repeat burglary, domestic violence or racial harassment. We intend to bring forward legislation at the next convenient opportunity.

Central-local Government Information Flows

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to publish the Government's response to the recent efficiency scrutiny on information flows between central and local government; and if he will make a statement. [21128]

Mr. Curry: I have today published the Government's response to the report of the efficiency scrutiny on information flows between central and local government.

This scrutiny, which was published on 14 November 1996, forms part of the Government's war on waste campaign and was the first in a rolling programme of efficiency scrutinies on local government matters designed to cut the burden of paperwork and unnecessary bureaucracy between central and local government. The scrutiny focused in particular on certain key services—personal social services, education, housing and transport—and looked at the European regional development fund, the European social fund and monitoring of local government spending. The scrutiny report concluded that the paper flow could be cut by up to one third, and set out specific recommendations for streamlining information flows.

We have now consulted the local authority associations and other interested bodies, including the Audit Commission and the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy—CIPFA—on the report and its recommendations. Responses we have received have been overwhelmingly supportive of the thrust of the report. In the light of this consultation, the Government have prepared their response to the scrutiny's recommendations, which takes the form of an action plan for implementation of the report's recommendations.

In recognition of the need for central and local government to work closely together, the implementation of the action plan will be overseen by the joint group of senior officials and representatives of the local authority associations, the Audit Commission and CIPFA which I established with local government when the report was published last November. The Government will also establish, with local government, a task force with a remit to make rapid progress in developing and facilitating electronic data transfer between local authorities and Government Departments. The task force has been asked to report by the summer.

The action plan sets out a substantial programme of work, involving a number of Government Departments, to rationalise the data that the Government require of local authorities and the arrangements for its collection. This work reflects the Government's on-going commitment to removing unnecessary burdens on local authorities in their dealings with central Government and should deliver considerable benefits for both central and local government in terms of efficiency gains and better quality information.

I am arranging for copies of the Government response to be placed in the Library of the House. Copies are being sent to the local authority associations and to individual local authorities in England.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Jobcentre Vacancies

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans her Department has to ensure that jobcentres accept individual vacancies for display from private employment agencies only when there is a genuine vacancy; [19756]

(2) if she will make a statement on the Government's policy regarding jobcentre vacancies. [19757]

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 March 1997]: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 18 March 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your questions about Jobcentre display of vacancies from private employment agencies and the policy on Jobcentre vacancies.

In accordance with Employment Service (ES) policy on working with external labour market organisations, the ES has an agreement with the Federation of Recruitment and Employment Services (FRES), the national umbrella body for private employment agencies, under which unemployed jobseekers have access to agency vacancies which are advertised in Jobcentres. This increase the number of jobs available to them through the Jobcentre network. Agency vacancies are accepted for display in Jobcentres only where there is a genuine vacancy; that is where there are details of a specific job, and where a contract exists between the agency and the employer. The service is at the discretion of ES local Business Managers who have guidance which sets out clear criteria for accepting agency vacancies.

Your second question relates to our policy regarding Jobcentre vacancies more generally. Jobcentres provide vacancy advertising services to employers under the provisions of the Employment and Training Act 1973. In 1996 Jobcentres handled over 2.5 million vacancies and helped over 2 million people into jobs. These included both full time and part time jobs and covered a range of occupations and pay levels.

Jobcentres work to guidance which advises them to get full information from employers about each vacancy to enable jobseekers and the ES to determine the suitability of the vacancy for individual clients. The guidance also stipulates that Jobcentres must not accept vacancies from employers which are illegal; would result in a breach of the law; or might put jobseekers at risk.

Once a vacancy has been accepted from an employer it is normally put on the Jobcentre vacancy display boards. The information displayed includes the job title, description of main duties, experience/qualification requirements, hours of work, salary and any additional relevant information.

I hope this is helpful.

Jobseeker's Direction

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the instruction to Employment Service adjudication officers contained in the "Adjudication Offices Guidance", volume IV, paragraph 26664.4, is required to be taken into account when a jobseeker's direction is issued to a claimant. [20295]

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 March 1997]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 18 March 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question asking whether the instruction to Employment Service adjudication officers contained in paragraph 26664.4 of the Adjudication Officer's guidance, is required to be taken into account when a Jobseeker's Direction is issued to a claimant.

The Adjudication Officer's guidance states that it is not reasonable to expect claimants to take steps that could result in an offer of employment that they would have good cause for refusing if it was notified to them by an employment officer. I can confirm that this is required to be taken into account when a Jobseeker's Direction is issued to a jobseeker.

I hope this clarifies the position.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if (a) drug and (b) alcoholism related conditions qualify as good causes for reducing the prospects of employment due to circumstances beyond their control for claimants of jobseeker's allowance. [20329]

Mr. Forth [holding answer 17 March 1997]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 18 March 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about whether drug and alcohol related conditions qualify as good causes for reducing the prospects of employment due to circumstances beyond their control for claimants of Jobseeker's Allowance.

Jobseekers are generally required to be available for work for at least 40 hours or more each week. There are, however, exceptions to this rule. People who suffer from a mental or physical condition that limits the work they are able to do can restrict their availability for work in any way providing their restrictions are reasonable in the light of their condition. They do not have to have reasonable prospects of securing employment.

If an employment adviser accepts that a jobseeker has either a physical or mental health problem and that the restrictions placed are reasonable in the light of that condition no further action is taken on the claim and there would be no referral to adjudication on that account.

Drink and drug problems can interfere with mental and physical health and any jobseekers with a known problem will have their circumstances taken into account when considering their availability for employment. Advisers encourage such jobseekers to seek specialist help and employment as getting and keeping a job may go part of the way to solving the problem. However, should the problem affect their ability to do any work they would be referred to the Disability Employment Adviser in the Jobcentre who in turn may suggest they see their doctor or seek specialist help.

I hope this is helpful.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many primary schools in England and Wales have opted into grant-maintained status; and what are the average league tables scores for (a) grant-maintained schools and (b) schools under local education authority control. [20675]

Mrs. Gillan: There are now 486 grant-maintained primary schools in England. Pupil attainments are generally higher in GM schools than LEA schools; details of their relative performance in national curriculum assessments and GCSE examinations are given in the following tables.

Grant-maintained schools in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Football Pools Industry

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate she has made of the change in the number of jobs in the football pools industry in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside since the national lottery was established; and if she will make a statement. [20769]

Mr. Paice: The Government are aware that some jobs are being lost in the football pools industry on Merseyside. We naturally regret job losses in any sector of the economy. While jobs will inevitably disappear as markets change in a successful and vibrant economy they will be replaced by new jobs providing new products and services. On balance, over 900,000 extra jobs have been created in Britain over the last four years, and unemployment on Merseyside has fallen by nearly 30,000. A wide range of employment and training measures is available to help those who lose their jobs take advantage of the employment growth currently taking place in the UK.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting, publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19382]

Sir John Wheeler: Seven charters and 25 charter standard statements have been published by Government Departments and agencies in Northern Ireland. The table gives details of the cost of publication and circulation of the charters and charter statements and the number issued in each case. Individual public service organisations are responsible for producing and distributing their own charters for those who use their services. The table shows costs of production and distribution in so far as they are available centrally.

The drafting of charters and charter standard statements is generally carried out as an integral part of the work of the services concerned and therefore the cost of drafting is not available.

Ceasefire

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what savings to public funds he estimates occurred as a result of the IRA ceasefire; and if he will indicate where these sums were spent, breaking the figures down by heading. [19363]

Sir John Wheeler: Following the provisional IRA and loyalist ceasefires, the 1994 Northern Ireland public expenditure survey identified some £180 million over the period 1995–96 to 1997–98 which could be prudently reallocated from the plans for the law and order budget. The 1995 survey identified a further £106 million which could be reallocated from the Police Authority for Northern Ireland grant over the period 1996–97 to 1998–99. In addition to the survey changes, it was possible to release a further £12 million and £13 million during 1994–95 and 1995–96 respectively, largely from the PANI grant.

Resources reallocated from law and order, together with other easements internal to the Northern Ireland block, are included in an undifferentiated pool of resources available for reallocation within the block. Moreover, the pool of resources is also affected by external changes driven by national fiscal policy—that is, the Northern Ireland totals were reduced in the 1994 survey and increased in the 1995 survey. Consequently, while it is not possible to identify allocations to individual programmes as coming specifically from law and order, it is a fact that the totals allocated to Northern Ireland programmes, other than those from which the law and order savings were withdrawn, were enhanced by the value of those savings.

As a result of the breakdown of the PIRA ceasefire in February 1996, and of major public order problems, some £36 million had to be reallocated back into the PANI grant and compensation for 1996–97 and a further £120 million added back in the 1996 survey, covering the plans for the period 1997–98 to 1998–00.

Harryville Chapel Protest

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many police officers have been injured while policing the protest at Harryville chapel. [19830]

Sir John Wheeler: Ten police officers have been injured while policing the protests at Harryville.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many police officers have been deployed at the Harryville chapel protest over the past 26 weekends. [19832]

Sir John Wheeler: The average number of police officers deployed at Harryville chapel at weekends since Saturday 14 September 1996 is 180.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people (a) from and (b) from outside the Ballymena area have been arrested or cautioned over incidents related to the protest at Harryville chapel. [19831]

Sir John Wheeler: Twenty persons from the Ballymena area have been arrested in relation to incidents at Harryville chapel. One arrest has been made from outside Ballymena sub-division.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the cost of the policing operation at Harryville chapel in Ballymena for the past 26 weekends. [19829]

Sir John Wheeler: The cost of the policing operation at Harryville chapel from Saturday 14 September 1996 to Saturday 1 March 1997 has been calculated at £984,000, including all police manpower and associated costs.

Rate Bills

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many establishments in each council area in Northern Ireland will have their rate bill increased by more than (a) 25 per cent., (b) 50 per cent., (c) 75 per cent. and (d) 100 per cent., and how many will have their bill reduced in the 1997–98 financial year as a result of the recent rates revaluation. [20317]

Sir John Wheeler: The table provides the information requested:

The figures for increases above 25 per cent., 50 per cent., 75 per cent. and 100 per cent., 23,918 properties in total, include those who will benefit from the transitional relief scheme announced in February. Approximately 19,000, 79 per cent. of the 23,918, will qualify for relief having NAV £10,000 or less.

Department of Education

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the budgeted capital expenditure at DENI headquarters, Bangor, for the last financial year; what is the figure for the present financial year; and what estimate he has made for the next financial year. [20353]

Mr. Moss: The budgeted capital expenditure for the three years is as follows:

1995–96: £0.075 million

1996–97: £2 million

1997–98: £2.4 million

Earth Summit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what preparations his Department is making for the UN General Assembly special session to review progress since the Rio earth summit of 1992, and for the preparatory committees leading up to the summit; and what consultations he has undertaken. [19139]

Mr. Moss: The Secretary of State for the Environment is taking the lead within Government on the preparations for the UN General Assembly special session in June to review progress since the Rio earth summit of 1992.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given on Wednesday 5 March 1997 to the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo), Official Report, column 634.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the past 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19771]

Sir John Wheeler: All the Bills sponsored by the Northern Ireland Office in the last 15 years have been passed by Parliament. The details are as follows:

1982

The Northern Ireland Act

1985

The Elections (Northern Ireland) Act

The Northern Ireland (Loans) Act

1987

The Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act

1989

The Elected Authorities (Northern Ireland) Act

The Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act

1991

The Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act

'Social Security Contributions Benefits (Northern Ireland) Act

'Social Security Administration (Northern Ireland) Act

'Social Security (Consequential provisions) (Northern Ireland) Act

1995

Northern Ireland (Remission of Sentences) Act

1996

The Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act

The Northern Ireland (Entry to Negotiations, etc) Act

' Statute Law Revision or Consolidation Act

Ulster Hospital (Union Flag)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if a Union Flag has been provided to the Ulster hospital, Dundonald; if the Ulster hospital has been provided with the dates for flying the Union flag; if the Union flag was flown at this hospital on Commonwealth day; if the person responsible for flying the Union flag at the Ulster hospital is prepared to carry out this duty; and if he will make a statement. [20506]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The Ulster, North Down and Ards hospital health and social services trust has confirmed that it owns a Union flag and that it was flying on 6 February 1997, Commonwealth Day. However, the trust has advised that the flag was wrapped round the flag pole and had to be unwrapped by a member of staff once the wind died down. The schedule of the dates for flying the Union flag has been advised to staff and the person responsible for carrying out this duty has no difficulty in fulfilling same. However, there is no requirement for the trusts to fly the Union flag on these dates, and it is at the discretion of each organisation whether the flag should be flown on those buildings occupied by its staff.

WALES

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting, publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19387]

Mr. Hague: The available information is shown in the following table. Expenditure on drafting cannot be identified separately.

Public Bodies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people he has appointed to non-departmental public bodies in Wales. [20284]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 29 November 1996, Official Report, column 439.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total amount of money paid to members of non-departmental public bodies in Wales for their service as members of organisations in the last year for which figures are available. [20282]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest year for which figures are available is 1995–96. The information requested is contained in "Public Bodies" 1996, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Upland Species and Habitats

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of state for Wales what targets the Government have endorsed in the UK biodiversity steering group report for the conservation of certain upland species and habitats. [20171]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the "Government's Response to the UK Steering Group Report on Biodiversity", published in May 1996 (Cm 3260).

Overgrazing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 91, on overgrazing, how many cases of overgrazing ADAS is currently investigating in Wales; when the investigations are expected to be completed; and if the results will be made public. [20210]

Mr. Hague: At my Department's request, ADAS is carrying out work in relation to the overgrazing and supplementary feeding conditions which attach to the payment of livestock production subsidies at 12 locations in Wales.

I have no plans to publish any reports which ADAS produce. Some reports will be made available to graziers and landowners affected as the basis for discussion where my Department believes it has demonstrated that livestock are grazing land in such numbers as to adversely affect the growth, quality or species composition of vegetation—other than vegetation normally grazed to destruction—on that land to a significant degree.

ADAS work currently under way will result in reports to my department during 1997.

Lamb and Beef Exports

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the value of (a) lamb and (b) beef exported from Wales in (i) 1985 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available. [20285]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Exports from Wales are not separately recorded.

NHS Trusts (Expenses and Rewards)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of cash paid to members of NHS trusts as (a) expenses and (b) rewards for service in the last year for which figures are available. [20283]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: NHS trusts board members' costs for 1995–96 are as follows:

Non-executive directors' remuneration	1,067
Executive directors' remuneration:
basic salaries	6,703
benefits	362
performance related bonuses	204
pension contributions	278
Compensation for loss of office	66
Other board members' costs[1]	329
	9,009

Note:

[1] Includes: recharges to any other health body; employers, NI contributions; reimbursement of "out-of-pocket" expenses; and reimbursement of travelling and other allowances, including home to work travel costs.

Schools Budgets

Mr. Sweeny: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is (a) the average sum per pupil and (b) the average percentage of the general schools budget allotted by each local education authority int he current financial year for discretionary exceptions outside the potential schools budget and which is (i) delegated and (ii) not delegated to schools; [20564]

(2) what is (a) the average sum per pupil and (b) the average percentage of the general schools budget, allotted by each local education authority in the current financial year for (i) mandatory exception from delegation, (ii) discretionary exceptions outside the potential from delegation, (ii) discretionary exceptions outside the potential schools budget, (iii) discretionary exceptions within the potential schools budget and (iv) the aggregate schools budget. Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the past 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19777]

Mr. Hague: Eight Bills have been sponsored by my Department in the last 15 years; Seven have so far been passed by Parliament, as follows: one in 1983, one in 1988, one in 1990, one in 1991, two in 1993, one in 1994.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much rate support grant the Welsh Office (a) provided to the Vale of Glamorgan in 1996–97 and (b) plans to provide in 1997–98. [20527]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The rate support grant system was replaced in 1990–91 by one that provides central Government support to local authority revenue expenditure by way of revenue support grant and redistributed non-domestic rates. The allocations in respect of the Vale of Glamorgan for the years requested are given in the following table:

Central Government support for the Vale of Glamorgan county borough council £ thousand

	Revenue support grant	Share of redistributed non-domestic rates	Total support
1996–97	62,358	16,300	78,658
1997–98	59,798	20,543	80,341

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is (a) the average sum per pupil and (b) the average percentage of the general schools budget allotted by each local education authority in the current financial year for (i) money allocated to schools via age-weighted pupil units, (ii) premature retirement compensation, (iii) school transport, (iv) statementing and support for statemented pupils and (v) school meals, net of income. [20513]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Local education authorities must allocate at least 80 per cent. of the aggregated schools budget on the basis of pupil numbers. To break down the ASB on the basis of age-weighted pupil units could be done only at disproportionate cost. Details of the other elements, of all of which are retained centrally by the local authority are as follows:

A487 (Bypass)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the earliest possible commencement date for the construction of the bypass for Llanllyfni, Penygroes and Groeslon on the A487 in Gwynedd. [20744]

Mr. Hague: All major schemes—those costing over £3 million—in the forward trunk road programme have been reviewed in the light of the spending priorities I announced in the House of Commons on 12 December 1996, columns 405–19, on public expenditure in Wales in 1997–98. The competing priorities of individual schemes have been reassessed given the limited resources available. Details of the revised forward trunk road programme will be published on 20 March in the Welsh Office's departmental report. Copies of the report will be placed in the Library of the House.

Therapy Services

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what (a) treatment units, (b) professional staff and (c) financial resources are being made available to provide physiotherapy treatment, occupational therapy and physical rehabilitation for patients in south-east Wales from March 1997 to 1 January 2000. [20548]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Detailed informed on services is not held centrally. It is primarily the responsibility of Bro Taf and Gwent health authorities to purchase services and for the relevant trusts to provide appropriate numbers of staff and the facilities to deliver them.

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of patients awaiting (a) physiotherapy treatment, (b) occupational therapy and (c) physical rehabilitation in the borough counties of Rhondda Cynon Taff, Cardiff, Vale of Glamorgan, Ogwr, Aberavon Neath, Merthr Tydfil, Powys, Swansea, Caerphilly, Newport, Torfaen and Monmouth; and what was the total number of patients awaiting such treatment in 1995 and 1996. [20549]

Mr. Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the planned (a) capacity and (b) resources for providing physiotherapy treatment, occupational therapy and physical rehabilitation for patients at the new district general hospital at Llantrisant. [20551]

Mr. Jones: Detailed planning of facilities is a matter for the East Glamorgan NHS trust.

Talygarn Treatment Centre

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which organisation owns the Talygarn treatment centre at Pontyclun in south Wales. [20550]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Talygarn rehabilitation centre is owned by the Secretary of State for Wales.

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients were referred to, and treated at, the Talygarn treatment centre in 1995 and 1996; how many are currently being treated; and how many are proposed to be treated in 1997, 1998 and 1999. [20552]

Mr. Jones: In the financial year 1995–96, 417 new patients were reported as attending the Taylgarn treatment centre. Information on the number of referrals is not centrally available. Proposed levels of activity are a matter for the East Glamorgan NHS trust in contract negotiations with Bro Taf health authority and GP fundholders.

TREASURY

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 35, if he will list the main differences between the main Peat Marwick consultancy cost-benefit analysis study on the Cardiff bay barrage presented to his Department in November 1987 and the second version presented in mid 1988. [16994]

Mr. Waldegrave: The economic evaluation report on a Cardiff bay barrage received in June 1988 was a revision of the one presented in November 1987. A valid detailed comparison cannot be made except at disproportionate cost. However, the revised study took account of the completion, by the board of the Cardiff Bay development corporation, of a regeneration strategy for the bay and the choice of a single barrage option. These led to significant changes in the assumptions made in the first study, including increases in infrastructure costs and land disposal values. The net present value of the barrage option remained positive. The estimated betterment figure of £227 million remained as in the original 1987 study.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, as part of the programme for a common system of VAT, he will agree to changing the status of the EC VAT Committee from an advisory committee to a regulatory committee with powers of implementation. [20075]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Government support limited reform of the VAT Committee with a view to improving its operation, but would oppose a change in its status to that of a regulatory Committee. The Government believe that unanimity in the Council should remain the basis for EC decisions on VAT matters.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the steps taken in ECOFIN (a) to change the status of the EU VAT and Tax Committee following the Verona summit decision and (b) to create the provisional timetable for the European Commission's proposal for a common VAT system for member states. [20157]

Mr. Oppenheim: ECOFIN has taken no steps to change the status of the VAT Committee which was established by the sixth VAT directive in 1977. The informal Verona ECOFIN of April 1996 did, however, establish a new high-level working group on tax.

The European Commission's suggested programme for a "common system" for VAT to apply throughout the Community was presented to ECOFIN in October 1996, on a "take note" basis with no debate or discussion. There has been no other discussion or debate at ECOFIN about the suggested programme or its timetable.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the VAT and Tax Committee established by ECOFIN has completed the draft code of conduct on VAT harmonisation. [20158]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Verona informal ECOFIN of April 1996 established the high-level group on tax—the Monti group—to examine member states' tax systems and to consider issues of fiscal erosion. Monti recommended in a personal report to the Dublin European Council that the high-level group be continued in the form of a taxation policy group. This report was submitted to Parliament with an explanatory memorandum. The Dublin Council agreed to the continuation of the group and the taxation policy group met for the first time on 11 March 1997. The question of a code of conduct on unfair tax competition was raised but there are no proposals on the table. There is no code of conduct on VAT harmonisation.

Inland Revenue (Standard Letters)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost of issuing a standard letter by the Inland Revenue requesting payment of a tax underpayment. [20314]

Mr. Jack: The individual cost of issuing a standard letter is not calculated, but it will vary according to the type of letter and method of issue.

Century Date Change (Computers)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce measures to ease the financial burden of millennium compliance of computer systems for companies. [20162]

Mr. Jack: As far as taxation is concerned, the position is that companies will normally be able to deduct the cost of making amendments to their existing software in computing their taxable profits. Capital expenditure on purchases of new software to deal with the millennium will normally qualify for capital allowances. Thus, I see no need for any special tax measures.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current average wage for (a) men and (b) women. [20213]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Dennis Roberts to Mr. John Battle, dated 18 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked the Director of the Office for National Statistics to reply to your recent question about current average wages for men and women. In his absence, the Director has asked me to reply.

The latest information, from the April 1996 New Earnings Survey, is shown below. I will also arrange for a copy of this letter to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Average gross weekly earnings of full-time employees on adult rates, whose pay for the survey pay period was not affected by absence

	At April 1996
All males	391.30
All females	283.00

Tax Underpayment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the minimum sum of tax underpayment for which the revenue will issue a letter requesting payment. [20315]

Mr. Jack: The Inland Revenue will generally issue a letter for payment where the circumstances of the case make it cost-effective to do so.

Abortions

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many abortions have been performed on girls under the age of 16 years (i) at Kettering general hospital and (ii) nationally in each year since 1987; and in each case what that figure was as a percentage of abortions performed (a) at the hospital and (b) nationally. [20207]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from John Fox to Mr. William Powell, dated 18 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked the Director of the Office for National Statistics to reply to your recent question on how many abortions have been performed on girls under the age of 16 years (i) at Kettering General Hospital and (ii) nationally in each year since 1987; and in each case what was that figure as a percentage of abortions performed (a) at the hospital and (b) nationally. In his absence, the Director has asked me to reply.

For confidentiality reasons, abortion data are not released for individual hospitals. Figures for legal abortions performed on resident and non-resident girls aged under 16 in England and Wales for the years 1987–1995 are presented below:

Year	Number of abortions on girls under 16	As a percentage of total abortions on women of all ages
1987	4,075	2.3
1988	3,804	2.1
1989	3,576	1.9
1990	3,622	1.9
1991	3,317	1.8
1992	3,167	1.8
1993	3,269	1.9
1994	3,399	2.0
1995	3,401	2.1

Live Births

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the number of live births in each of the last three years. [20860]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 18 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply to your recent question asking for the number of live births that occurred in England and Wales in each of the last three years for which data are available.

The figures requested are shown in the table below.

Live births in England and Wales

Year	Live birth
1995	648,138
1994	664,726
1993	673,467

These figures are published in the annual reference volume "Birth Statistics" Series FM1, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

EU Countries (Income)

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the countries of the European Union in rank order of income per head, using the latest available figures. [19277]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mrs. Edwina Currie, dated 18 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on income per head in the EU.

The latest figures for GDP per head relate to 1996 and are based on projections made by the OECD using the relative rates of inflation between OECD countries and the USA as measured by their implicit price deflators for GDP. These projections are published in the February 1997 edition of the OECD publication Main Economic Indicators a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. Too much emphasis should not be placed on the rankings when as in the case of income per head, countries are bunched closely together.

Michael Allcock Case

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many public interest immunity certificates were issued in the case of Inland Revenue v. Michael Allcock. [18855]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 March 1997]: No certificates or affidavits claiming public interest immunity were issued in this case, which was a criminal prosecution conducted by the Crown Prosecution Service and not by the Inland Revenue.

Inward Investment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the levels of overseas investment in (1) the United Kingdom, (2) France and (3) Germany from (i) other EU members and (ii) countries outside the EU for the years 1979 to 1996, (a) in cash terms, (b) as a percentage change on the previous year and (c) as a real figure calculated on 1996 values; [20098]

(2) what were the levels of direct foreign investment in the United Kingdom from (i) the United States and (ii) Canada in each year from 1979 to 1996. [20099]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 17 March 1997]: Figures for the levels of foreign direct investment of each OECD country, by region and by country of origin, can be found in the OECD International Direct Investment Yearbook which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to meet representatives of the construction industry to discuss the implementation of landfill tax exemptions for waste from contaminated sites; and if he will make a statement. [20320]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 17 March 1997]: I have no such plans. Officials of HM Customs and Excise will meet representatives of the Building Employers Confederation on 20 March, and will give a full report of their meeting to Treasury Ministers.

Nomura Securities

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the possible impact of the current circumstances of Nomura Securities on United Kingdom companies in which it has an interest; and if he will make a statement. [20438]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 17 March 1997]: It is for the companies concerned to consider the situation and take such steps as they consider appropriate in their own commercial interests.

Investment Income (Tax)

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the average amount of income tax paid on investment income by (a) pensioner and (b) non-pensioner households with annual investment income of (i) less than £50, (ii) £50 to £99, (iii) £100 to £499 and (iv) over £500 for the most recent year for which information is available. [20555]

Mr. Jack: Reliable information on the investment income of households is not available. Information on individual taxpayers' investment income was given in my answer to the hon. Member on 18 February 1997—Official Report, columns 441–42.

Abortion and Maternal Deaths

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many surgical terminations of pregnancy there were in each of the last 15 months for which figures are available; and how many maternal deaths there were in each month. [20150]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from John Fox to Mr. Simon Hughes, dated 18 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked the Director of the Office for National Statistics to reply to your recent question on how many surgical terminations of pregnancy were performed in each of the last 15 months for which figures are available, and how many maternal deaths there were in each month. In his absence, the Director has asked me to reply.

The monthly number of surgical terminations of pregnancy performed on women residents and non-residents of England and Wales in the last 15 months for which data are available, namely April 1995–June 1996, are as follows:

	Number of surgical terminations
1995
April	12,150
May	13,479
June	14,358
July	13,880
August	13,971
September	13,484
October	13,503
November	13,448
December	12,368
1996
January	14,558
February	15,360
March	15,494
April	14,549
May	15,793
June	14,809

There were no maternal deaths recorded over the 15 month period.

Dependent Children

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage of families with dependent children which are (a) married couples and (b) cohabiting couples in the category of families with dependent children designated as married/cohabiting couple family type for 1995 in table A4 of "Living In Britain". [20374]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Julian Calder to Mr. Edward Leigh, dated 18 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked the Director of the Office for National Statistics to reply to your recent question about the percentage of families with dependent children which are either married couples or cohabiting couples. In his absence, the Director has asked me to reply.

The following table, taken from the 1995 General Household Survey, provides this information.

Family type and marital status of lone mothers: families with dependent children, Great Britain 1995

	Number	Per cent.
Married couple	2,153	71
Cohabiting couple	207	7
Lone mother	610	20
single	237	8
widowed	30	1
divorced	207	7
separated	136	5
Lone father	52	2
All lone families	662	22
Base	3,022

Heads of Households

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the percentage of households headed by a person who is (a) married, (b) co-habiting, (c) single, (d) widowed, (e) divorced, (f) separated and (g) co-habiting with someone of the same sex. [20375]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Julian Calder to Mr. Edward Leigh, dated 18 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked the Director of the Office for National Statistics to reply to your recent question on the marital status of the heads of households. In his absence, the Director has asked me to reply.

The following table, derived from the 1995 General Household Survey, gives the information requested.

Marital status of head of household	Frequency (per cent.)
Married	54
Cohabiting	6
Single	14
Widowed	14
Divorced	8
Separated	3
Same-sex cohabiting	[1]

[1] Estimated at 0.1 per cent.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the advisory cost limit for replies to parliamentary questions; when it was last increased; and if he will make a statement. [19354]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The advisory cost limit for replies to parliamentary questions is £450. It was last increased in 1993—Official Report, 18 February 1993, column 307.

Labour Statistics

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average length of time that currently unemployed men aged (a) 50 to 54, (b) 55 to 59 and (c) 60 to 64 years have remained unemployed. [19249]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Harriet Harman, dated 18 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the average length of time that currently unemployed men, by varying age groups, have remained unemployed.

The information you requested is given in the table below of median durations of spells of unemployment which were uncompleted in January 1997. Figures are not available for the 60–64 age band, and those for 60 and over are shown instead.

Median durations of male claimant unemployment in the UK in January 1997

Age	Median duration of unemployment (weeks)
50–54	46.6
55–59	56.4
60 and over	20.3

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) men, (b) women and (c) men and women aged (i) 16 and 17 years, (ii) 18 and 19 years, (iii) 20 to 24 years and (iv) over 24 years have never had a paid job since leaving school. [19586]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 18 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on how many people, broken down by age and sex, have not had a paid job since leaving school.

Estimates from the Labour Force Survey are shown in the attached table.

To help put the information into context I have provided an additional table which shows the total broken down by educational and economic status. For example, you can see that of the total of 1,675,000 nearly 80 per cent (1,329,000) were economically inactive, that is they had not looked for work in the past four weeks or were not available to start work in the next two weeks or were not waiting to start a job they had already obtained.

These breakdowns are probably very seasonal especially for the younger age groups.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Richards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the general Government's expenditure per head in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available. [19552]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 10 March 1997]: In 1994–95, identifiable expenditure per head was £4,505 in Scotland and £3,760 on average for the United Kingdom, as given in table 7.6B of Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses 1996–97 (Cm 3201).

Data Collection (Postcodes)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 27 February, Official Report, column 389, if he will list those categories of data collected by the Office of National Statistics which are based on postcode areas. [19629]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 12 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 18 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) to your recent Question on categories of data collected by the ONS which are based on postcode areas.

All data collected by ONS use post code reference systems where representative geographical samples are necessary and for the purposes of any geographical analysis. However local area data can only be provided to the extent that they are of sufficient quality and do not breach confidentiality obligations.

Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the future annual totals of MRSA deaths in England if present trends continue. [20028]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 13 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from John Fox to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 18 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked the Director of the Office for National Statistics to reply to your recent question asking what is his current estimate of the future totals of MRSA deaths in England if present trends continue. In his absence, the Director has asked me to reply.

Staphylococcus aureus is one of the more common causes of severe invasive bacterial disease in England and Wales. Each year the Public Health Laboratory Services' Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre receives at least 7,000 reports of blood stream infections caused by Staphylococcus aureus. Methicillin resistant strains of Staphylococcus aureus account for a minority of these reports (less than 25% in 1996).

There is no specific code for methicillin resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) within the international classification used for recording deaths in this country. Deaths resulting from such infections will be counted within the total number of deaths from all forms of Staphylococcus aureus infection. Statistical data on deaths from MRSA are not, therefore, available.

Mention of antibiotic resistance might be made on death certificates of patients whose death is due to Staphylococcus aureus infection, and such information could be ascertained by searching the text from death certificates. However, such data are likely to be liable to bias, as the probability that methicillin resistance is mentioned on a death certificate is likely to change with the perception of the public health importance of the condition. Registration data on deaths from Staphylococcus aureus infection are not suitable, therefore, for making reliable estimates of future trends in mortality from this condition.

Unemployment-related Benefits

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) men, (b) women and (c) men and women have made (i) one, (ii) two and (iii) three or more claims for unemployment-related benefits in (1) Great Britain, (2) each standard region of England, (3) Wales and (4) Scotland for each major group of the standard occupational classification since January 1995. [19584]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 18 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on how many people have experienced at least one, two and three or more spells of claimant unemployment since January 1995, broken down by sex, region, and by major occupational group.

I have attached tables of the information requested, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Please note that for claimants who have had more than one spell of claimant unemployment since 1 January 1995, the information from their most recent claim has been used to determine the claimant's region and usual occupation.

SCOTLAND

Land Purchases (Grants)

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each grant which has been made to a voluntary body for the purchase of land by Scottish Natural Heritage since its inception to the latest available date, naming the area of land and the cost involved. [20015]

Mr. Kynoch: The information requested is set out in the table:

Local Government Reforms

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums his Department has spent on promoting local government reforms in each of the last three years. [20185]

Mr. Kynoch: The amount which the Scottish Office has spent on public information about local government reform in the most recent three financial years is set out in the table:

Financial year beginning:	Amount (£)
1 April 1994	139,507
1 April 1995	997
1 April 1996	13,790

External Consultants

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department has spent on external consultants in each year since 1979. [20485]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Expenditure over the past five years by the Scottish Office and its associated agencies on external consultants was:

1991–92: £10,836,000

1992–93: £4,370,000

1993–94: £5,383,000

1994–95: £4,079,000

1995–96: £5,440,000

No comparable data are available for the periods prior to 1991.

Departmental Legislation

The 1996–97 Bills have yet to receive Royal Assent. All the other Bills were enacted. The list includes consolidation Bills, which are marked with an asterisk, but excludes private members' Bills. In addition, we have co-sponsored a large number of Great Britain-United Kingdom Bills during this period.

Health Service Property (Ayrshire and Arran)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the properties formerly used for health service purposes in Ayrshire and Arran, which are currently unoccupied and in the ownership of (a) Ayrshire and Arran health board, (b) the Ayrshire NHS trusts and (c) the Secretary of State; what is the total annual cost involved; what action is being taken to dispose of these proprieties; and if he will make a statement. [20726]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Any such property formally in the ownership of the Secretary of State if accounted for, and managed by, individual health boards and NHS trusts. The information requested is not held centrally.

Inward Investment

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many inward investment projects have been attracted to Scotland in the 11 months to the end of February; what is the value of the planned investment concerned; and how many planned jobs will be created or safeguard thereby. [21155]

Mr. Kynoch: In the 11 months to the end of February 1997, Locate in Scotland and the Scottish Office Education and Industry Department helped to attract to Scotland a total of 80 inward investment projects. These projects involve planned investment of £3.0 billion and the expected creation or safeguarding of 13,679 jobs.

Electronic Surveillance

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what guidance chief constables in Scotland operate under in relation to electronic surveillance of suspects; and what is his Department's involvement in the process; [14131]

(2) on how many occasions chief constables in Scotland have authorised electronic surveillance of suspects outside the terms of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 in each of the last five years; [14132]

(3) what new proposals he has in respect of the powers of chief constables in Scotland to implement electronic surveillance of suspects; in what circumstances electronic surveillance operations are currently permissible. [14135]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 February 1997]: Electronic surveillance of suspects may be authorised by chief constables in Scotland in accordance with non-statutory guidelines on intrusive surveillance issued by the Scottish Office in 1985.

Under the current guidelines, intrusive surveillance may be authorised only in circumstances where the investigation concerns serious crime, normal methods of investigation have been tried and failed, or are unlikely to succeed, and there is good reason to think that the use of equipment would be likely to lead to an arrest and a conviction or, where appropriate, to the prevention of acts of terrorism.

Figures for each of the last five years are not available centrally.

Consumer Protection

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will assess the advantages of extending the provisions of part V of the Crime and Punishment Bill (Scotland) to members of the Faculty of Advocates to enhance consumer protection. [19073]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 March 1997]: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to extend the provisions of part V to members of the Faculty of Advocates. Such a proposal would require consultation with those affected and further detailed consideration in the light of experience of the implementation of these provisions in relation to solicitors.

Children (Sexual Abuse)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) rape and (b) sexual assault victims were under the age of 16 in each of the last five years. [19123]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 March 1997]: Information is not collected centrally on the age of victims in recorded crimes of rape, assault with intent to rape or ravish or indecent assault.

Sex Offenders

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will assess the advantages of extending the length of probation orders for those who commit sexual offences to a maximum of five years. [19074]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 March 1997]: No representations have been received proposing such a change. Any views put forward will be considered by the working group tasked with any future review of the national objectives and standards for social work services in the criminal justice system in respect of probation. Any legislative changes recommended by that group would be considered.

Salmon Strategy Task Force

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to implement recommendation No. 33 of the report of the Scottish Salmon strategy task force. [20816]

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend, the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, has received a copy of the task force report. This Department will be closely involved in formulating the Government's formal response to the recommendations affecting fisheries in England. However, no decisions will be taken until the consultation process is complete.

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting, publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19395]

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown of his Department's spending on each charter produced under the citizens charter programme. [20183]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Charter	Drafting £	Publishing £	Distribution £	Total costs £	Number issued

n/a indicated that the information requested is either not available or is not known.
Figures on numbers issued are actual numbers issued where known or numbers printed where not known.
The SAAS charter is incorporated in the booklet "Student Grants in Scotland" which is revised and re-issued each year to all students.
The statistical services charter is published on the back of all statistical bulletins, so there are no separate costs and it is difficult to estimate numbers issued.

Glenfeshie and Rothiemurchus Estates

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been paid from public funds in each of the past 20 years to the owners of (a) Glenfeshie and (b) Rothiemurchus estates for the purposes of (i) conservation and (ii) forest regeneration. [19911]

Mr. Kynoch: Information in the form requested on payments by Scottish Natural Heritage and its predecessor bodies is not available, but I have asked the SNH to write to the hon. Member.

Payments made by the Forestry Commission for the purposes of replanting after felling; work to encourage natural regeneration; and new planting are set out in the table:

Year	Amount (£)

Mr. W. J. Duff

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on each investigation since 25 August 1986 into the claims for treatment made by Mr. W. J. Duff. [19050]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1997]: Mr. Duff has been the subject of checks under random sampling arrangements and more systematic monitoring. As a result of such monitoring, Mr. Duff was referred to a service committee in December 1990 in respect of one patient. Mr. Duff was found not to be in breach of his terms. He was referred in January 1994 to the NHS tribunal and then to the General Dental Council. Subsequently, his name was removed from the dental list of Greater Glasgow health board, he was excluded from practising in the NHS and his name was removed from the council's register.

Slaughterhouse Hygiene

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date his Department first received a copy of (a) the draft report on slaughterhouse hygiene written by Mr. Swann, and (b) the final report issued by the Meat Hygiene Service; what was the grade of the civil servants who assessed each report; and what reports of their contents were made to Ministers, and on what dates. [20125]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 March 1997]: My Department received the report written by Mr. Swann on the afternoon of 6 March 1997 and the final report issued by the Meat Hygiene Service earlier that day. I discussed the contents with officials on 6 and 7 March.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland with which external bodies the Scottish Office consulted on the draft report on slaughterhouse hygiene written by Mr. Swann; and to which such bodies it made the report available. [20124]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 13 March 1997]: The report which was received by my Department on 6 March 1997 has been made available to the Pennington Group, which is considering its contents in finalising its report on E. coli.

Assisted Businesses (Political Objectives)

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if businesses and organisations with declared political objectives can, or could obtain, financial support in the form of grants, loans and other assistance from (a) local enterprise companies, (b) Highland and Islands Enterprise, (c) Scottish Enterprise and (d) any of their predecessor bodies. [20416]

Mr. George Kynoch: It is very unlikely that a business or organisation whose declared objectives were exclusively or largely political would qualify for financial support from any of these bodies. Applications for assistance for projects are normally considered against a number of criteria including commercial viability, number of jobs created or safeguarded and conformity to the objectives of the scheme in question.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quota

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) for each member state in the European Union and (b) (i) England, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) Northern Ireland the current milk quota (1) in tonnes and (2) per head of the population; and what is the average milk quota per head of population in the European Union as a whole. [20536]

Mr. Baldry: The table shows the milk quota allocated to each member state in the 1995–96 quota year, its population in 1995 and quota per head. The table also includes quota registered to producers in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland which has been used to determine the quota per head in these countries.

Quota information for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland reflect the quota registered with producers in these countries. The sum of the quota registered in these countries will not equal the UK total allocation because of the quota held in the national reserve.

Correspondence

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when a substantive reply will be made to the letter of 20 January from the hon. Member for Littleborough and Saddleworth to the Minister of State concerning Mr. Harvey Richmond. [20115]

Mr. Baldry: The matter raised in the letter from the hon. Member is a complex one requiring detailed investigation. A reply will be forwarded to the hon. Member by 24 March at the latest.

Cattle Feed

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if avoparcin was licensed as a feed additive in the rations of non-lactating cows prior to the introduction of the Beef (Emergency) Control Order 1996; and if he will make a statement. [20752]

Mrs. Browning: I can confirm that avoparcin was authorised as a feed additive for non-lactating cows prior to the introduction of the Beef (Emergency) Control Order 1996.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department took to revoke the licence for the use of avoparcin as an in-feed antibiotic in dairy cows after the Council of Ministers declined to add it to annexe 1 of directive 70/524/EEC and on what dates; and if he will make a statement. [20751]

Mrs. Browning: As a result of concerns expressed by Denmark and Germany, in July 1995, the Council of Ministers decided not to support the entry of avoparcin into annexe 1 of directive 70/524/EEC for use in feed for dairy cows and member states were requested to withdraw project licences. We did not do so as the independent scientific Veterinary Products Committee—VPC—which advises the Government, had been satisfied that the criteria of safety, quality and efficacy had been met for avoparcin, and because the Scientific Committee on Animal Nutrition—SCAN—was examining evidence submitted by the Danes and the Germans in support of their bans on avoparcin as a feed additive for all species. SCAN concluded that, on the basis of science, the evidence presented did not establish a risk to human health, animal health or the environment. The VPC welcomed the SCAN report and its conclusions but expressed some concern about the non-therapeutic use of antibiotics as additives in animal feed and over the misuse of antibiotics. However, at the December 1996 Standing Committee on Animal Nutrition, the Commission proposal banning the use of avoparcin as an additive to animal feed was agreed. We will therefore be implementing the ban and revoking existing product licences by the 1 April 1997 deadline.

Incineration Contracts

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the locations in respect of which the Intervention Board has offered contracts to incinerator companies for which planning permission has subsequently been (a) refused and (b) granted. [20811]

Mr. Baldry: The Intervention Board offers contracts to incineration companies only when it has obtained all necessary consents and licences.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the incinerator companies to whom the Intervention Board has issued letters of intent for the burning of (a) cattle carcases and (b) the rendered meat and bonemeal remains of slaughtered cattle in the past six months. [20809]

Mr. Baldry: Nine letters of intent have been issued to prospective suppliers of carcase burning facilities. The companies are:

P. J. Hayman

Euromet

Kingsclear Technologies and Associated Companies Ltd.

Sacone Industries Ltd.

Canfield Incineration Ltd.

Time-Right Ltd.

WRE Services Ltd.

Durga Environmental Ltd.

Bronzeoak Thermal Processing Ltd.

No letters of intent have been issued in respect of incineration of rendered meat and bonemeal although there have been expressions of interest by potential suppliers in a current tender.

Earth Summit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what preparations his Department is making for the UN General Assembly special session to review progress since the Rio Earth summit of 1992 and for the preparatory committees leading up to the summit. [19135]

Mr. Boswell: The Department of the Environment is taking the lead within the Government on preparations for the UN General Assembly special session. Officials in the Ministry have provided advice, as appropriate, for the preparatory discussions taking place in sessions of the secretariat of the UN commission on sustainable development, particularly in relation to agricultural, ocean resource and land use issues.

Scrapie

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the incidence of scrapie-associated fibrils in the central nervous system of dogs in the United Kingdom. [19437]

Mrs. Browning: No case of scrapie-like transmissible spongiform encephalopathy has ever been confirmed in a dog in the United Kingdom, or reported in any other country in the world.

Brains from culled hounds in packs throughout Great Britain, which are traditionally fed fallen livestock, and so may be considered a high risk population exposed to potentially infected tissues before controls were introduced in September 1990, have been examined and the results considered by Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee in August 1994 and subsequently re-evaluated by it in June 1995. The committee concluded that the results were inconclusive because there were certain limitations in the protocol of the study. It was recognised however, that the study established that in the dogs studied there was no evidence of a pathologically overt SE similar to that reported in the domestic cat.

Feline Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date his scientists first reported to him their view that the occurrence of feline spongiform encephalopathy was causally linked with the epidemic of BSE. [19438]

Mrs. Browning: This was first reported in 1993 and recorded in the report of the chief veterinary officer—"Animal Health—1993", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. It stated that the uniformity of the lesion profile in feline spongiform encephalopathy—FSE—complements the results of primary transmission of FSE and BSE to mice, in which similarities suggest that FSE is the result of exposure of cats to the BSE pathogen prior to September 1990 when statutory controls were introduced.

Chlamydial Disease Research Unit

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to close the unit researching chlamydial disease at the central veterinary laboratory; what alternative research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on this disease. [19439]

Mrs. Browning: In deciding to reduce MAFF support for research on chlamydia when the existing projects came to an end, the programme of chlamydia research supported by the Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department—£460,000 in 1996–97—was taken into account.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the last 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19767]

Mr. Boswell: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has sponsored the following numbers of Acts over the last 15 years, all of which have been passed by Parliament:

Session	Number of Bills
1981–82	1
1982–83	4
1983–84	2
1984–85	2
1985–86	1
1986–87	0
1987–88	1
1988–89	1
1989–90	1
1990–91	1
1991–92	0
1992–93	2
1993–94	0
1994–95	1
1995–96	0

Mineral Hydrocarbons

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the ban was implemented on the use of mineral hydrocarbons in food manufacture; and what were the reasons for the ban. [20697]

Mrs. Browning: Restrictions on the use of mineral hydrocarbons in food have been in place since at least 1949. The current regulations came into force in 1966. These are based on the general principle applying to the use of all food additives, that they should be permitted only under strict control and where there is a demonstrated technological need, and take account of the duty of Ministers to have regard to the desirability of restricting so far as practicable the use of substances of no nutritional value as ingredients of food.

Channel Tunnel (Animal Electrocution Apparatus)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what advice he has issued to the operators of the channel tunnel with regard to recommissioning the animal electrocution apparatus in the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement; [20710]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost of recommissioning the animal electrocution apparatus in the channel tunnel. [20712]

Mrs. Browning: The Department has drawn to the attention of Eurotunnel its obligation to maintain electrified grids in the channel tunnel. These grids are designed to deter animals from passing through the tunnel, not to electrocute them. This is one of a series of measures intended to prevent animals entering the channel tunnel.

The electrified grids currently installed in the tunnel are not operational. I met Eurotunnel's chairman this morning to discuss this. Eurotunnel is working urgently on devising a technical solution which is capable of being implemented. The cost of that work is a matter for Eurotunnel.

Rabies

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the relative risk of rabies infection entering Britain from (a) free-living animals entering via the channel tunnel and (b) animals entering by other means; and whether he has commissioned a risk assessment. [20711]

Mrs. Browning: Measures are in place to prevent rabies infection entering Great Britain either from (a) animals entering the channel tunnel or (b) animals entering by other means.

(A) The controls in place to prevent animals from entering the channel tunnel include fencing, video recording, routine surveillance by service personnel, deterrent lighting, and routine baiting for small animals.

Electrified grids have been installed in each of the tunnels as an additional deterrence to animals. However, due to technical difficulties, these are not currently operational. I met the chairman of Eurotunnel this morning to discuss this. He assured me that Eurotunnel is working urgently on devising a technical solution capable of being implemented very rapidly.

The environment in the channel tunnel is extremely hostile and would not sustain any animal life because of the train movement—the air vortex created by a train in the tunnel is likely to kill any animal the size of a dog or fox—and because of arrangements designed to ensure that the tunnel is not a source of food.

(B) The legislation on rabies quarantine is in place to prevent rabies infection entering by other means.

Slaughtered Cattle (Disposal)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, in date order, the consultation papers and research reports which he has commissioned, since 20 March 1996, on the options for, and public health and environmental implications of, the disposal of cattle slaughtered as a result of BSE-related programmes; and if he will set out the bodies producing each document. [20827]

Mrs. Browning: As on other issues in relation to spongiform encephalopathies, the Government look to their independent Spongiform Encephaphalopathy Advisory Committee. A special sub-group was set up to look at a range of environmental issues which met on 6 May 1996. The report of that group to the main committee was discussed at the committee meeting on 29 May 1996 and resulted in a public document which was issued by the Department on 7 June 1996. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. French: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he has made to ensure that the information paper on meat hygiene which he promised in his statement on 12 March, Official Report, columns 372-74, is publicly available. [21264]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I laid in the Library of the House on 18 March 1997 a copy of the information paper, "Driving up meat hygiene standards". It is freely available on request from the MAFF helpline—phone 0645-33-55-77. My hon. Friend the Member for Tiverton (Mrs. Browning) is also sending copies to industry, enforcement and consumer organisations.

Departmental Cash Limits

Mr. French: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are proposed to the cash limit for class III, vote 2-Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for 1996–97. [21265]

Mr. Boswell: The cash limit for class III vote 2 for 1996–97 will be reduced by £280,000 from £892,586,000 to £892,306,000. This reduction covers the surrender by the Ministry to the Exchequer of funds matching payments to the tanning industry.

"Agriculture in the United Kingdom"

Mr. French: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the latest volume of "Agriculture in the United Kingdom" to be published. [21266]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1996" was published today and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Slaughter Practices

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he plans to support the European Commission's proposals that (a) minimum stunning currents should be laid down by law and (b) the 1993 directive on welfare at slaughter should be amended to require both carotid arteries to be severed at slaughter. [20077]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 13 March 1997]: Interested organisations have been asked for their comments on proposals received from the European Commission in respect of directive 93/119/EC on the protection of animals at the time of slaughter or killing. The UK approach to both issues identified by the hon. Member will be carefully considered, taking into account the views expressed by all those consulted.

BSE

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of (a) the contract between the Ministry of Agriculture and Electrophoretics International covering work to develop a diagnostic test for BSE and (b) a copy of the evaluation made of that work. [20664]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 March 1997]: (a) MAFF has no contract with Electrophoretics International—EI—to develop a diagnostic test for BSE. It did, however, have an agreement with EI which was one of collaboration. As required by the terms of that agreement, we have written to EI requesting its agreement in writing to our placing a copy in the Library of the House. If EI agrees, we will do so once we have its reply.

(b) Since no work was commissioned by MAFF from EI, no such evaluation has been made.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received over the past 12 months regarding the disposal of BSE-infected carcases to landfill sites. [20523]

Mrs. Browning: Between 21 March 1996 and 14 February 1997, the Department's BSE correspondence unit dealt with in excess of 7,200 letters on BSE-related issues, some of which would have concerned the disposal of BSE suspect carcases to landfill sites. Establishing the precise number could be done only at disproportionate cost.

State Veterinary Service

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many vets were employed by the State Veterinary Service in each year from 1979 to present. [17629]

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply 27 February 1997]: The number of veterinary surgeons employed by the State Veterinary Service at 1 January each year since 1980 is detailed in the table. Since 1980, the structure of the State Veterinary Service has changed several times. The central veterinary laboratory which previously formed part of the State Veterinary Service, became the Veterinary Laboratories Agency in April 1990. The CVL figures are incorporated in this return for the years 1 January 1980 to 1 January 1990. As from 1 June 1990, the figures do not include the CVL. The veterinary investigation service became part of the VLA on 1 October 1995 and is not included in these figures since then.

Year	Number of vets
1981	571.0
1982	549.0
1983	549.5

SOCIAL SECURITY

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the past 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19773]

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table:

Parliamentary session	Bills
Sponsored by the Department of Social Security
1995–96	1
1994–95	4
1993–94	3
1992–93	2
1991–92	1
1990–91	4
1989–90	1
1988–89	1
Sponsored by the Department of Health and Social Security
1987–88	2
1986–87	1
1985–86	2
1984–85	3
1983–84	2
1972–83	3
1981–82	3

All Bills received Royal Assent. 1. The Department of Social Security was formed in July 1988. The figures given for 1981–82 to 1987–88 are for Bills sponsored by the former Department of Health and Social Security.

All-work Test

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations his Department has had from the Disability Alliance in relation to the Benefits Agency medical services and complaints from disabled people about the all-work test for incapacity benefit; what reply he is sending; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement. [20057]

Mr. Burt: No recent representations have been received by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. However, I received a letter from the Disability Alliance on 12 March. I have replied to the Disability Alliance today, sending it the information that it has requested. I have also sent a copy of my reply to the right hon. Member.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the expenditure on rent rebate and council tax benefit for unemployed claimants in each year from 1978–79 to 1996–97; [20297]

(2) what was the expenditure on housing benefit for unemployed claimants in each year from 1978–79 to 1996–97. [20298]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table:

Disaggregated information is not available for the years before 1994–95 and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

3. Recipients may be single persons or couples.

Savings

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide data from the family resources survey on the average amount of savings held per household in (a) Post Office accounts, (b) tax-exempt special savings accounts, (c) building society accounts, (d) bank accounts, (e) other accounts, (f) gilts, (g) unit trusts, (h) stocks and shares, (i) personal equity plans, (j) national savings bonds, (k) save-as-you-earn and (l) premium bonds, broken down by gross weekly household income divided into £100 bands. [20478]

Mr. Burt: This information is not available.

The family resources survey collects data on the amount of money respondents have in different accounts, but only for those respondents who are willing to provide an estimate of the value of their total savings and report a value between £1,500 and £20,000. Around 35 per cent. of all households surveyed fall into this category.

Income Support

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the number of 18 to 24-year-olds claiming (i) income support and not housing benefit and (ii) income support and housing benefit and (b) the average payment in each case. [20299]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Housing benefit and income support claimants aged 18–24 years (Great Britain, May 1995)

Mr. Evans: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the number of 18 to 24-year-olds claiming income support and (b) the average income support payment to 18 to 24-year-olds. [20340]

War Pensions (Gulf War)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 719, what research his Department has evaluated to indicate that present medical evidence does not support a causal relation between increasing disablement and exposure to organophosphates. [20344]

Mr. Heald: My answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 719, referred to the pattern of claimed disablement seen to date in Gulf claimants. The immediate toxic effects arising from exposure to high-dose organophosphates are the subject of medical consensus. The longer-term disabling effects of high exposure are not established; nor are the effects of low-dose exposure known, either short-term or chronic.

These conclusions are based on evaluation of the medical and scientific literature and discussion with expert toxicologists in academic departments, at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate.

Child Benefits

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the combined value of child dependency addition and child benefit for the child of a widowed mother in (a) cash and (b) real terms as a percentage of average earnings, in November 1979 and at each subsequent uprating date; and what were the factors underlying each fall in value which occurred. [20650]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is in the tables:

Child benefit and widowed mothers allowance child dependency increase for first child

Uprating date	Cash as a percentage of average earnings at each uprating date	Real terms as percentage of average earnings at April 1996
November 1979	11.0	8.0
November 1980	10.2	7.7
November 1981	9.8	7.2

April 1993	6.0	5.9
April 1994	5.9	5.8
April 1995	5.8	5.7
April 1996	5.7	5.7

1. The average earnings of full time adult employees were calculated using the new earnings survey and average earnings Index, both produced by the Office of National Statistics.
2. The retail prices index (all items) was used to put child benefit and widowed mothers allowance child dependency addition into real terms as at April 1996. This was then compared with average earnings for April 1996 to give the percentage quoted.
3. The factors underlying the fall in value are:

(a) Since 1980, CDIs have been uprated on the basis that the uprated amount of the CDI is reduced by an amount equal to the cash increase in child benefit.

(b) The rate of child benefit was not increased in 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 March, Official Report, column 199, how many and what proportion of medical examinations in connection with claims for disability living allowance or attendance allowance were carried out in February by doctors who were members of disability appeal tribunals. [20959]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested.

It is estimated that, out of a total of 24,401 medical examinations in connection with claims to disability living allowance and attendance allowance which were allocated to examining medical practitioners in February, approximately 5 per cent. were allocated to doctors who also sit as members of disability appeal tribunals.

Note:

The total number of examinations allocated includes those which may have been subsequently aborted or have not yet been carried out.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of the recent amendments to the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations on the number of and hearings of appeals. [20963]

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 6 March, Official Report, column 718.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations 1995 to require tribunal members to inform appellants of any salary or fees they have received from his Department, other than for their work as tribunal members, in the preceding six months. [20962]

Mr. Evans: No such amendment is considered necessary.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct the Benefits Agency medical services not to use doctors who are members of disability appeal tribunals for the purpose of examining claimants in connection with claims for disability living allowance or attendance allowance. [20960]

Mr. Burt: No.

There is no reason why membership of a disability appeal tribunal should be incompatible with work for Benefits Agency medical services as long as appeals do not relate to cases specifically handled by the doctor. To limit BAMS to using, for the examination of claimants at the request of the adjudication officer, only those doctors who are not members of disability appeals tribunals would unnecessarily reduce the number of people who could be involved on this work.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations 1995 to require that the action taken by a tribunal clerk to supply tribunal members with copies of documents relating to an appeal should be the same, irrespective of whether the appeal is to be decided without an oral hearing. [20961]

Mr. Evans: This is a procedural matter which is not appropriate for regulation.

War Pensions

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the Minister of State, the right hon. Lord Mackay of Ardbrecknish, with representatives of the Royal British Legion and of the Royal National Institute for Deaf People on 12 March to discuss noise-induced sensorineural hearing loss and war pensions. [20762]

Mr. Heald: My right hon. and noble Friend Lord Mackay of Ardbrecknish explained that the change in the approach to noise-induced hearing loss in war pensions was made neither as a matter of policy nor of re-interpretation of the legislation, but because of the requirement to reflect current medical understanding. As a consequence, and as with all such changes, he was obliged under the existing legislation to introduce it as soon as it was identified. He also confirmed that no pensioner would have their pension reduced: all existing awards would be honoured using exceptional powers to maintain payment even where the award had no foundation. Those claiming for the first time, who were suffering from service-related NISHL assessed at 20 per cent. or above, would receive a pension.

The experts advising the Royal British Legion raised the issue of the relationship between hearing loss (impairment) and speech-hearing disability. It was agreed that the Department's medical advisors would meet the experts to discuss the possible relevance of this complicated area; officials have already written to Professor Lutman. We remain satisfied that we are applying current medical understanding in the way that the law on war pensions requires.

National Insurance

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes he proposes to the national insurance contributions rules before the beginning of the next tax year. [21042]

Mr. Heald: The Social Security (Contributions) Amendment (No. 3) Regulations were laid on Friday 14 March and will come into force by 6 April. These make three changes to national insurance contributions. First, they maintain the alignment of tax and NICs treatment of jobmatch work incentive allowances. Secondly, they change the date of payment of class 1A contributions for employers ceasing to trade or transferring business to another company. Thirdly, they exempt from NICs allowances paid to service personnel, other Crown servants and employees of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission and the British Council based overseas. A similar exemption has existed in tax legislation for some years. These regulations therefore bring the treatment of overseas allowances for crown servants under national insurance legislation into line with their tax treatment.

I also intend to introduce a fourth measure, also to come into force from 6 April. This will also maintain alignment of tax and NICs on employer-funded training. Regulations for this will be laid shortly.

Departmental Agencies (Performance Targets)

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what performance targets he has set his Department's agencies for 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [21043]

Mr. Lilley: The targets I have set my Department's executive agencies for 1997–98 are as set out.

The targets represent a significant challenge to each agency, and focus effort on the key elements of their individual businesses.

Further information on the agencies' plans for 1997–98 is contained in their individual business plans which have been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The targets for 1997–98 are:

BENEFITS AGENCY

1. Benefit accuracy

Income support accuracy—to pay the correct amount in 87 per cent. of cases.

Jobseeker's allowance accuracy—to pay the correct amount in 87 per cent. of cases.

Incapacity benefit accuracy—to pay the correct amount in 94 per cent. of cases.

Family credit accuracy—to pay the correct amount in 91 per cent. of cases.

Disability living allowance accuracy—to pay the correct amount in 96 per cent. of cases.

2. Claims clearance times

Jobseekers' allowance claims—65 per cent. in 10 days and 90 per cent. in 21 days.

Faster family credit—90 per cent. in 5 days.

3. Financial recovery and financial control

160,000 claims of those obtaining benefit by deception to be withdrawn within 10 days of fraud investigation and 185,000 within 28 days.

Security savings—£2100 million.

Overpayment recovery—£120 million.

Social fund loans recovery—£333 million.

4. Resource management

To manage the agency's resources to deliver its business plan within allocations.

To keep to the cash limit agreement with Treasury for the discretionary social fund budget approved by Parliament.

CONTRIBUTIONS AGENCY

1. Records Maintenance

New accounts properly registered for: 95 per cent. of juveniles in advance of their 16th birthday, and 90 per cent. of adults without NI accounts within eight days of receipt of complete application forms.

Changes to personal details properly recorded, completing 92 per cent. of cases within 15 days.

NI contributions properly recorded for: 98 per cent. of appropriate notifications for class 1 contributors by 31 December 1997 or within 30 days thereafter; 90 per cent. of class 2–3 contributors within five days of receipt of payment.

NI details properly recorded following investigation: for 90 per cent. of cases by 31 March 1998 where there are inappropriate submissions by employers; for 85 per cent. of cases in 90 days where contributors/others identify an inaccuracy.

2. Information provision

95 per cent. of requests from Government agencies and Departments within: three days when no clerical action is required; 10 days with clerical involvement; and 45 days when detailed investigation is necessary to establish the NI position.

92 per cent. of requests from pension providers and scheme administrators completed within 25 days.

95 per cent. of customer inquiries and complaints within 20 days.

3. Conformance

£3.55 billion of NI contributions collected by the NI fund.

£170 million of arrears identified and reference made to the Inland Revenue for collection.

NI rebates accurately paid to pension providers, with 98 per cent. of cases completed within one calendar month after the recording of an accurate end of year return.

Contracting-out certificates properly issued, clearing 99 per cent. within five days.

Variation and surrender action properly completed, clearing 96 per cent. within 10 days.

Initiate investigation action within 10 days, where schemes are in breach of contracting-out conditions.

CHILD SUPPORT AGENCY

1. Performance

£500 million of maintenance to be collected or arranged.

97 per cent. of payments to parents with care to be made within 10 working days of receipt.

Cash value of all assessments checked in the year to be correct in at least 85 per cent. of cases.

60 per cent. of second-tier reviews to be cleared within 13 weeks and 95 per cent. within 26 weeks.

A minimum of 525,000 cases to be cleared; 60 per cent. of new maintenance applications to be cleared within 26 weeks and on 31 March 1998 no more than 5 per cent. of all applications received by the agency to be over 52 weeks old.

WAR PENSIONS AGENCY

1. Performance

Disablement Claims—66 per cent. cleared in 145 days.

War Widows' Claims—82 per cent. cleared in 70 days.

Claims accuracy—95 per cent.

Appeals status—At 31 March 1998, to have no more than 28 per cent. of outstanding appeals more than 260 days old.

Appeals volume—To clear 10,000 appeals during 1997–98.

2. Resource Management

To manage the agency's administration resources so as to deliver the business plan within budget allocation.

3. Customer satisfaction

To complete a survey of welfare service clients by 31 March 1998.

INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY SERVICES AGENCY

1. Financial targets

Manage the agency's income and expenditure (derived from normal trading activities), as presented on audited accruals accounts, so that the agency recovers its full economic costs through receipts from customers within a tolerance of plus or minus 2 per cent.

Manage the ITSA purchaser vote so that the agency's expenditure outturn is in line with allocations and estimates—final outturn to be within 1 per cent. of the forecast provided for the end-of-year review of expenditure in December 1997.

To reduce unit costs and prices in order to deliver to overall business efficiency improvement of 5 per cent.

2. Customer service targets

Measure customer satisfaction using the business excellence model, an industry standard and achieve a 10 per cent. BEM score improvement for customer satisfaction.

Deliver 95 per cent. of services to customers to service levels for budget, time and quality as agreed within contracts.

Young Offenders

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what procedures exist to ensure that parents whose children are sentenced to be detained do not continue to receive (a) child benefit and (b) other benefits in respect of them. [18099]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is an operational matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Shaw, dated 17 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what procedures exist to ensure that parents whose children are sentenced to be detained, do not continue to receive a) Child Benefit and b) other benefits in respect of them.

Customers receiving Child Benefit are obliged to report any changes of circumstances in accordance with the instructions contained in their order book. This would include instances when a child is detained in legal custody. Similarly, those in receipt of Widows Benefit, Retirement Pension, Income Support or short term benefits which include an additional amount for a dependent child must report the changes.

Customers receiving benefit by Automated Credit Transfer are periodically sent details of what changes of circumstances should be reported.

The position is different for people receiving Family Credit (FC). Entitlement is calculated and benefit is awarded for a fixed period for a family's circumstances at the date of the claim. If a child subsequently leaves a household, entitlement continues unless the child is included within another family claiming FC. There are no provisions within FC legislation for payments to cease in any other circumstances involving children.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Truro Benefits Agency

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many information officers are currently employed at Truro Benefits Agency to give advice on the types and amounts of benefits available on retirement. [20197]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is an operational matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Jamieson, dated 17 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many information officers are currently employed at Truro Benefits Agency (BA) to give advice on the types and amounts of benefits available on retirement.

It is one of the aims of the BA to provide the best service in the most cost effective way. We are aware that the provision of distinct Customer Service roles are extremely valuable in providing customer groups with increased access to the Benefit Agency. With this in mind the provisions of outreach and liaison work have been examined to confirm that they are the best and most cost-effective ways of meeting local needs. District Managers have the flexibility and local knowledge to target resources and continue to provide the most appropriate services for their local community.

Cornwall District includes the BA offices at Falmouth, Launceston, Penzance, St. Austell and Truro (Lemon Quay House). There is currently a Customer Service Manager for the District based at Truro. The Customer Service Manager is available to give information and advice on the best way of accessing BA services. The District Information Officer (DINO) has recently been moved to Jobseekers Allowance (JSA) Implementation duties. The reinstatement of the full range of DINO responsibilities for Truro will be considered in late Summer when the conversion of all JSA will have taken place.

All reception staff are trained to give information and advice on benefits on retirement. In addition to this eight members of staff are available to answer telephone queries on Retirement Pension and to discuss complicated matters face to face with customers in the Truro office. Customers are welcome to call at Truro Office (Lemon Quay House) or to telephone (01872 355000) for the information.

There is also a national telephone service "Pensions Info-Line" for DSS material on pensions, the telephone number is 0345 313233 and is charged at the rate of a local call.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

HEALTH

Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

11. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the extent of MRSA and measures taken to combat its spread. [19172]

Mr. Horam: The Department is currently working with professional groups on the revision of clinical guidelines on MRSA. We have also sponsored an educational video for nurses and issued an information leaflet on MRSA to nursing and residential homes. The public health laboratory service recorded incidents of MRSA in 177 hospitals in England last year, affecting just over 19,000 patients. Health authorities are required—through their contracts with providers—to ensure that adequate infection control arrangements are in place within hospitals. Hospitals are similarly required to ensure that their hospital infection control team covers all hospital facilities.

Insulin Pens (Disposable Needles)

13. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about disposable needles for insulin pens. [19174]

Mr. Malone: We have received a number of representations in favour of allowing general practitioners to prescribe insulin injection pen needle on the national health service.

St. Cross Hospital, Rugby

14. Mr Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about clinical services at St. Cross hospital at Rugby. [19175]

Mr. Malone: The delivery of safe and effective clinical services is a matter for health authorities and trusts which are best placed to take into account local needs and circumstances.

Health Boards and Trusts (Membership)

15. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to review the membership of health boards and trusts following criticisms by the health service ombudsman. [19176]

Mr. Malone: We are currently studying the report of the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration on the issues raised in the health service commissioner's report for 1995–96.

Factor 8

16. Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the availability throughout England of recombinant factor 8. [19177]

Mr. Horam: Our aim is to ensure that the best health care is obtained for the resources available. We believe that aim is best achieved when decisions on appropriate treatments are made locally, taking account of the patient's individual needs, the alternative treatments available, and the availability of resources.

Community Pharmacies

17. Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve assistance to small community pharmacies; and if he will make a statement. [19178]

Mr. Malone: The essential small pharmacy scheme already provides financial support to pharmacies located more than 1 km from the next nearest pharmacy and which dispense at least 6,000 and fewer than 18,636 national health service prescriptions in a year.

Tobacco Companies

18. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will encourage tobacco companies to enter into an agreement to make available the same sum of money as they spend on advertising and promotion to health promotional groups. [19179]

Mr. Horam: The Government have no such plans.

Drugs Budget

19. Sir Roger Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the analysis his Department has carried out of the drugs budgets of general practitioner fundholders and of non-fundholders. [19180]

Mr. Malone: Health authorities allocate prescribing budgets annually, to both fundholding and non-fundholding general practitioners, to meet patient needs. Guidance is issued to help health authorities achieve equity between fundholding and non-fundholding practices and the national health service executive's regional offices oversee the whole process to ensure fairness. Analysis of the management of drugs budgets by fundholders and non-fundholders shows a 6 per cent. saving by each wave of fundholders compared with trends in expenditure by non-fundholders. These savings are "locked in" and currently represent some £100 million each year.

Prescription Charges

20. Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on prescription charges. [19181]

Mr. Malone: Only those who can afford to do so are asked to pay prescription charges. Extensive exemption arrangements mean that 85 per cent. of prescription items are dispensed free to patients, for example because of their age, income or medical condition.

Cancer Treatment (Lancashire)

21. Mr. Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions he proposes to make to improve hospital cancer treatment facilities in Lancashire. [19182]

Mr. Horam: Four Calman cancer units are being developed, at Preston and Chorley; Blackburn and Burnley; Blackpool; and Lancaster, Kendal and Barrow.

A new radiotherapy facility has been built at Preston acute hospitals national health service trust. The radiotherapy unit opened and treated the first patient on 24 February 1997.

The cancer unit at Preston and Chorley will be developed in due course into a Calman cancer centre—over the next five years.

Private Finance Initiative

22. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the contribution the private finance initiative is making towards capital expenditure in the NHS. [19183]

Mr. Horam: The contribution that the private finance initiative will make to national health service capital spending is estimated to be as follows:

Year	Amount £ million
1996–97	65
1997–98	166
1998–99	307
1999–00	4212

Orthodontists (North West)

23. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to address the shortage of orthodontists in the north west. [19184]

Mr. Malone: Orthodontics is one of the priority areas for training additional specialist registrars in the year 1997–98, and as shown in the table, the number of specialist orthodontists in training has risen significantly in the last two years.

Numbers of orthodontic specialists in training

	Whole time equivalent registrars	Senior registrars
30 September 1994 (England and Wales)	50	28
30 September 1995 (England and Wales)	56	34
28 February 1996 (All UK)	85	42

For 1997–98 the standing workforce advisory group (SWAG) has recommended that not less than six and not more than 21 orthodontic specialist posts should be created.

Bed Blocking

24. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on bed blocking. [19185]

Mr. Burns: We have consistently emphasised the need for health and local authorities to work closely together in this area. The implementation of the community care reforms required health authorities and local authorities to reach agreements about arrangements for hospital discharge. It is also a key element of the work which health authorities undertook to implement the guidance on national health service responsibilities for continuing care.

On 28 November 1996, we announced the continuing care challenge fund which is targeted at initiatives which aim to alleviate delays in discharge by avoiding inappropriate admissions to acute hospitals, facilitating discharge following rehabilitation and avoiding unnecessary readmissions by ensuring the availability of support at home. A total of £16 million has been allocated to 69 health authorities in 1996–97 and £20 million, matched by £40 million from health and/or local authorities will be available to 95 health authorities in 1997–98.

Doctors (Training)

25. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the correlation between the numbers of students entering medical schools and the shortfall of doctors in the NHS. [19186]

Mr. Malone: The Government are advised by the Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee—MWSAC—on the balance between future supply and demand for doctors. In 1995, we accepted the MWSAC recommendation for an increase of the target medical school intake by 500 to 4,970 by 2000; and funds are being provided for this through the higher education funding councils.

MWSAC is now working towards its third report and has taken evidence from a number of interested parties. It will make recommendations based on the evidence and analysis.

NHS Budgets

26. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the percentage change in the proportion of NHS budgets spent on administration since 1989. [19187]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Sutcliffe) on 3 December 1996, column 635.

Changes over the years in the roles and responsibilities of family practitioner committees, family health services authorities, district health authorities, and regional health authorities, and the transfer of functions to national health service trusts, mean that the figures are not directly comparable. These figures also include expenditure on medical negligence, capital charges grants to voluntary bodies and some health care services, for example, health promotion.

NHS Capital Expenditure

27. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on capital expenditure in the health service. [19188]

Mr. Horam: The last 10 years have seen the largest sustained building programme in the history of the national health service with over 700 schemes each costing over £1 million being completed. It is anticipated that £1.9 billion will be spent in 1996–97 on constructing, improving and modernising NHS buildings using both public capital.

NHS Waiting Lists

28. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of people on NHS waiting lists at the latest available date. [19189]

Mr. Horam: Provisional figures show that, on 31 December 1996, there were 1,095,940 parents waiting for admission to national health service hospitals in England on an in-patient or day case basis, only 2 per cent. of whom had been waiting more than a year.

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were waiting (a) over one year and (b) over 18 months for treatment (i) in each region and (ii) nationally in December 1996; and how many (1) in each equivalent region and (2) nationally were waiting for (a) and (b) in March 1991. [20370]

Mr. Horam: The table gives the information requested. Information on the number of patients waiting over 18 months is not available for 1991. Regions have been adjusted as far as possible to allow comparisons between 1991 and 1996, but some differences remain, notably due to boundary changes in south Humber, Bedfordshire and Morecambe bay.

Patients waiting over one year at end December 1996 (provisional)

Region	Patients waiting over one year	Of which: Patients waiting over 18 months
Northern and Yorkshire	2,563	0
Trent	5,277	0
Anglia and Oxford	1,561	22
North Thames	4,007	59
South Thames	2,924	28
South and West	2,507	12
West Midlands	288	0
North West	2,813	2
England	21,940	123

Patients waiting over one year at end March 1991

Region	Patients waiting over one year
Northern and Yorkshire	17,801
Trent	10,525
Anglia and Oxford	19,713
North Thames	36,593
South Thames	26,265
South and West	24,452
West Midlands	17,473
North West	16,939
England	169,761

Regions not directly comparable due to boundary changes, notably in south Humberside, Morecambe bay and Bedfordshire.

Primary Care

29. Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to meet general practitioners from north Derbyshire to discuss his Department's plans for primary care. [19190]

Mr. Malone: We have already sent copies of the White Papers "Primary Care: The Future—Choice and Opportunity" and "Primary Care: Developing the Future", to all general medical practitioners. Subject to parliamentary approval of the NHS (Primary Care) Bill, we shall be writing to all general medical practitioners, and issuing guidance to health authorities and NHS trusts, advising them how they can pilot some of the new arrangements for the delivery of primary care.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pending the result of the inquiry by Judge Fallon, what action should be taken by the chief executive of a special health authority high-security psychiatric hospital on receipt of a dossier of allegations concerning another special hospital; and if he will make a statement concerning the reporting relationships between the chairmen and chief executives of the special hospitals and the chairman and chief executive of the High Security Psychiatric Services Commissioning Board. [17802]

Mr. Burns: It would not be appropriate to comment on matters that may be considered by his honour, Mr. Peter Fallon in the course of his deliberations.

Chairmen and chief executives of the three hospital authorities are responsible for providing high secure psychiatric services, as commissioned by the NHS executive on behalf of the Secretary of State, taking advice from the High Secure Psychiatric Services Commissioning Board.

Prescriptions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of (a) the value of prescribed products which are imported from overseas having been manufactured in the United Kingdom and (b) the savings achieved as a result of not purchasing direct from a United Kingdom manufacturer. [18874]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not available.

Medical Officers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those responsible for the duties formerly carried out by municipal authority medical officers of health; for which geographical areas each is responsible; who appoints such people; what are their usual minimum qualifications; to whom they are accountable; what statutory provisions relating to the former duties of these medical officers (a) apply and (b) do not apply to these persons; and what subsequent legislation governs their activities. [20012]

Mr. Horam: The Local Government Act 1972 provides for the appointment by the local authority of such for the proper discharge of their functions and obligations. Each local authority may appoint "proper officers" (defined in s270 of the 1972 Act) for particular purposes.

'Such officers as they think necessary'

Children in Need

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children below the age of 16 years were found in need in central London in the last year for which figures are available. [20410]

Mr. Burns: The relevant figures are not available centrally.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) GPs and (b) GP practices the Government estimate will become fundholders from April 1997; and what projections he has made for subsequent years. [20371]

Mr. Malone: A total of 1,714 general practitioners in 646 practices will join the fundholding scheme on 1 April this year. This will give a total of 15,137 GP fundholders in 4,381 practices. This means that 58 per cent. of people in England will have a fundholder as their GP from this April.

GPs have until 31 July 1997 to apply to join the eighth wave of GP fundholding.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expert advice he has received or has requested about the advantages of (a) antenatal screening for and (b) infant vaccination against hepatitis B; and if he will make a statement. [20211]

Mr. Horam: The United Kingdom has one of the lowest prevalence rates of hepatitis B carriage in the world. Our current policy is to target immunisation at groups at increased risk of infection including babies born to women who are chronic carriers of the hepatitis B virus or who have had acute hepatitis B infection during pregnancy.

The National Screening Committee is considering the antenatal screening programme for hepatitis B and the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation is considering what may be the most appropriate future strategy for the control of hepatitis B, in the context of the whole childhood immunisation programme.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received from the Children's Liver Disease Foundation about (a) antenatal screening for and (b) infant vaccination against hepatitis B; and if he will make a statement. [20212]

Mr. Burns: I met representatives of the Children's Liver Disease Foundation on 11 March. Antenatal screening for hepatitis B and childhood immunisation against hepatitis B were among the matters discussed at the meeting.

Ondine's Curse

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data his Department has collated concerning the incidence in the United Kingdom of congenital central hypoventilation syndrome (Ondine's curse); and if there is any record of a patient outgrowing the disorder. [20208]

Mr. Horam: The Department does not collate this data. The national health service executive is currently funding a research project into the management of children who require long-term ventilation support. This study includes the collation of data on children affected by congenital central hypoventilation syndrome. There is no record of a patient outgrowing this condition.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of employees of the Medicines Control Agency who possessed a qualification in (a) epidemiology and (b) statistics on (i) 1 June, (ii) 1 August, (iii) 1 October and (iv) 1 November 1995. [20558]

Mr. Malone: It is not possible to state how many employees employed by the Medicines Control Agency had a qualification in either epidemiology and statistics as the agency does not keep such records.

Social Services Expenditure

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure on social services in 1979–80; what estimate he has made of the level of that expenditure in the present year; and what is the real terms percentage change in expenditure between the two years. [20687]

Mr. Burns: In 1979–80, net expenditure on personal social services was £1,314 million. Local authorities have budgeted to spend £7,923 million on personal social services in 1996–97, 129 per cent. more in real terms than in 1979–80.

Bristol Royal Infirmary

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set up an inquiry into the delivery of paediatric cardiac surgical services at Bristol royal infirmary from 1990 to 1995. [21263]

Mr. Dorrell: Yes. Concerns about the quality and management of paediatric cardiac surgical services and related issues at that time lead me to believe that an inquiry is necessary. However, the General Medical Council is currently considering proceedings in respect of paediatric cardiac surgery at the United Bristol Healthcare national health service trust and I would not wish to prejudice its deliberations. Therefore this inquiry will not start until the GMC has completed its proceedings. Further announcements about the remit and form of the inquiry will be made in due course.

Earth Summit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what preparations his Department is making for the UN General Assembly to review progress since the Rio Earth summit of 1992 and for the preparatory committees leading up to the summit. [19140]

Mr. Horam: The Government are committed to ensuring the United Kingdom meets the targets set at the Rio Earth summit. The Department is working, together with other Government Departments, to deliver those with health implications.

Lewisham Hospital

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made of (a) the number of surgical procedures cancelled at Lewisham hospital since the imposition of the emergency-only admission policy in November 1996 and (b) the likely figure at the end of the current financial year. [19412]

Mr. Malone: Ministers are aware that elective surgery has been rescheduled at Lewisham hospital. The delivery of services locally is a matter for health authorities and trusts. The Department of Health does not analyse cancelled surgical procedures at a local level. The hon. Member may wish to contact Professor Maurice Lessof, chairman of Lewisham hospital NHS trust for details.

Accident and Emergency Service

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make an official visit for north-east London to review the working of the accident and emergency service. [19780]

Mr. Horam: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no immediate plans to visit north-east London to review the working of the accident and emergency services.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the last 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19776]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is:

Parliamentary session	Bills
Sponsored by Department of Health
1995–96	3
1994–95	3
1993–94	0
1992–93	2
1991–92	1
1990–91	0
1988–89	0
Sponsored by Department of Health and Social Security
1987–88	2
1986–87	1
1985–86	2
1984–85	3
1983–84	2
1982–83	3
1981–82	3

All Bills received Royal Assent.The Department of Health was formed in July 1988. The figures given for 1981–82 to 1987–88 are for Bills sponsored by the former Department of Health and Social Security.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each month in 1994 the total attendance allowances paid to members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines. [20148]

Mr. Malone: The available information for each month in 1994 is as follows:

Month	Attendance allowance £
January	2,025
February	2,025
March	1,725
April	1,725
May	1,925
June	1,725
July	1,925
August	No meeting
September	2,650
October	2,025
November	1,825
December	1,625

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the (a) daily attendance and (b) preparation allowance payable in October 1995 to a member of the Committee on Safety of Medicines. [20147]

Mr. Malone: The available information per meeting in October 1995, was (a) £100 and (b) £60 per member.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the changes which have been made in the subcommittees of the Committee on Safety of Medicines with effect from 1 January 1996; whether those changes were made by regulations in terms of schedule 1 of the Medicines Act 1968; and if he will make a statement. [20137]

Mr. Malone: The sub-committee on pharmacovigilance was established on 1 January 1996.

The committee may, with the approval of Ministers, appoint sub-committees under regulation 6 of the Medicines Commission and Committees Regulations 1970. Regulation 6 was made under paragraph 1 of schedule 1 to the Medicines Act 1968.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which chairmen of the Committee on Safety of Medicines have resigned before the scheduled conclusion of their period of office. [20142]

Mr. Malone: None.

Product Licences

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of the last five years for which information is available the (i) mean, (ii) standard deviation and (iii) range of the times from receipt of a valid application for a product licence for a new chemical entity until the date for which a product licence is granted or declined. [20138]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not collected by the Medicines Control Agency. The agency publishes information on its licensing performance in the Medicines Act information leaflet. The leaflet is published bi-monthly and copies are placed in the Library.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the public announcements on issues of drug safety made by or on behalf of the licensing authority since 1 January 1986, which resulted in a compulsory variation of product licences; and if he will list for each what body or individual made the announcement on behalf of the licensing authority. [20143]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave him on 9 May 1996 at columns 244-45 and 9 July 1996 at column 148.

Oral Contraceptives

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what public health reasons postponed the start of despatch of the "Dear Doctor" letters dated 18 October 1995; and if he will make a statement; [20139]

(2) if, prior to 13 October 1995, the Medicines Control Agency gave a written undertaking to Professor Hershel Jick and his colleagues that their unpublished data on the safety of oral contraceptives would be treated in confidence; [20151]

(3) if, at the meeting of the Committee for Proprietary Medicinal Products on 17–18 October 1995, the United Kingdom representatives informed the CPMP that the Committee on Safety of Medicines had met on 13 October 1995. [20152]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 17 March 1997 column 472.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the oral contraceptives which contain desogestrel or gestodene which currently have a product licence; and for each product if he will list the company which holds the product licence and the date on which the product licence was granted. [20140]

Mr. Malone: The following currently granted marketing authorisations for oral contraceptives contain desogestrel or gestodene.

Oral contraceptives containing desogestrel

Marvelon 150/30
Organon Laboratories Ltd.
Granted 4 November 1981

Marvelon 75/50

Granted 22 July 1986.

Clinical Trials

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the statutory instruments which regulate the approval of clinical trials by the licensing authority; and if he will make a statement. [20141]

Mr. Malone: The following is the information:

The Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Clinical Trials) Order 1995 (S.I. 1995/2808).

The Medicines (Exemption from Licences and Certificates) (Clinical Trials) Order 1995 (S.I. 1995/2809).

The Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Clinical Trials) Order 1974 (S.I. 1974/498).

The Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Special Cases and Miscellaneous Provisions) Order 1972 (S.I. 1972/1200)

The Medicines (Exemptions from Licences) (Special and Transitional Cases) Order 1971 (S.I. 1971/1450)

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the ministerial responsibilities of the hon. Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville) on 13 October 1995; and what change was made to these responsibilities prior to his move to the Home Office in November 1995. [20144]

Mr. Horam: The ministerial responsibilities of the Under-Secretary of State, on 13 October 1995 and until his move to the Home Office in November 1995 were published in "Vacher's Parliamentary Companion", copies of which are available in the Library.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many employees of the Medicines Control Agency on 13 October 1995 had a qualification in epidemiology; and if he will make a statement. [20145]

Mr. Malone: It is not possible to state how many employees employed by the Medicines Control Agency on 13 October 1995 had a qualification in epidemiology as the agency does not keep such records.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve the recruitment and retention of staff in the Medicines Control Agency with a qualification in epidemiology. [20146]

Mr. Malone: The Medicines Control Agency has an epidemiology unity with the post-licensing division which has staff with expertise and experience in pharmaco-epidemiology. Regarding recruitment and retention, the MCA is continually looking at ways in which to increase the complement of professional staff in general, including use of the agency's delegated authority to speed up the recruitment process and the flexibilities in terms and conditions which may be available.

Clinical Depression

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to include targets for improving the diagnosis and treatment of clinical depression in a future review of the "The Health of the Nation" programme. [20200]

Mr. Burns: We have no plans to introduce such targets.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people suffer from clinical depression in the United Kingdom each year. [20201]

Mr. Burns: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' survey of psychiatric morbidity carried out in Great Britain in 1993 revealed that 21 per thousand people aged between 16 to 64 years suffered from depression in the preceding week before the survey.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent his Department currently supports research into clinical depression; and what future plans he has for such support. [20202]

Mr. Burns: The Department's policy research programme has commissioned a number of studies into severe mental illness, many of which are related to depression. The national health service research and development programme strategy established a national mental health programme in 1992. The main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council. The MRC is an independent body which receives its grant in aid from the Office of Science and Technology, which is part of the Department of Trade and Industry. The MRC has a comprehensive portfolio of research on depressive illness, both at its own establishments and in the form of grant support to universities. These programmes are on-going.

Organophosphates

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) for what reason the Government have not imposed a ban on the use of organophosphates; [20337]

(2) what restrictions exist on the sale of substances containing (a) malathion and (b) other organophosphates. [20338]

Mr. Horam: Organophosphates are insecticides, widely used on crops, animals—including sheep dips—and have some uses in the home and garden. Additionally, malathion, an OP, is used for treatment of headlice. Use of OPs for any of these purposes is strictly controlled.

Pesticides, such as those used on crops or in the home, must be approved by Ministers before they can be advertised, sold, supplied, stored or used. The independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides—ACP—advises the regulatory Ministers on the granting, amendment or revocation of individual approvals. Applicants for pesticides approvals must show that their products are effective, humane and pose no unacceptable risk to human beings, non-target species or the wider environment before approval is granted.

For a human medicinal product to be marketed in the United Kingdom it must receive a marketing authorisation granted by the licensing authority on the basis of safety, quality and efficacy. Malathion is an authorised human medicinal product in the UK. There is no evidence to suggest that malathion when used for the treatment of head lice has led to any serious adverse effects. Its supply as a human medicine is restricted to sale in pharmacies only.

The Veterinary Products Committee is the independent group of scientific experts which advises the Government on veterinary medicines, including those containing organophosphorus substances. Before they can be marketed in the UK, all veterinary medicines must satisfy the statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. Safety in this context includes the consumer of any product from the treated animal, the operator and the environment, as well as the health and welfare of the treated animal.

As to the reasons for not imposing a ban on OPs, I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave him on 6 March 1997, column 707.

Mineral Hydrocarbons

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the cancer risks associated with mineral hydrocarbons; and if he will list the conclusion of this research. [20695]

Mr. Horam: There has been no recent research commissioned or evaluated by the Department of Health into the cancer risks associated with mineral hydrocarbons.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those medicines containing mineral hydrocarbons which are sold across the counter at pharmacies. [20696]

Mr. Malone: There are 79 licensed medicinal products containing mineral hydrocarbons as the active constituent that may be supplied at pharmacies without prescription. A list of these medicines will be placed in the Library shortly.

NHS Beds (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) acute, (b) long stay and (c) other NHS beds there were in north Yorkshire in 1992; and how many there are currently. [20880]

Mr. Horam: The information available centrally can be found in "Bed availability for England", copies of which are available in the Library. The latest information is for 1995–96.

Finished Consultant Episodes

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) individual patients were treated and (b) finished consultant episodes were recorded by each NHS trust in north Yorkshire in the latest year for which figures are available. [20886]

Mr. Horam: Information on the number of patients treated is not available centrally. Data on finished consultant episodes for each trust in England is available in "Ordinary and day case admissions for England", copies of which are available in the Library. The latest year for which figures are available is 1995–96.

Local Pay

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was spent by NHS trusts in north Yorkshire on local pay negotiations in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97.

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not centrally held.

Nurses

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses have (a) left NHS employment and (b) completed basic nurse training in north Yorkshire in each of the last five years. [20877]

Mr. Horam: Information relating to nurses leaving national health service employment is collected by the Office of Manpower and Economics and is available in the annual report of the Review Body for Nursing staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine. Copies of the review body's annual reports are available in the Library.

The hon. Member may wish to contact the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, for details of nurses who have completed basic nurse training.

Patients (Readmissions)

Mr. Bayley: to ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of patients discharged following (a) surgery of all kinds, (b) cataract operation, (c) appendectomy, (d) prostatectomy, (e) hysterectomy and (f) total hip replacement in each NHS trust, were subsequently readmitted to hospital as an emergency within 28 days of the discharge in each of the last three years. [20885]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by north Yorkshire NHS trusts on preparing PFI schemes. [20883]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) on 17 July 1996, column 562. Further information is not held centrally.

NHS Trusts (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which north Yorkshire NHS trusts reduced their rate of elective admissions for patients of non-fundholding general practitioners in the final quarter of 1996–97. [20878]

Mr. Malone: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. Information by health authority on the number of elective finished consultant episodes is collected and figures for the final quarter of 1996–97 will be available later this year.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much was spent on hospitality by NHS trusts in north Yorkshire in (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1995–96; [20889]

(2) how many NHS consultants employed by each NHS trusts in north Yorkshire undertake private work; and what proportion of their time they spend on private work; [20873]

(3) what was the average number of hours worked by junior hospital doctors in each NHS trusts in north Yorkshire in each year since 1992–93; [20876]

(4) how much was spent on attendance fees, travel and expenses for NHS staff from north Yorkshire to attend conferences (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) abroad in (i) 1992–93 and (ii) 1995–96. [20888]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what would be the cost of making all NHS wards in north Yorkshire single sex wards; [20879]

(2) how many pay beds there are currently in each NHS trust in north Yorkshire; and how many were there in 1992. [20872]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available centrally.

Patients (Purchasing)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the procedures which North Yorkshire health authority has (a) ceased purchasing and (b) placed restrictions on purchasing for patients. [20875]

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for North Yorkshire health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Mrs. Susan Wrigley, for details.

Lease Cars

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many lease cars were provided for NHS managers in north Yorkshire in 1992; and how many are provided currently. [20887]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact trusts and the health authority in North Yorkshire for details.

Clinical Negligence

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the results of the pilot study for an alternative to litigation for clinical negligence will be available. [20837]

Mr. Horam: The mediation pilot scheme is expected to run until the end of this year. An evaluation of the project should be completed early in 1998. Ministers will then consider, in the light of the evaluation, whether further action is needed to encourage mediation as a possible alternative to litigation in resolving cases of alleged clinical negligence.

Depression Alliance

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the work of, and provide financial support for, the Depression Alliance. [20871]

Mr. Burns: The Depression Alliance provides information, advice, support and fellowship to all who suffer from depression and their carers and promotes research into the causes and prevention of depression. The Department provides financial support amounting to £33,000 in the current financial year and will provide £89,000 in 1997–98.

Ambulances (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulances there were in the North Yorkshire ambulance service fleet in 1992; and how many there are currently. [20882]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not collected centrally. The second report of the Health Committee in Session 1994–95, copies of which are available in the Library, provides some information about the number of emergency ambulances in service at the time of the report.

Dental Patients

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were registered as NHS patients with a general dental practitioner in north Yorkshire in each year since 1992–93. [20874]

Mr. Malone: The table shows the number of adults, children and total number of patients registered at 30 September in each year from 1992 to 1996 in North Yorkshire family health services authority. Since May 1994, the Dental Practice Board has continued to improve procedures for eliminating duplicate registrations. This will have resulted in a lower registration figure.

General Dental Service: Number of child and adult registrations[1,2] in North Yorkshire at 30 September from 1992 to 1996

	Child registrations	Adult registrations	All registrations
September 1992	108,254	351,027	459,281
September 1993	112,996	343,918	456,914
September 1994	114,580	333,895	448,475
September 1995	113,699	319,965	433,664
September 1996	114,098	315,910	430,008

Notes:

[1] Dentists receive scheduled payments a month in arrears. Therefore the September figures relate to the status of registrations at the end of September. An active registration is one for which payment has been made in respect of September and which the registration was not due to lapse until after September.

[2] The number of registrations counted on the Dental Practice Board data basis is not the same as the number of patients registered, since it is possible for one patient to be registered with more than one dentist. Over the period April 1994 to September 1996 a considerable number of such duplicate registrations have been cleaned from the database. The Dental Practice Board processes which ensure the correct recording of registrations have also been tightened.

Cancer Deaths

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the patients in each NHS trust died within (a) one year and (b) five years of being diagnosed as suffering from cancer of the (i) trachea, bronchus or lung, (ii) large bowel, (iii) female breast and (iv) ovary in the most recent period for which data are available. [20884]

Mr. Horam: Information on diagnosis and mortality is not collected in the form requested.

Corticosteroid

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the documented side-effects of the drug corticosteroid; and if this research is in the public domain. [20834]

Mr. Malone: The Department of Health has not commissioned research into the side-effects of corticosteroids. The available research into the side-effects of corticosteroids, as with all medicines, was assessed at the time of granting the individual products' marketing authorisations and continues to be evaluated by the Medicines Control Agency whenever new information emerges. A national programme for monitoring the side-effects of marketed medicines exists which includes evaluating data obtained from various sources such as the yellow card system, scientific literature, and information received from other regulatory authorities.

Much research has been published in the literature about the side-effects of corticosteroids and is therefore in the public domain. In addition, the side-effects for corticosteroids are well documented in product information which is produced by the manufacturer and authorised by the licensing authority, and in the "British National Formulary" which the Department sends free of charge to all doctors.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of current hospital admissions in the United Kingdom relate to adverse effects arising from the drug corticosteroid. [20836]

Mr. Horam: The information available centrally relates to the number of admissions to hospitals in England where an adverse reaction to "Drugs medicaments and biological substances in therapeutic use" has been recorded.

Information for 1994–95, which is the latest available year, shows that 886 finished consultant episodes—less than 1 in 10,000—related to adverse effects arising from the drug corticosteroid.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning were reported in (a) York and (b) north Yorkshire in each year since 1979. [20838]

Mr. Horam: The figures are published annually in the series MB2 "Communicable disease statistics", copies of which are available in the Library. For 1996 data I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 13 February 1997, at column 286. Provisional figures for the fourth quarter have been placed in the Library.

Parliamentary Answers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many questions were tabled for reply by his Department in each Session since 1979–80; in how many instances in each year the reply has been that providing the information involved disproportionate cost; and in how many instances in each year questions have been given the reply that the information was not available centrally. [16789]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health was not formed until July 1988, therefore information is not available for the period before then.

A list of the number of written and oral parliamentary questions answered by the Department in the sessions 1988–89 to 1995–96, as supplied by the POLIS database, is available in the Library.

Other information requested is shown in the table:

Session	PQ answered with "disproportionate cost" in reply	PQ answered with "Not available/collected centrally" in reply
1988–89	21	156
1989–90	10	200
1990–91	18	193
1991–92	6	130
1992–93	35	327
1993–94	39	227
1994–95	42	310
1995–96	24	276

Source:
1. POLIS database.
2. Due to the on-going development of the POLIS database and the way figures were collated statistics given previously may now be out of date. The figures supplied in this reply are therefore not comparable with those given previously.

Medicines Commission

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the meeting dates for 1996 and 1997 of the Medicines Commission. [20149]

Mr. Malone: Medicines Commission meetings were held on the following dates in 1996:

17 May
19 July
20 September
15 November.

There have been no meetings so far this year. Meetings are scheduled for the following dates in 1997:

21 March
18 April
20 June
19 September
14 November.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Metropolitan Police Committee's advice on proposed objectives for the Metropolitan police in 1997–98. [21370]

Mr. Howard: Following consultation with the chairman of the Metropolitan Police Committee and the Commissioner, I have approved the following objectives for the Metropolitan police in 1997–98:

(i) To increase the security of the capital against terrorism;

(ii) to solve at least 20 per cent. of burglaries, 15 per cent. of street robberies and at least maintain at the present level detections for offences of supplying illegal drugs;

(iii) to reduce crimes of local concern in identified crime prone areas on every division;

(iv) to improve public reassurance through visible, effective patrolling and problem solving;

(v) to improve the briefing, tasking and debriefing of operational officers;

(vi) to equip operational staff with the management information they need to do their jobs;

(vii) to structure our central support services to ensure the best support to operational policing.

These objectives and details of how to address the Government's key objectives for policing are set out in the "Metropolitan Police Policing Plan 1997–98" which the Commissioner is issuing with my approval. I will be sending copies to all hon. Members whose constituencies fall wholly or partly within the Metropolitan police district and arranging for copies to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recent report by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary on complaints and discipline in the Metropolitan police. [21392]

Mr. Maclean: I have today placed in the Library a note of the recommendations from the report, together with the Commissioner's responses and the police authority responses, which take into account the advice my right hon. and learned Friend and I have received from the Metropolitan Police Committee.

Asylum

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers from Saudi Arabia have been granted (a) refugee status, (b) exceptional leave to remain and (c) permanent residence in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years by year of arrival. [20930]

Mr. Kirkhope: During the period 1987 to 1996, a total of 10 nationals of Saudi Arabia were granted asylum, or refused asylum but granted exceptional leave, in the United Kingdom. During the same period, fewer than 10 Saudi nationals, previously granted asylum or exceptional leave, were accepted for settlement—this excludes any such persons subsequently accepted for settlement on non-asylum related grounds.

A full breakdown of the above, by the year of arrival in the United Kingdom, is not available.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open Government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [20940]

Mr. Howard: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration

Commission for Racial Equality

Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority

Data Protection Registrar

Horserace Betting Levy Board

In addition, consideration is being given to the possibility of including all executive non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

(b) Scrutiny by the Audit Commission

None (the Audit Commission has responsibility only for local government).

(c) Scrutiny by the National Audit Office

Commission for Racial Equality

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority

Data Protection Registrar

Gaming Board for Great Britain

Parole Board

Police Complaints Authority

(d) Statutory provisions for Open Government

The following executive NDPBs are required by statute to publish annual reports:

Alcohol Education and Research Council

Commission for Racial Equality

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority

Data Protection Registrar

Gaming Board for Great Britain

Horserace Betting Levy Board

Horserace Totalisator Board

Parole Board

Police Complaints Authority

Those NDPBs which are subject to scrutiny by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are also subject to the code of practice on open government, and other NDPBs are being asked to develop codes of practice on similar lines.

(e) Performance Indicators

Home Office NDPBs are encouraged by the relevant sponsoring unit to develop and publish performance indicators and associated targets wherever possible.

(f) Provisions under the Citizen's Charter

Those executive NDPBs which offer a service to the public are encouraged to adopt the principles set out in the citizens charter and to publicise how these are being reflected in their working arrangements—for instance, the Commission for Racial Equality has published a statement of charter standards and the Gaming Board has published customer service targets in its annual report.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20906]

Mr. Howard: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Publication of annual reports

Alcohol Education and Research Council (statutory)
Commission for Racial Equality (statutory)
Criminal Cases Review Commission (statutory)
Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority (statutory)
Data Protection Registrar (statutory)
Gaming Board for Great Britain (statutory)
Horserace Betting Levy Board (statutory)
Horserace Totalisator Board (statutory)
Parole Board (statutory)
Police Complaints Authority (statutory)

(b) Publication of annual accounts

Alcohol Education and Research Council (statutory)
Commission for Racial Equality (statutory)
Criminal Cases Review Commission (statutory)
Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority (statutory)
Data Protection Registrar (statutory)
Gaming Board for Great Britain (voluntary)
Horserace Betting Levy Board (statutory)
Horserace Totalisator Board (statutory)
Parole Board (statutory)
Police Complaints Authority (statutory)

(c) Publication of the minutes of meetings

The Commission for Racial Equality keeps copies of the Commissioners' monthly meetings, which are available to the public. (voluntary arrangement)

(d) Publication of the agendas of meetings

The Commission for Racial Equality keeps copies of the Commissioners' monthly meetings, which are available to the public. (voluntary arrangement)

(e) Publication of registers of members' interests

The Police Complaints Authority and Horserace Betting Levy Board have registers of members' interests which are currently not published. The Commission for Racial Equality voluntarily publishes a register of its members' interests in its annual report.

In addition, the Gaming Board plans to set up a register and the Horserace Totalisator Board are considering this issue.

Firearms

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the disposal of weapons banned under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997. [20693]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The majority of the lawfully held weapons which will become banned under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 will be destroyed by the police in accordance with local police arrangements. Some weapons which are compatible with current police firearms standards may be retained for police training purposes; others of particular interest may be taken into local museum collections.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a category A inmate awaiting determination of extradition proceedings can be held or apply to be held in Northern Ireland. [20367]

Miss Widdecombe: No. The Extradition Act 1989 makes no provision for a separate jurisdiction for Northern Ireland. Under section 9 of the Extradition Act, the court of committal can only remand a person in custody to a prison in England and Wales.

Immigration Forms

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to replace the current application forms for foreign nationals wishing to apply for leave to remain in the United Kingdom. [21371]

Mr. Kirkhope: The current application forms expire on 14 April 1997. Revised versions of the six existing forms have been prescribed, together with a new form for those applying for an extension of stay or indefinite leave to remain following the refusal of asylum. These will be valid until 14 April 1998. From today until 14 April 1997 applications may be made on either the newly prescribed forms or the existing versions. Only the newly prescribed versions may be used for applications made on or after 15 April 1997. The new forms will be available shortly from the application forms unit—0181 760 2233—and copies have been placed in the Library.

John Kinsella

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reach a decision on his review of the case of John Kinsella. [20534]

Mr. Kirkhope: My right hon. and learned Friend has decided that the case of John Kinsella should be referred to the Court of Appeal under section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968. A letter was sent from the Home Office to the Court of Appeal on 17 March 1997.

Scientific Procedures (Dogs)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps were taken to ensure that the dogs acquired from sources (a) within the European Union and (b) outside the European Union used in scientific procedures during 1995 were purpose bred. [20659]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The provenance of imported dogs is routinely checked. In 1995, all such dogs were purpose-bred for laboratory use.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Kenya

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the present humanitarian situation in Kenya; and if he will make a statement. [20971]

Dr. Liam Fox: Much of Kenya is currently experiencing drought conditions, the worst affected areas being in eastern and north-eastern provinces. The British Government have provided emergency assistance totalling £3.9 million through Oxfam and the World Food Programme, mainly for the provision and distribution of food for pastoralist communities. The long rains, expected at this time, are now beginning to fall in some parts of the country. We are continuing to monitor the situation carefully.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Efficiency

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to promote cleaner and more efficient energy use. [19453]

Mr. Clappison: The Government actively promote energy efficiency through a wide range of initiatives and programmes across all sectors, including information and advice, voluntary schemes, and selective use of grants, incentives and regulation. The Government also established, and fund, the Energy Saving Trust. The trust's resources for the years to 1999–2000 were increased in the November Budget by £21.5 million, to £71.5 million.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list (a) the number and (b) the cost of (i) television advertisements, (ii) national newspaper advertisements and (iii) other advertisements that will be made in total as part of the energy efficiency advertising campaign; [20967]

(2) how many calls have been received by Intelmark from members of the public in response to the current energy efficiency advertising campaign; [20969]

(3) what is the total cost of the current energy efficiency advertising campaign; [20965]

(4) if he will give the dates that the current energy efficiency advertising campaign (a) began and (b) will end; [20964]

(5) how many additional inquiries from members of the public have been made to local energy advice centres, as a result of the current energy efficiency advertising campaign; [20968]

(6) if he will list (a) the number and (b) the cost of (i) television advertisements, (ii) national newspaper advertisements and (iii) other advertisements to date as part of the energy efficiency advertising campaign; [20966]

(7) how much money is being paid to Intelmark to deal with inquiries from members of the public as part of the current energy efficiency campaign. [20970]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: These are matters for the Energy Saving Trust, the independent private company which has developed and is running the current energy efficiency campaign.

Flood Alleviation

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for how much of the year it is estimated that water will flow naturally through the Maidenhead, Windsor and Eton flood alleviation scheme channel; and for how much of the year water will have to be pumped into the channel in order to keep the water moving. [20951]

Mr. Clappison: Water will flow naturally through the flood relief channel all year round without the need for pumping.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens' charter. [20943]

Sir Paul Beresford: Details of the executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department are listed in the Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies 1996". A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on Thursday 22 February 1996, Official Report, column 259. Since then, Central Manchester development corporation has been wound up. Otherwise, the position in respect of the bodies covered by that answer remains unchanged.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20903]

Sir Paul Beresford: Details of the executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department are listed in the Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies 1996". A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on Tuesday 27 February 1996, Official Report, columns 454–55. Since then, Central Manchester development corporation has been wound up. Otherwise, the position in respect of the bodies covered by that answer remains unchanged.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of Water Services publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20952]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on Monday 22 July 1996 Official Report, column 29.

Commission for the New Towns

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current remit of the Commission for the New Towns; and if he will make a statement. [20851]

Sir Paul Beresford: The current remit of the Commission for the New Towns is to continue disposing of the remaining new town land holdings and other assets at a rate consistent with maximising receipts and securing value for money, while also disengaging from its remaining liabilities in an orderly cost-effective manner.

The role of the commission after March 1998 was addressed in the reply given on 11 March 1997 by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration Official Report, columns 120–21.

Details of how the commission carried out its remit can be found in its annual report and accounts 1995–96, copies of which were laid before Parliament on 15 October 1996.

Millennium Park (Grimsby)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to announce his decision on the application for planning permission made by Kestonbond Holst Ltd. of Laceby, North East Lincolnshire, to build its proposed millennium park in Grimsby. [21163]

Sir Paul Beresford: No decision on whether the application to which my hon. Friend refers, should be called in for determination by the Secretary of State, can now be made until after the general election.

Housing

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the scheme for construction contracts under the Housing Grant, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 will become operative. [21138]

Mr. Clappison: The consultation paper, "Making the Scheme for Construction Contracts", which the Department of the Environment published last November, pointed out that it was reasonable to assume that the scheme would not be laid before Parliament before spring 1997. We have made good progress with the consultation exercise but it is now clear that we will not be laying the scheme in the current Session.

The consultation document canvassed views about the need for an "adjustment period" between the making of the scheme and the implementation of the complete legislative package. The responses showed that an adjustment period of a few months could well be needed. The precise duration may depend, to some extent, on the date the scheme is approved by Parliament.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will implement revised arrangements for administering European structural funds for England. [21388]

Mr. Curry: Following my announcement of 3 December 1996, Official Report, column 580, we notified the European Commission about the revised arrangements, and issued draft administrative guidance to programme monitoring committee partners, the local authority associations and the Training and Enterprise Councils National Council. The consultation demonstrated general support for introducing a more strategic, integrated approach to the administration of European structural fund programmes in England through the introduction of action plans and a single European regional development fund vote. Detailed points have been made about the implementation of this approach which the Government will consider further.

We expect the European Commission to agree the 1997 to 1999 objective 2 programmes during April. To ensure that work on the implementation of these programmes can proceed without delay, we shall therefore finalise and issue the administrative guidance as soon as possible.

The Government have taken account of the views of local partners about the position in the Mersyside objective 1 area where, as with objective 5(b) areas, there is an on-going six-year programme covering the period until December 1999. In all these areas, the revised arrangements will apply where the appropriate programme monitoring committees wish to adopt them for the remaining life of the current programmes.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Sykes: To ask the secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the final receipt from the sale of the Housing Corporation's loan portfolio to NatWest Markets. [21389]

Mr. Curry: The purchase price will be subject to changes in the underlying portfolio and to movements in the gilt rate until completion on 26 March, and I cannot therefore give a figure for the final sale receipt until after Parliament has risen. However, I shall write to my hon. Friend when the final figure is available, and place copies of the letter in the House Libraries.

Building Research Establishment

Mr. Garel-Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has yet completed the sale of the Building Research Establishment. [21423]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Yes. The sale transaction was completed earlier today.

Air Quality

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the mean (a) winter season and (b) annual concentrations of nitrogen dioxide at each national air quality monitoring site in each year since 1986–87, or the first year when the site commenced monitoring. [20276]

Mr. Clappison: A copy of the requested information, for national automatic air quality monitoring sites, has been placed in the Library of the House. Statistical information on air quality, including nitrogen dioxide, is also available in the Department of the Environment's "Digest of Environmental Statistics No. 18, 1996" and "Air Pollution in the United Kingdom: 1995" published on behalf of the Department by the National Environmental Technology Centre. Copies of both reports have been placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

Nirex Reports

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure that Nirex prepares quantitative analysis of the in-model and out-of-model factors which could significantly affect the calculated risk produced by Nirex 97. [20677]

Mr. Clappison: None. However, Nirex will need to satisfy the Environment Agency of the robustness of its safety case for any underground repository.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will send Cumbria county council copies of the Nirex reports N94, N96, N97, N98 and N99; [20676]

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the Nirex DSAT reports N95, N96, N97, N98 and N99. [20955]

Mr. Clappison: The Department does not have copies of these reports.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the relationship between the identified geological features and the measured responses reported in Nirex report 5/96/003; [20678]

(2) what period of time will be allowed for independent peer review of the document Nirex 97. [20679]

Mr. Clappison: This information should be requested from UK Nirex Ltd.

Business Rates

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about delays to preparations for, or provision of information about, the proposed business rate relief for village shops and similar businesses; and if he will make a statement on the timetable for implementing such relief. [20453]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have received a number of representations about rate relief for village shops. To allow local authorities sufficient time to prepare for the scheme, we intend to bring the rate relief measures into force from 1 April 1998.

Mr. Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals have been put to him, since 1 January 1995, from organisations representing small businesses, for (a) abolition of the business rates system and its replacement by another system for raising revenue and (b) fundamental changes in this system as it affects small businesses; and which proposals were received from more than one such organisation. [20452]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have received a number of different proposals from organisations representing small businesses for the reform of the rating system.

Harbour Porpoises

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to identify special areas of conservation, under the EU habitats and species directive, for harbour porpoises; and if he will make a statement. [20518]

Mr. Clappison: None. The available scientific evidence is insufficient to identify sites which meet the requirements set out in article 4(1) of the directive relating to aquatic species which range over wide areas.

Land Reclamation

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much land has been reclaimed by development corporations since their inception; and if he will make a statement. [20470]

Mr. Curry: The urban development corporations have made substantial progress in the reclamation of derelict and contaminated land.

A total of 2,976.3 hectares of land had been reclaimed up to 31 March 1996.

Pollution Inspectorate (Report)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the report TR-Z2-11 (Oldfield 95) prepared for HMIP. [20691]

Mr. Clappison: None. This is a matter for the Environment Agency.

Go-Karts

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the current arrangements for health and safety inspections carried out at go-kart circuits; and if he will make a statement. [20539]

Sir Paul Beresford: Operators of go-karts are either employers or self-employed people conducting an undertaking. As such, they are subject to the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and relevant regulations under the Act.

Circuits are inspected by either the Health and Safety Executive or local authorities depending on the main activity at the premises.

Building Regulations

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions are included in the Building Regulations 1991 (a) to ensure that underground drainage systems are resistant to damage by rats and (b) to prevent rats escaping from the sewerage systems; and if he will make a statement. [20987]

Mr. Clappison: The Building Regulations 1991 are cast in functional form, and as such contain no specific guidance on protecting underground drainage systems from rats. However guidance on the construction of drainage systems is provided in the approved document to part H of the Building Regulations, and includes advice on measures to deal with infestation of drains and private sewers by rodents.

Sewer Baiting

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the legal responsibility of local authorities and the water service companies with respect to sewer baiting. [20988]

Mr. Clappison: There is no specific duty on water and sewerage companies in relation to the control of rats in sewers. However, all sewerage undertakers have programmes to control and reduce the number of rats in their systems. This includes the use of baits in pumping stations and air vents to stop rats entering the system, or on ledges within sewers.

Local authorities have a long-standing duty to keep themselves informed about the sufficiency of drainage systems in their area to ensure that they do not pose a threat to public health. Failure to control rat infestations on property could be enforceable by the local authority environmental health officer under part III of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, if it is judged to be a statutory nuisance.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Prime Minister's Question Time

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a staement on (a) his assessment of, and (b) consultations on, possible changes to the format of Prime Minister's Question Time; and what was the outcome. [20451]

Mr. Newton: I have nothing further to add to my speech in the debate on parliamentary procedure on 11 July 1996, Official Report, columns 631–71.

Scottish Grand Committee

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will bring forward proposals to amend the Standing Orders to limit the time taken by Front-Bench spokespersons on speeches at the Scottish Grand Committee. [20448]

Mr. Newton: I think matters of this kind are better dealt with informally.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Ms Marie Younie

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received concerning the case of Marie Younie and the governing body of Belfairs community college in Leigh; and if she will make a statement concerning the conduct of the governing body and the Funding Agency for Schools in relation to their treatment of Ms Younie and the legal costs involved in her case. [20633]

Mrs. Gillan: My right hon. Friend has received many representations in support of both the governing body and Ms Younie since the breakdown in their relations. It is not possible to guarantee good working relations in any occupation and it is particularly unfortunate when this happens in schools. Nevertheless, this is an internal school matter. It is for the governing body to determine what action is deemed appropriate, but the Funding Agency for Schools is responsible for ensuring propriety in the use of public funds by grant-maintained schools.

Free School Meals

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will rank primary schools in order of the proportion of children eligible for free school meals. [20509]

Mrs. Gillan: Information on the proportion of children eligible for free meals for any particular school is not published centrally.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many Bills her Department and its predecessor Department have sponsored in each of the last 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19772]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The Department has sponsored a total of 32 Government Bills between 1982 and 1997. The breakdown for each year is as follows:

	Bill	Result
1981–82	Employment Bill	Passed
1982–83	Education (Fees and Awards) Bill	Passed

Skills Mismatch

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the extent of skills mismatch on a regional basis. [19470]

Mr. Paice: The Department funds an annual survey of employers' recruitment difficulties which provides data at regional level and monitors similar data from the CBI. Recruitment difficulties tend to be higher in the southern regions of the country. However, they are generally lower in these regions than they were at the peak of the economic cycle in 1990. Many recruitment difficulties may not be due to skills mismatch.

Employment Service

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what performance targets will be set to ensure that the Employment Service achieves its aims and objectives in 1997–98. [21391]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Employment Service's aim is to promote a competitive, efficient and flexible labour market by helping unemployed people into work, while ensuring they understand and fulfil the conditions for receipt of jobseeker's allowance. This aim is supported by five objectives.

I have set the Employment Service targets for each of its objectives as follows:

Objective A:

To offer unemployed people, particularly the longer-term unemployed and others at a disadvantage in the labour market, help and advice in finding work or appropriate training; and to encourage employers to recruit them.

Targets

1. To place 1.75 million unemployed people into work, of whom 1,050,000 million are JSA claimants.
2. 47.5 per cent. of total JSA claimant placings to be long-term (six months plus) claimants.
3. To place into work 75,000 JSA claimants out of work for two years or more.
4. 43 per cent. positive outcomes for JSA claimants invited to a 12-month advisory interview.
5. 150,000 ES clients to start on training for work.

Objective B:

To offer people with disabilities particular help and advice in finding and retaining work or appropriate training; and to help and encourage employers to make such opportunities available to them.

Target:

6. 4.8 per cent. of total unemployed placings achieved to be people with disabilities.

Objective C:

To advise jobseekers of the labour market conditions for receipt of jobseeker's allowance and to ensure that those receiving it are available for and actively seeking work, where appropriate by requiring specific activities of individual claimants.

Targets:

7. 10 per cent. of initial claim enquiries not to be pursued as new claims.
8. 145,000 submissions to adjudication where there is an arguable case with supporting information to show that the claimant is not available for, actively seeking or willing to accept work.
9. 70 per cent. of adjudication decisions made within 14 days.
10. 97 per cent. of Training for Work allowance payments to be accurate.
11. To ensure 90 per cent. of claims to JSA are passed to the Benefits Agency within seven days from date of claim.
12. To ensure that the accuracy of ES activity on a JSA claim is 97 per cent.

Objective D:

To provide services to all clients in accordance with published standards and expectations, developed in line with the citizens charter initiative.

Standard:

13. To deliver the standards of service in the jobseeker's charter.

Objective E:

To manage the delivery of programmes and services efficiently, effectively and economically, and within the resources available.

Target:

14. To achieve £40 million in efficiency savings.

In addition, the Employment Service will be measured against the following criteria, to ensure that it is satisfactorily operating the jobseeker's allowance:

to achieve effective joint working between ES and BA;

to improve the service to jobseekers;

jobseekers should improve the effectiveness and intensity of their jobsearch;

the intervention regime operates effectively, both qualitatively and quantitatively; and staff and clients understand the purpose of jobseeker's agreements and use them effectively.

Remploy

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what targets Remploy has been set in its 1997–98 annual performance agreement. [21390]

Mr. Paice: My noble friend the Minister of State has written to the chairman of Remploy approving the 1997–98 annual performance agreement between the Department and the company. This agreement covers the year from 1 April 1997. It has been negotiated by the chief executive of the Employment Service on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment. The targets are:

the average number of disabled people employed by Remploy Ltd. will be at least 9,800;

the average number of disabled people employed under the Interwork scheme will be at least 3,000;

at least 200 disabled employees will move from Remploy factories to Interwork, having been employed there for at least one year, or from Interwork or factories to open employment;

Remploy Ltd. will keep within a total unit cost target (operating deficit per disabled worker) of £10,000;

the unit of cost of Interwork should be no more than £4,400;

Remploy Ltd. will keep within an operating deficit of £99 million (including reorganisation costs).

The text of the annual performance agreement has been placed in the Library.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was spent in each year from 1990 to 1996 on the teachers' early retirement scheme in respect of retirements on grounds of ill-health; and what was the number of (a) male and (b) female teachers covered in each year, broken down in respect of (i) class teachers and (ii) head teachers in (1) England and (2) Wales. [15157]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 10 February 1997]: The estimated expenditure on ill-health retirements and the number of male and female teachers by grade and sector is shown in the table. These are all teachers who were in receipt of ill-health pensions in the year in question.

	Estimated total expenditure on ill-health retirements	Maintained schools sector

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer of 12 March, Official Report, columns 346–47, what was the role of Professor Caddy in relation to evaluating evidence concerning the crash of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie. [20605]

Dr. Liam Fox: In 1996, Professor Caddy conducted an independent scientific review of forensic analysis cases carried out at the Forensic Explosives Laboratory—formerly the Royal Armaments Research and Development Establishment—which might have been affected as a result of the contamination of a centrifuge with a high explosive, RDX. The forensic analysis of Lockerbie evidence was carried out at this laboratory. Professor Caddy's report stated

"it can only be concluded that the results from all cases remain a true measure of the presence of the explosive RDX".

This statement covered the Lockerbie case.

Government Communications Headquarters

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to announce a decision on the options presented in the consultants' review of future needs of GCHQ; and if he will make a statement. [20632]

Mr. Rifkind: The study into GCHQ's future accommodation needs, and how they will be met, is being conducted by an in-house team of civil servants with professional advisers. The outcome will be presented to the director of GCHQ this spring. If it is concluded that the private finance initiative is likely to offer a viable solution, Ministers will be consulted and an announcement made as soon as possible thereafter.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of GCHQ. [20627]

Mr. Rifkind: GCHQ has had to adapt quickly to the world's changes, but the need for good intelligence to guide policy making, crisis management and military operations remains as strong as ever. GCHQ will continue to make a major contribution to the nation's security well into the next century.

Mr. Jones: To ask the secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the terms of reference for the consultants' review of future needs of GCHQ; and if he will make a statement. [20630]

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 17 January 1997, column 424.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to publish the findings of the consultants' review of future requirements of GCHQ; and if he will make a statement. [20629]

Mr. Rifkind: Any advice that GCHQ has received from the professional advisers engaged for this study will include privileged or confidential information which, if disclosed, might affect GCHQ's legal or commercial position, or those of third parties. I do not therefore propose to publish this information.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis the contract to carry out a review of future needs of GCHQ was tendered; how many bids were made; what criteria were used to decide the successful bidder; what was the cost of the review; and if he will make a statement. [20631]

Mr. Rifkind: The review is being conducted internally by GCHQ; a number of external advisers are involved but GCHQ maintains control of the study. The advisers' contracts were tendered and awarded in accordance with standard public sector procurement practice in order to ensure value for money in the delivery of these services. It is not Government policy to provide details of the expenditure of the intelligence and security agencies.

Family Reunion Applications

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the current number of family reunion applications from nationals at British missions in (a) Kenya, (b) Ethiopia, (c) Eritrea, (d) Egypt and (e) elsewhere at the latest date for which information is available. [20928]

Dr. Liam Fox: The number of family reunion applications at the British embassy in Addis Ababa from Somali nationals in 1996 was 603. The number of family reunion applications from nationals of other countries, or of applications at other British missions is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20904]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the following table:

Publish	Annual reports	Annual accounts	Minutes of meetings	Agendas of meetings	Register of members interests

Entry Clearance Fees (Bangladesh)

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of fees charged in pounds sterling for applications for entry clearance in Bangladesh; what was the level of fees charged on (a) 1 January 1996 and (b) 1 January 1994; and if he will make a statement. [20428]

Dr. Liam Fox: Entry clearance fees are set in sterling at rates which apply worldwide. The fees which applied on the dates in question can be found in the Consular Fees Order 1989 No. 152 (as amended), the Consular Fees Order 1995 No. 1617 and the Consular Fees Order 1996 No. 1915. Copies are available in the Libraries of the House.

Somali Nationals

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications have been received at British missions from Somali nationals seeking family reunion in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years. [20929]

Dr. Liam Fox: The number of family reunion applications at the British embassy in Addis Ababa from Somali nationals in 1996 was 603. Neither figures for previous years nor applications from Somali nationals at missions in other countries are held centrally. They could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

Thomas Hamilton

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister when Ministers were informed that Thomas Hamilton of Dunblane was a police informer. [20656]

The Prime Minister: Lord Cullen's inquiry looked very closely into Thomas Hamilton's background and his relationship with the police and no information came to light to suggest that he had ever been a police informant. Inquiries of the four forces in whose area Thomas Hamilton ran boys' clubs and of the Scottish crime squad have confirmed this.

Organophosphates

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy that organophosphates will not in future be used to protect British troops. [20336]

The Prime Minister [answer 18 March 1997]: The Ministry of Defence aims to provide the best available means to protect its military personnel, including, where appropriate, the use of pesticides for environmental health purposes. I am advised that pesticides in the services' inventory are kept under review to ensure that appropriate products are available for use in a variety of situations. Some organophosphate pesticides will continue to be included in the inventory as long as these are judged to provide the best available protection in particular areas of actual or potential deployment.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister in how many cases in the past 12 months he was advised that the cost of answering a parliamentary question would exceed £450; and in how many of those cases he declined to provide an answer on grounds of disproportionate cost. [20651]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 March 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clywd) on 27 February, Official Report, column 320.

Parliamentary Delegations

Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister what changes there are in the composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe and the Assembly of the Western European Union. [21454]

The Prime Minister: Following the recent death of Martin Redmond, who served as a member of the United Kingdom delegation in the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe and the Assembly of Western European Union from 1987, the hon. Member for Leigh (Mr. Cunliffe) has been appointed as a representative in place of Mr. Redmond and the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) has been appointed as a substitute.

TRANSPORT

Worcester Transport Package

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide guidance to Hereford and Worcester county council on the steps it needs to take to demonstrate that it has consulted local people in respect of its next package bid for Worcester; and if he will make a statement. [20808]

Mr. Watts: If Hereford and Worcester county council needs guidance on any aspect of developing the transport package for Worcester, including the adequacy of its public consultation arrangements, they should consult officials at the Government office for the west midlands or my Department.

Croydon Tramlink

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the passenger forecasts for Croydon tramlink. [21049]

Mr. Bowis: This is a commercial matter for Tramtrack Croydon Ltd., the private sector consortium which has won the concession to build, operate and maintain Croydon tramlink.

Driving Test Centre, Aylesbury

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of the driving test centre in Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire. [21024]

Mr. Bowis: The lease for the present driving test centre in Aylesbury expires on 21 June 1997. The Driving Standards Agency is negotiating a short-term lease to remain at the centre until an alternative property, offering better facilities for candidates and examiners, can be found within the town.

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of future funding plans for the Jubilee line extension on the safety of the line. [21025]

Mr. Bowis: There has been no change in the position on safety, which remains the first priority for London. Underground Ltd. in all aspects of its undertaking, including the Jubilee line extension.

Road Traffic Accidents (Hemsworth)

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) fatal and (b) non-fatal road traffic accidents occurred in Hemsworth in (i) 1979, (ii) 1990 and (iii) 1996. [20720]

Mr. Bowis: Information is not readily available by parliamentary constituency. Information is available by local authority, and I list the figures for Wakefield metropolitan district council.

Accidents in Wakefield district by road class and severity

		Year of accident
Accident severity	1st road class	1979	1990	1995
Fatal	'A' road	15	7	6
	Other	17	16	8
	All roads	32	23	14
Serious injury		272	330	221
Slight injury		830	849	981
	All roads	1,102	1,179	1,202

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [20933]

Mr. Bowis: Following are the answers for each of the Department of Transport's executive NDPB's.

(a) The Traffic Director for London, the Trinity House Lighthouse Service (THLS) and the Northern Lighthouse Board (NLB).

(b) None.

(c) The Traffic Director for London, the London Regional Passengers' Committee (LRPC), THLS and NLB.

(d) None.

(e) The Traffic Director for London, THLS and NLB.

(f) The Traffic Director for London.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of the Rail Regulator publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this in each case is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20891]

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 19 July 1996, Official Report, Volume 281, column 682–83.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of the Rail Regulator which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [20936]

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 19 July 1996, Official Report, column 682.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20895]

Mr. Bowis: Following are the answers for each of the Department of Transport's executive NDPB's.

(a) The Traffic Director for London and the London Regional Passengers' Committee (LRPC), under statutory requirement. The Northern Lighthouse Board (NLB) and Trinity House Lighthouse Authority (THLB), as a consolidated report under statutory requirement.

(b) The Traffic Director for London, under statutory requirement and the LRPC, voluntarily. The NLB and THLB as a consolidated report, under statutory requirement.

(c) The LRPC, voluntarily.

(d) The LRPC, voluntarily.

(e) None.

M40

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the deterioration of the M40; and if he will make a statement. [20477]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 18 March]: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Dr. Kim Howells, dated 19 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about his assessment of the deterioration of the M40 motorway.

As you may be aware, a Design, Build, Finance and Operate (DBFO) contract under the Government's Private Finance Initiative has been awarded to UK Highways M40 Ltd for the operation and maintenance of the M40 from Junction 1 to Junction 15. The contract is 30 years and work began on 6 January 1997.

The age and type of construction of individual sections of the M40 vary considerably and hence there are significant variations in the residual life of both pavement and surfacing.

Prior to the DBFO contract the Agency's Agents responsible for maintaining the motorway undertook regular surveys of the structural and surface conditions of the road. They maintained the M40 in accordance with Highways Agency standards. All of the Agents records were made available to tenderers bidding for the DBFO contract. For the section between junctions 1A and 3 the contract requires that the road be widened from 3 lanes to 4 and this will inevitably necessitate substantial treatment of the existing carriageway.

Part of the route between junctions 6 and 8 is in need of major maintenance and the DBFO contract stipulates that the existing concrete carriageway shall be overlaid with "black top" during the course of this year.

The DBFO Contract requires that the contractor undertake routine inspections and structural assessments of the road and that they maintain the road to a high standard. This mechanism will ensure that the road will not deteriorate in the future as the penalty for failure to meet their obligations would be termination of the contract.

I am confident that the M40 is not deteriorating and that with the current contract a high standard of maintenance is assured for the next thirty years.

Vehicle Excise Discs

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assumptions the Treasury uses when calculating the cash flow loss to the Exchequer of being paid in two instalments for six-month vehicle excise discs as against the single instalment for a 12-month disc. [20908]

Mr. Bowis: The cash flow loss depends on the interest and inflation rates pertaining at any time. At the current Treasury discount rate of 6 per cent., and inflation of around 2.8 per cent., the loss on the private and light goods licence would be some £3.20 if the annual duty were paid in two six-monthly instalments.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (i) six-month and (ii) 12-month vehicle excise discs were issued for the last year in which figures are available. [20910]

Mr. Bowis: The number of licences issued against VED payments in the UK in 1995–96 was:

(i) 6 month: 20,342,490

(ii) 12 month: 17,933,098.

Mr. Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total administrative cost of issuing vehicle excise discs for the last year in which figures are available. [20909]

Mr. Bowis: The issue of vehicle excise discs is an integral part of the vehicle registration and licensing system. The total administrative cost in the UK in 1995–96 was some £128 million, excluding enforcement.

TREASURY

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the contracts awarded by his Department to (a) EDS, (b) Andersens, (c) EMI, (d) Capita and (e) Sema since 1992 and the broad function to be carried out by the contractor, and the value of the contract in each case. [17609]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury has awarded only two contracts to the contractors mentioned since 1992:

(a) EDS in December 1993, valued at £1,475.80 for the supply and installation of a memory board and

(d) Capita in March 1994, valued at £22,031.25 for a consultancy to review the personnel statistic division.

Coal Mining

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many persons employed in the coal mining industry had as their place of abode a location within (a) each travel-to-work area and (b) each local authority area in South Yorkshire in each of the last seven years; [17536]

(2) how many persons employed in the coal mining industry had their place of work within (a) each travel-to-work area and (b) each local authority area in South Yorkshire in each of the last seven years; [17595]

(3) what information he has collected since 1990 on the (a) place of residence and (b) place of work of persons employed in the coal mining industry. [17596]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 25 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Kevin Barron, dated 19 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent questions on information that has been collected since 1990 on persons employed in the coal mining industry in South Yorkshire.

Information by place of residence is not available at this level of detail. Estimates based on returns from employers, for place of work and travel-to-work area, are available biennially from 1989. The Statistics of Trade Act (1947) requires that I do not publish data which could reveal information about individual employers. The reduction in the number of businesses engaged in coal mining in South Yorkshire has caused me to treat most of the information you seek as confidential. Within the aforementioned restrictions I have supplied the available information in the attached table.

Duplicate NHS Numbers

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been spent, and what other contributions have been made, by the General Register Office and the Registrars of Births and Deaths towards the costs of correcting the problem of duplicate NHS numbers. [19102]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Kevin Barron, dated 19 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply to your recent question on how much has been spent by the General Register Office and the Registrars of births and deaths towards the costs of correcting the NHS duplicate number problem.

To date, the Office for National Statistics (incorporating the General Register Office) has spent £33,000 on discussions with the NHS Executive, analysis of problems causing duplicate NHS numbers for babies, and planning and programming software changes. Registrars of births and deaths have not spent money on correcting the NHS duplicate number problem.

In addition, advice and instruction have been given to Registrars during routine helpline work. This is provided as part of the General Register Office day-to-day support of the local registration service.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate what the unemployment level would have been for the United Kingdom if inactive jobseekers were included in the totals in each year from 1992 to the present; [20097]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of unemployed people in the United Kingdom who were not active in their search for employment but wished to be employed, in each year from 1992 to the present. [20096]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 19 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent questions on time series of the numbers of people unemployed, inactive job seekers and people who were not active in their search for employment but wished to be employed.

Estimates available from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) are shown in the attached table. The LFS uses the widely accepted International Labour Office (ILO) definition of unemployment. The ILO measure covers people who were available to start work in the two weeks following their LFS interview and who had either looked for work in the four weeks prior to interview of were waiting to start a job they had already obtained.

People who would like a job, but have not sought one in the last four weeks, or have looked for work but are not available to start in the next two weeks are not unemployed according to the ILO definition. However, the ONS appreciates that there is a lot of interest in these groups. We regularly publish information about the numbers and characteristics of these people in the LFS Quarterly Bulletin. For example, table 31 in Quarterly Bulletin Number 18, published in December 1996 shows that 6 per cent of those in Great Britain who wanted a job, but were not seeking one were "discouraged workers" (i.e. they were not looking for work because they believed no jobs were available).

Detailed analyses of any aspect of the LFS, including the groups you have asked about, are possible via the publicly accessible LFS database.

The Labour Force Survey Quarterly Bulletin is available in the House of Commons Library. The LFS database can also be accessed via the House of Commons Library.

People who are ILO unemployed or are economically inactive and would like a job

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees work in a workplace which employs fewer than 10 people in the Hemsworth constituency. [20725]

Mrs. Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Jon Trickett, dated 19 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on how many employees work in a workplace which employs fewer than 10 people in the Hemsworth constituency.

Information is available from the Annual Employment Survey on workplace units employing between 1 and 10 employees (inclusive). At September 1995 there were 3,,300 employees working at such workplaces in the Hemsworth parliamentary constituency.

Basic Pension Plus

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the change in the amount of tax which people on (1) (a) a quarter, (b) a half and (c) three quarters of average earnings and (2) average earnings can expect to pay (i) over their working life and (ii) over their lifetime under the proposed tax regime of the Government's basic pension plus proposal, relative to the existing tax regime. [20435]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The precise details of the scheme will be decided in the light of full consultation on the Green Paper. Estimates of the amount of tax paid by people over their working life and entire lifetime would also depend on the exact nature of changes in the tax regime, work patterns and life expectancy. Broadly speaking, over a lifetime, the two different tax treatments are equivalent from the saver's point of view—apart from the treatment of the lump sum—as long as the person's marginal rates of tax are the same in work and in retirement.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the level in 2040 of the single and married person's tax allowances for those over the age of 65 years if these allowances are uprated in line with (a) prices and (b) earnings; and what proportion of average earnings this would represent. [20433]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 March 1997]: Allowances at 1996–97 prices and the proportion of average earnings these represent are in the tables.

Income tax allowances (£) in 2040–41

UK Overseas Investments

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of United Kingdom overseas investments are in (a) Germany, (b) the European Union, (c) the United States of America, and (d) the rest of the world. [20686]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Andrew Hunter, dated 19 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the overseas investment.

The figures requested are shown in the table below. They are based on flows and stock of direct investment overseas i.e. where the United Kingdom company has a significant and lasting interest in an enterprise operating overseas. No information is available centrally regarding the geographical breakdown of portfolio investment overseas.

Office for National Statistics

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has agreed the business plan for the Office for National Statistics for the period 1997–2000. [21421]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Yes. Copies of the plan, giving details of the performance targets I have set for 1997–98, have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Authorities (Restitution)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to implement the recommendations in the Law Commission report "Restitution: Mistakes of Law and Ultra Vires Public Authority Receipts and Payments" (Law Com. No. 227). [21456]

Mr. Streeter: The Government have given careful consideration to the report, which makes recommendations falling under two quite separate heads. The Government have accepted the Law Commission's recommendations for general legislation on the restitution of benefits conferred under a mistake of law and will introduce legislation implementing those recommendations when a suitable opportunity arises. The further recommendations, relating to ultra vires receipts by public authorities, raise other issues, which we are now considering.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open Government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [20939]

Mr. Streeter: The Lord Chancellor's Department sponsors two such bodies: the Legal Aid Board and the Authorised Conveyancing Practitioners Board. However, the latter has been inactive since March 1992 when the Lord Chancellor announced his decision to postpone implementation of the authorised practitioners scheme.

The Legal Aid Board is subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, scrutiny by the National Audit Office, statutory provisions for open government, performance indicators and provisions under the citizens charter. It is not subject to scrutiny by the Audit Commission.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members's interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20892]

Mr. Streeter: The Lord Chancellor's Department sponsors two such bodies: the Legal Aid Board and the Authorised Conveyancing Practitioners Board. However, the latter has been inactive since March 1992 when the Lord Chancellor announced his decision to postpone implementation of the authorised practitioners scheme.

The Legal Aid Board publishes annual reports which are laid before Parliament. Annual accounts are included in that report, as is information about the background of board members. The board does not publish the agendas or minutes of meetings of the board or its committees. There are statutory requirements for the board to publish information as to the discharge of its functions in relation to legal aid and for the Lord Chancellor to lay before each House of Parliament a copy of every statement of accounts and report of the auditors sent to him in accordance with requirements under the Legal Aid Act 1988.

Office for the Supervision of Solicitors

Mr. Amess: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department who arbitrates in instances where the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors is unable to agree with the Legal Services Ombudsman in respect of complaints dealt with by both bodies. [20849]

Mr. Streeter: There is no provision for arbitration in such cases. However, the Legal Services Ombudsman has confirmed that, in practice, the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors complies with all his recommendations to pay compensation to a compliant. In cases where the ombudsman recommends that a compliant be reconsidered, recommendations will have been complied with once the Office has formally reconsidered the complaint. The ombudsman cannot direct the office to arrive at a particular decision.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) if he will make a statement on the composition of the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors; [20850]

(2) what criteria the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors employs in determining complaints referred to it; how many complaints it has received to date; how many complaints have been referred to the Legal Services Ombudsman; and in respect of how many of these the ombudsman has found in favour of the plaintiff. [20852]

Mr. Streeter: The composition of the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors and the handling of complaints are matters for the Law Society and the office.

During 1996, the Legal Services Ombudsman reported on 1,282 cases dealt with by the office and its predecessor, the Solicitors Complaints Bureau. In 389—30 per cent.— of those reports, there was a finding favourable to the complainant in that the ombudsman made a recommendation in their favour or recorded a formal criticism of the professional bodies handling of the original complaint.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Hygiene

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to implement the recommendations of the hygiene advisory teams report by William Swann; what was the total cost of producing this report; and to which industry bodies it was circulated. [19662]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 11 March 1997]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statements made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 6 March 1997, Official Report, columns 1023–35, and 12 March 1997, Official Report, columns 372–85. The review was carried out by the hygiene advice teams, made up of one official veterinary surgeon and one meat hygiene inspector. It involved visits to all licensed plants, producing a written report and agreeing an action programme for each plant. A summary report was produced. The total cost was £436,000.

The final report was made available at the meeting of the Meat Hygiene Service industry forum held on 5 August 1996. Representatives of the following industry bodies were present:

British Meat Manufacturers Association
British Pig Association
British Poultry Meat Federation
Farmers Union of Wales
Federation of Fresh Meat Wholesalers
International Meat Traders Association
National Farmers Union
National Federation of Meat and Food Traders
Scottish Association of Meat Wholesalers
Scottish Federation of Meat Traders Association.

Cattle Feed

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date avoparcin was first licensed for use in the feed of beef cattle over three months old; what were the Swann committee recommendations relating to feed antibiotics in calves (a) under three months and (b) over three months of age; on what date the Swann committee recommendations were first made; what factors determined the degree of consideration given by the Veterinary Products Committee to Swann committee recommendations prior to the issuing of a licence for cattle over three months old; and if he will make a statement. [20658]

Mrs. Browning: Avoparcin was first licensed for beef cattle over three months old on 20 July 1976.

A copy of the Swann committee's report is in the Library of the House. It is entitled: "Report of the Joint Committee on the use of Antibiotics in Animal Husbandry and Veterinary Medicine" and was published in November 1969. At that time the feeding of antibiotics, without prescription, was permitted only for pigs and poultry. About the use of antibiotics in calves, the report said:

"We recommend that 'feed' antibiotics conforming to paragraph 9.11 should be available without prescription for calves up to 3 months of age".

The report made no recommendation for calves over three months of age.

The Veterinary Products Committee always takes account of the principles of the Swann committee's report when it considers the statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy, in considering applications for marketing authorisations for antibiotics.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement of (ii) voluntary. [20901]

Mr. Boswell: The annual reports and accounts of the following executive non-departmental public bodies, for which my right hon. and learned Friend is responsible, are published:

Apple and Pear Research Council
Food from Britain
Home-Grown Cereals Authority
Wine Standards Board of the Vintners' Company
Horticultural Development Council
Horticulture Research International
Meat and Livestock Commission
Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew
Sea Fish Industry Authority
Milk Development Council.

Legislation requires, in each case, that the annual report and accounts are published. Minutes and agendas of executive non-departmental bodies' meetings are not published. There is no statutory requirement to do so.

The MAFF executive non-departmental public bodies will state in their individual codes of best practice for board members, which are currently being adopted, that registers of members' interests will be made available to the public. There is no statutory requirement to publish registers of members' interests.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [20944]

Mr. Boswell: The information required on executive non-departmental public bodies is as follows:

SUBJECT TO:

(a) Investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner

Agricultural Wages Committees

(b) Scrutiny by the Audit Commission

None

(c) Scrutiny by the National Audit Office

Wine Standards Board of the Vintners' Company
Agricultural Wages Committees
Agricultural Wages Board
Regional Flood Defence Committees
Food from Britain
Sea Fish Industry Authority
Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew
Horticulture Research International
UK Register of Organic Foods
Milk Development Council

National Audit Office access rights to the other bodies are as follows:

Home-Grown Cereals Authority (in respect of publicly voted money)
Meat and Livestock Commission (in respect of agency work
Horticultural Development Council arrangements are being finalised
Apple and Pear Research Council arrangements are being finalised

(d) Statutory provisions for open government

Access to government information is set out in a code of practice which the bodies are currently adopting. There are no statutory provisions for open government.

(e) Performance Indicators

Wine Standards Board of the Vintners' Company
Home-Grown Cereals Authority
Food from Britain
Sea Fish Industry Authority
Meat and Livestock Commission
Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew
Horticulture Research International
Agricultural Wages Committees
UK Register of Organic Foods
Horticultural Development Council
Milk Development Council
Apple and Pear Research Council (details are being finalised)

(f) Provisions under Citizen's Charter

To date, the Home-Grown Cereals Authority, the Meat and Livestock Commission and the Sea Fish Industry Authority have all published citizens charter standards of service.

Animal Protection

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to support the proposal by the German Government that article 3 of the EC treaty should be amended to include among the activities of the Community a contribution to the improvement of animal protection; and if he will make a statement. [20946]

Mrs. Browning: At the intergovernmental conference, we have made clear our view that there should be a formal, legal obligation on the Community to take account of the welfare requirements of animals in specific areas such as agriculture and transport. The draft protocol that we tabled last July would achieve this aim. Germany has made a slightly different proposal, which also recognises the Community's role in improving animal welfare, but is more generalised in its scope. We believe that the more specific approach we have proposed is more likely to lead to the result we seek and is therefore the better of the options.

Flood Alleviation

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the estimated cost of the Maidenhead, Windsor and Eton flood alleviation scheme at the time that the plans were first put out for public consultation; and what is the current estimated cost of the scheme. [20947]

Mr. Boswell: Following the local public inquiry held in 1992, the cost of the Maidenhead, Windsor and Eton flood alleviation scheme was estimated to be £73.4 million—on a fixed price basis. The Environment Agency's current estimate is some £83 million, which includes nearly £9 million for projected inflation. The costs will be partially offset by income from the sale of sand and gravel excavated from the flood relief channel.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of households that will be protected by the Maidenhead, Windsor and Eton flood alleviation scheme, once it has been completed. [20949]

Mr. Boswell: The Maidenhead, Windsor and Eton flood alleviation scheme is designed to provide protection from a one in 65 year flood event for 12,500 people, 4,800 domestic properties and 700 commercial buildings locally. In addition, the presence of the scheme will help to prevent disruption of roads and railways and the loss of communications systems and public utilities over a much wider area.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated completion date for (a) the Maidenhead, Windsor and Eton flood alleviation scheme and (b) the subsequent landscaping. [20948]

Mr. Boswell: Work on the Maidenhead, Windsor and Eton flood alleviation scheme is expected to be finalised before the end of 2001, and the main flood relief channel should be completed by the end of 2000. Landscaping is being carried out in parallel with the construction works and should be finished within the same, overall time scale.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration has been given in the plans for the Maidenhead, Windsor and Eton flood alleviation scheme, to the effects of the lowering of the water table, lower average rainfall, and climate change on the likelihood of flooding in the area, and the volume of water which will flow though the new channel. [20950]

Mr. Boswell: These aspects have been fully considered by the Environment Agency during scheme design. The existence of the flood relief channel will have no measurable impact on groundwater levels. While there has been a trend towards lower average rainfall in southern England in recent years, studies related to global climate change suggest that there could be an increase in the frequency and severity of extreme events, the type of event against which this scheme is intended to provide protection. It is too early to quantify any such changes, but clearly it would be imprudent to design a scheme for anything less than the flood conditions experienced in the past 50 years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Science Base

17. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received from British industry on the funding of the United Kingdom science base. [19457]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have regular meetings with different sections of British industry to discuss its involvement with our excellent science and engineering base, the funding for which has increased by over 10 per cent. in the past decade.

Investment

18. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the latest figures for the flows of inward and outward investment to and from the United Kingdom. [19458]

Mr. Lang: Inward investment into the United Kingdom amounted to £19 billion in 1995, a threefold increase on 1994. Outwards flows totalled nearly £24 billion as United Kingdom firms continued to build on their position in international markets.

23. Mr. Luff: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the relative importance of each of the factors taken into account by potential inward investors when selecting a country for investment; and if he will make a statement. [19465]

Mr. Lang: Inward investors locate in the United Kingdom for a variety of reasons that are unique to each company. Some of the reasons most regularly given by investors include our low corporation tax, low cost of production, established enterprise culture, a skilled and adaptable work force and our established industrial infrastructure.

33. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which EU countries have invested more per employed person than the United Kingdom in the period since 1979. [19477]

Mr. Greg Knight: Since 1979 business investment in the United Kingdom has accounted for a greater proportion of gross domestic product than in France, Germany and Italy.

Trade Deficit

20. Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's overall deficit on total trade in goods in the years (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995. [19462]

Mr. Nelson: In each year since 1994 the deficit in trade in goods has been just over 1.5 per cent. of gross domestic product, down from 2 per cent. in 1993. Between 1974 and 1978 the deficit averaged 3 per cent. of gross domestic product.

31. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's overall deficit on trade in goods for the years 1993, 1994 and 1995. [19475]

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) earlier today.

32. Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's overall deficit on trade in goods in recent years. [19476]

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) earlier today.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the deficit in trade in goods in (a) 1995 and (b) 1996. [19461]

Mr. Nelson: The deficit in trade in goods in both 1995 and 1996 was 1.7 per cent. of gross domestic product. Overall, the balance of payments current account is close to balance and at its strongest for a decade.

Trade Balance (Electrical Products)

22. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's balance of trade with EU countries, with special reference to heavy electrical products. [19464]

Mr. Nelson: British exports of goods to the EU doubled between 1988 and 1995. During the same period exports of heavy electrical products rose by 116 per cent.

Exports (European Union)

25. Mr. Dykes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will commission a study into the change in the level and categories of United Kingdom-manufactured and semi-manufactured exports to other EU countries since the single market commenced. [19467]

Mr. Nelson: Figures for these exports are already available. They show that since the single market commenced in 1993, the value of UK exports of finished manufacturers to the EU has risen by 47 per cent. and of semi-manufactures by 27 per cent.

Synex Ltd.

26. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the decision of the South West industrial development board not to award a regional selective assistance grant to Synex Ltd. in July 1995. [19469]

Mr. Greg Knight: The role of regional industrial development boards, such as the SWIDB, is to provide independent advice on applications for RSA. The decision whether or not to award a grant rests solely with the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, who in the south-west is represented by officials at the Government office for the south-west. Each application for regional selective assistance is determined on its merits against the common criteria for the scheme. The project as presented to GOSW was judged not to have satisfied the criteria and therefore the GOSW properly decided in May 1995 not to award a grant to Synex. This decision was confirmed in July 1995 following an appeal by the applicant.

Inward Investment

27. Mr. Atkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the main reasons cited to his Department by inward investors for locating in Britain. [19471]

Mr. Greg Knight: I refer to the reply previously given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the number of jobs created through inward investment by overseas companies in (a) North Yorkshire, (b) west Yorkshire and (c) the north of England during the last five years. [20684]

Mr. Knight: We expect 11,671 new jobs to arise from inward investment projects in the north of England notified to the Invest In Britain Bureau where decisions were taken during the financial year 1995–96. These figures are a combination of returns from north-east England, north-west England and Yorkshire and the Humber.

The Yorkshire and Humberside development agency has estimated that the number of jobs created through inward investment was 80 in north Yorkshire and 1,619 in west Yorkshire.

Semi-conductor Industry

28. Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to provide further assistance to the British semi-conductor industry. [19472]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government are already providing assistance to the British semi-conductor industry. It is supporting the National Microelectronics Institute under the information society initiative programme for business. The institute, a partnership between the industry and Government, aims to promote the growth of the microelectronics industry in the UK, in particular by stimulating the manufacture of semi-conductors in the UK. Another part of the information society initiative, the microelectronics in business programme, introduces UK companies to semi-conductor technology, and encourages best practice in its use in products. In addition, a number of individual semi-conductor manufacturers, and their suppliers, have received assistance in respect of new investment.

Human Genetics Advisory Commission

29. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the work of the Human Genetics Advisory Commission. [19473]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Human Genetics Advisory Commission held its first meeting on 27 February, where it discussed its work plan and agreed initial priorities. Members identified the implications of genetic testing for insurance as an immediate priority and the chairman has written to his counterpart in the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority to confirm the adequacy of the existing law on human cloning. The HGAC also confirmed its commitment to listening and making itself open to wider public views on the issues at stake. I refer the hon. Member to the advisory commission's press statement on 27 February and to my statements of 27 February and 10 March on the implications of the cloning of an adult sheep at the Roslin Institute. Copies of all three have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

35. Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the work of the Human Genetics Advisory Commission. [19479]

Mr. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Midlothian (Mr. Clarke) earlier today.

Export Trade

30. Mr. Turner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the impact of the rise in the value of the pound upon the United Kingdom export trade; and if he will make a statement. [19474]

Mr. Nelson: Exports are still expanding despite the rise in the value of the pound. Export volumes grew at an annualised rate of 7 per cent. during the final quarter of 1996 and manufacturers expect orders and deliveries to continue to grow.

UK Trade

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has made to representations from the Confederation of British Industry regarding the relative strength of the United Kingdom's trading position in Europe. [19463]

Mr. Nelson: The UK's trade with Europe has climbed to record levels. At a recent meeting with my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, the CBI welcomed the very low level of output price inflation that was contributing to this performance.

Social Chapter

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what legislation under the social chapter is currently being (a) prepared and (b) considered; and if he will make a statement. [19466]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Issues under discussion include rights for part-time and temporary workers, information and consultation at national level and the reversal of the burden of proof in sex discrimination cases. The Commission is considering future action in many other areas, including individual dismissals and sick pay. All these measures would be likely to impose damaging, job-destroying burdens on business if we gave up our opt-out from the social chapter.

Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations he has received on his recent publication, "Privatisation". [19478]

Mr. Lang: My Department has received numerous requests, principally from delegates to the conference and from UK diplomatic posts overseas, for additional copies of the booklet "Privatisation: Setting Enterprise Free".

The publication has also prompted six written parliamentary questions. Five of these have been from the hon. Member. The sixth was tabled by the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson).

Computers (Millennium)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment has been made by the World Trade Organisation of infrastructure risk to computer systems of millennium compliance; what plans he has to pursue the issue; and if he will make a statement. [20188]

Mr. Ian Taylor: There has been no assessment to date by the World Trade Organisation of this issue. The Government are very aware of the significance of the problem and its implications for world trade and have been working hard to address it within the UK and the European Union. We are looking at how best to bring the issue to international attention in close consultation with UK industry. We have suggested to the Commission that the matter should be raised with the ISO.

Coal Mine Closure Programme

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the impact of the coal mine closure programme on related industries. [19459]

Mr. Page: The hon. Member may recall that the Employment Select Committee published a report in January 1993 which, among other things, considered the consequences of British Coal's proposed pit closures for related industries. The Government provided a full response to that report.

Small Companies (Audit Exemptions)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the results of the recent consultation on proposed amendments to the small companies audit exemptions; and what actions he plans to take. [21459]

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to announce that all three of our deregulatory proposals were endorsed by the public consultation, and I propose to implement them at once, in order to bring the benefits to small companies as soon as possible.

Our main proposal, to raise the audit exemption threshold to £350,000 annual turnover and so to abolish the statutory requirement for the "audit exemption report" which has been required since 1994 in the turnover band from £90,000 to £350,000, was supported by two thirds of the 272 respondents to the consultation.

This change will bring the deregulatory benefits of total audit exemption to an estimated further 200,000 small companies.

The current arrangements will be retained for those charities which have chosen to incorporate, pending an early consultation on options for harmonisation of the financial reporting requirements under charities legislation on the one hand and companies legislation on the other.

The two technical amendments on which we also sought views, relating to the treatment of companies which form part of groups and of dormant companies, enjoyed the overwhelming support of respondents. Companies which form part of groups will not be required to file audited individual accounts, provided that they are not otherwise excluded and that the turnover of the group does not exceed the threshold. The regulations clarify that dormant companies are automatically entitled to audit exemption on the same terms as qualifying non-dormant companies.

A summary of the responses to the consultation will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Public Encryption Services

Mr. Lidington : To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to issue a public consultation document on the Government's proposals on the provision of public encryption services. [21461]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I am pleased to announce that, further to my reply to the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) on 10 June 1996, Official Report, columns 13–14, I am today publishing a consultation paper outlining the Government's detailed policy proposals for the licensing of trusted third parties (TTPs) for the provision of encryption services. The proposals involve licensing TTPs who offer encryption services to the public in order to facilitate the development of electronic commerce; to protect consumers; and to preserve the ability of the intelligence and law enforcement agencies to fight serious crime and terrorism, and protect economic well-being and national security, by requiring disclosure of encryption keys under safeguards similar to those which already exist for warranted interception.

This initiative is part of the Government's overall policy on promoting electronic commerce for the benefit of both business and the public. It forms an integral part of the Government's strategy for building the information society in the UK—the information society initiative.

The consultation paper seeks comments from industry and the public on the broad outline of the proposed legislation. Copies are available in the Library of the both Houses. I expect to make a further statement on the future direction of the Government's proposals once the outcome of the consultation exercise is known.

Telecommunications

Mr. Lidington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has received a report by the Director General of Telecommunications for the year 1996, under section 55 of the Telecommunications Act 1984. [21458]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Yes. The 13th report by the Director General of Telecommunications is being published today. it covers the period 1 January to 31 December 1996. Copies of the report have been laid before each House of Parliament and placed in the Libraries.

Channel 5

Mr. Lidington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the international clearance of frequency 35 for use by Channel 5. [21455]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Frequency channel 35 will be used from nine major transmission sites and, because of the potential of such transmissions to create interference problems with neighbouring countries, it is necessary to co-ordinate their use with other countries. The Radiocommunications Agency has obtained agreement to transmission from five of the sites—Fenton, Sudbury, the Wrekin, Hannington, and Ridge Hill. It is anticipated that the outstanding issues concerning the other sites—Kilvey Hill, Waltham, Bilsdale and Darvel—will be resolved by the end of April.

According to Channel 5 Broadcasting, the use of frequency channel 35 could mean that an extra 4 million people will be able to receive the service, increasing coverage to over 80 per cent. of the population. The Government announced on 16 September 1996 that Channel 5 will have access to this frequency for a period of five years. Towards the end of this period, the Government will review the position on the development of the market for advance digital services and will make a judgment whether, and if so for what period of time, Channel 5 may continue to use the channel. In due course, the channel will be redeployed to facilitate the new digital broadcasting opportunities. We have agreed with Channel 5 that it is responsible for developing a sensible transition plan to enable the channel to be retrieved and for warning those customers affected that they may need to migrate in due course to alternative delivery mechanisms such as cable, satellite or digital terrestrial television.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 24 February, Official Report, columns 59–60, on overseas investment, if he will list for each percentage the value of outward direct investment at 1995 prices. [20047]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 March 1997]: The value of UK direct investment to the European Union, the United States and the rest of the world, in current prices, is given in the table. Information in constant prices is not available.

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting, publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19383]

Mr. John M. Taylor: For the agencies, responsibility for expenditure in this area lies with the chief executives. I have asked them to reply direct.

Two service providers in the main Department have citizens charter commitments. These are the redundancy payments service, which has a charter, and the overseas trade services, which has a charter standard statement.

For the RPS, approximately 1.6 million charter leaflets were produced between 1991 and 1996 at a cost of around £37,000. This figure does not include drafting and distribution costs which are not separately identifiable.

OTS has included its charter standard statement in a number of publications including "A guide to export services". Around 80,000 copies of this document were issued in 1996. Costs for the charter standard statement are not separately identifiable in the costs of producing and distributing these publications. Figures are not available for the cost of drafting the charter standard statement.

Letter from Dr. Seton Bennett to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 19 March 1997:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question about expenditure associated with the production of customer charters and Customer Standard documents.

One thousand copies of NWML's Code of Practice were printed at a cost of £870 in December 1993. This figure does not include the costs of drafting and distribution, which are not separately identifiable.

Letter from J. C. Octon to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 19 March 1997:

In the absence of the Chief Executive I am replying for the Patent Office to your Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade about the cost of publishing and circulating customer charters and customer standard documents.

The Patent Office produces a single leaflet which serves as its charter statement and customer service standards. We have no estimate for staff time spent in drawing up and consulting over its content but during the past financial year 36,000 copies have been printed and circulated at a cost of £3,150. This includes the cost of printing 200 customer service standard posters for display within the office.

Letter from John S. Holden to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 19 March 1997:

You recently asked the President of the Board of Trade for information about expenditure related to customer charters and customer standard documents. As Chief Executive I have been asked to reply to you direct.

As an Agency responsible for aspects of law enforcement, we also publish a Code for Enforcement which is combined with our Charter Standard Statement as a single document. The costs about which you have asked, and which apply to the document as a whole, are as follows:

Drafting: £2,000 Approximately one man month

Publishing: £5,547

Circulation: £750 Approximately for postage costs incurred

Copies issued: 6,200.

Letter from Desmond Flynn to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 19 March 1997:

You asked the President of the Board of Trade a question about the Department of Trade and Industry expenditure in drafting, publishing and circulating each of their Customer Charters and Customer Standard documents: and how many copies of each document have been issued. I am replying in the absence of Peter Joyce, the Chief Executive, from the office.

The Insolvency Service first issued its Published Standard during the financial year 1992/93. Between February 1993 and November 1995 a total of 147,900 leaflets and 886 Published Standard posters and charts of performance against standard were produced at a total cost of £26,024. This included both design and print work.

The Published Standard was recently revised and a further 280,000 leaflets and 50 posters have been produced for use in the coming 12–18 months at a total cost of £7,967.

It is not possible to quantify the cost of drafting the revised Published Standard as this was work completed within The Service as part of normal staff duties. As regards distribution, the leaflets are made available to the public at the offices of Official Receivers and at the Courts.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 19 March 1997:

You have put down a Parliamentary Question asking for the cost of producing and issuing Charter Standard documents. I have been asked to reply direct to you on behalf of the Radiocommunications Agency.

My Agency produces a number of Citizen's Charter related information sheets for the benefit of our customers. These documents set out our Charter Standard principles, details of our performance against published standards, how to complain against Agency levels of service and a Code of Practice explaining the responsibilities of our Local Offices and how they work with businesses in enforcing wireless telegraphy legislation.

Our family of Charter leaflets were introduced during 1994, since when the total numbers and costs of printing and numbers issued are as follows:

RA Complaints Procedures (RA238): 4,000 have been ordered to date at a cost of £424.00, of these 3,695 have been distributed;

RA Performance Standards (RA239): 5,000 have been ordered to date at a cost of £1,400.00, of these 4,639 have been distributed;

RA Local Offices Code of Practices (RA248): 3,000 have been ordered at a cost of £500.00, of these 2,786 have been distributed;

RA Citizen's Charter Statement (RA251): 7,000 have been ordered at a cost of £1,083, of these 6,161 have been distributed.

It is impossible to say what the cost of circulating these documents has been. Many copies are given out at exhibitions which the Agency attends, distributed along with other documents requested by customers or in multiple numbers to interested parties. The drafting of the leaflets is all done in-house by staff who are involved in these duties in any event and it is again impossible to separate out these costs. With the exception of the Performance Standards leaflet (amended and reprinted annually), none of these documents has been changed since their introduction, nevertheless, drafting of the originals is estimated to have occupied around 5 man days of effort in total.

For your information I enclose copies of each of these leaflets, (RA239 is currently under review to cover our 1997/98 targets), which I hope will be of interest to you.

Structural and Cohesion Fund Receipts

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the projected net receipts under the combined structural and cohesion funds of the EC budget of (i) Spain, (ii) Portugal, (iii) Greece and (iv) Ireland, from 1997 to 1999, expressed as an average sum per day. [20048]

Mr. Greg Knight [holding answer 13 March 1997]: It is not possible to give figures for structural and cohesion funds receipts for the period 1997–99 by member state, since these will depend upon the rate of implementation of each of the member state's SCFs programmes. Forecasts of gross allocations by member state for the period 1994–99 are available, however. These are shown in the table, expressed as an average sum per day. These allocations will be partly offset by the contributions each member state makes to the total SCFs budget, but the size of these contributions, for 1997–99, will not be known until 1999.

HEALTH

Mental Health

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the expenditure on mental health services as a proportion of total NHS spending in each year since 1988–89. [18733]

Mr. Burns: Information in the form requested is not available. Hospital and community health services expenditure on mental health services from 1988–89 is shown in the table. HCHS expenditure increased in real terms by 0.5 per cent. between 1988–89 and 1990–91 and by 2.7 per cent. between 1991–92 and 1995–96. Local authority gross expenditure on mental health services increased in real terms by 220 per cent. from £79.1 million in 1988–89 to £339.1 million in 1994–95, the latest year for which figures are available.

Hospital and community health services mental health expenditure

	HCHS mental health expenditure 1995–96 prices £ million	HCHS mental health expenditure as a proportion of total HCHS expenditure Percentage
1988–89	2,140.8	12.50
1989–90	2,136.3	12.34
1990–91	2,125.2	12.07
1991–92	2,444.9	11,58
1992–93	2,523.3	11.56
1993–94	2,452.6	11.00
1994–95	2,437.2	10.69
1995–96	2,511.5	10.65

1. The 1995–96 figures are provisional.

2. The figures include expenditure on the purchase of the following services:

Hospital—Inpatient and outpatient expenditure—the consultant specialties of mental health, child and adolescent psychiatry, forensic psychiatry, psychotherapy and old age psychiatry. Day patient expenditure—in the categories mental health (alcoholism, drug abuse, psychogeriatrics and general), child and adolescent psychiatry and forensic psychiatry.

Community—Community mental health nursing.

3. Figures for 1991–92 onwards cannot be compared with those for earlier years due to changes in accounting practices following the NHS reforms.

Lung Cancer

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the average annual cost to the NHS for treating people suffering from (a) lung cancer and (b) mesothelioma over the last five years. [19377]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not held centrally.

Hospital Buildings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has the cost of maintaining redundant and empty hospital buildings in each region in the last year for which figures were available. [19416]

Mr. Horam: Estimated costs of maintaining redundant and empty hospital buildings for 1995–96 in each region are in the table.

Region	Cost £000s
Northern and Yorkshire	1,500
Trent	1,584
Anglia and Oxford	590
North Thames	1,800
South Thames	1,100
South and West	1,300
West Midlands	442
North West	1,500

GPs (Malpractice or Incompetence)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners (a) were accused by patients of malpractice or incompetence, (b) were disciplined following such accusations and (c) successfully appealed to industrial tribunals, in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [21021]

Mr. Malone: The hon. Member may wish to refer to "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for England, 1996 Edition" by the Department of Health, copies of which are available in the Library.

Psychiatric Readmissions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients aged 16 to 64 years have been readmitted to the care of a psychiatric specialist within 90 days of discharge in each of the last five years (a) nationally, (b) by regional health authority and (c) by health authority. [20120]

Mr. Burns: The information is not available centrally in the form requested. Information on the number of patients aged 16 to 64 who were readmitted as emergencies to the care of a psychiatric specialist within 90 days of previous discharge has been collected by health authorities since 1 April 1996. The first annual estimates for 1996–97 will be available later this year.

Carcinogens

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the 10 human carcinogens his Department assesses to be most dangerous, giving in each case estimates of the number of the (a) deaths and (b) illnesses they cause. [20024]

Mr. Horam: There are many types of human cancer and for most the causes are not fully understood. Genetic, behavioural and environmental factors all have a role, but it is difficult to accurately quantify the mortality and morbidity caused by each specific factor.

Smoking has been associated with lung cancer and several other cancer sites and has been shown to contribute to approximately 30 per cent. of all cancer deaths. Smoking is responsible for at least 80 per cent. of deaths from lung cancer which represents over 25,000 deaths per annum in England and Wales.

It has been estimated that geophysical factors, ultraviolet light and background ionising radiation, may account for about 3 per cent. of all cancer deaths. Of lung cancer deaths it is estimated that around 5 per cent., some 1,600 a year in England, might be partially attributed to exposure to radon.

The available medical and scientific data have also identified alcoholic beverages, life style factors, certain chemical processes and a number of individual chemicals that may pose a carcinogenic risk to humans. Readily available data do not enable the presentation of comprehensive, robust and comparable estimates of numbers of deaths or illnesses which can be attributed to each of these agents.

Health Service Administration

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the budget for hospital and community health services of (a) health authorities and (b) fundholding general practitioner practices was spent on administrative costs in the last year for which figures are available. [20045]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 13 March 1997]: The information requested, for 1995–96, is in the table:

£ millions

	District Health Authorities, Regional Health Authorities and Special Health Authorities	Fundholding GP practices (excluding preparatory year)
Hospital and Community Health Services expenditure	21,957	1,847
Health Authority Head Quarters administration	1,002	—
Management allowances allocated (Practice Fund Management Allowance)	—	90
Administration as percentage HCHS	4.6	4.9

1. Figures for HAs and GP fundholders are not directly comparable for a number of reasons. For example:

—GPFH management allowances support fund expenditure on drugs and staff, as well as on HCHS.

—HA HQ administration figures include expenditure on medical negligence, capital charges, grants to voluntary bodies and some healthcare services (e.g. health promotion).

—HA HQ administration is included within HA HCHS expenditure, whilst GPFH management allowances are not included within the HCHS expenditure of GPFHs.

2. All figures remain provisional. HCHS expenditure figures are sourced from summarised national accounts. The HQ administration figure is sourced from the annual accounts of health authorities. GPFH management allowances are as allocated to regional health authorities.

Mr Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the amount spent on NHS management and administration in each region in England in the last year for which figures are available. [20544]

Mr. Horam: For figures for 1995–96 trust management costs, I refer the hon. Member to the booklet "Health Authority Costs and Management Costs in NHS Trusts" which was published on 13 March 1997. Figures for health authority costs, by region, for 1995–96 are shown in the table.

1995–96 HA costs by region

Region	HA costs (£000s)
Anglia and Oxford	48,881
North Thames	78,553
North West	64,580
Northern and Yorkshire	64,280
South and West	63,720
South Thames	77,053
Trent	47,679
West Midlands	52,637
England	497,383

Figures are sourced from the annual accounts of district health authorities and family health services authorities, and remain provisional.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which member of the Committee on Safety of Medicines was paid to travel to the United Kingdom in 1995, as indicated in his answer of 25 April 1996 Official Report, column 281; what was the cost of the visit to public funds; and from where this individual travelled. [20484]

Mr. Malone: Proceedings of the committee are confidential, and this includes the identity of particular members attending particular meetings.

Alcoholic Soft Drinks

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions his Department has held with (a) the Portman Group, (b) other organisations representing the alcohol industry and (c) health organisations, on the marketing of alcoholic soft drinks; and if he will make a statement. [20870]

Mr. Burns: Officials have regular meetings with the Portman Group and health organisations. Alcoholic soft drinks are often discussed. We welcomed the industry's efforts to self-regulate through the Portman Group's code of practice for the packaging, marketing and sale of alcoholic drinks.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department intend to take to regulate the marketing of alcoholic soft drinks. [20925]

Mr. Burns: The Government share the concern expressed about the potential appeal of such drinks to young people. We believe the alcoholic drinks industry must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the public that it can regulate itself satisfactorily. We warmly welcome the Portman Group's code of practice for the packaging and marketing of these drinks. However, we will continue to monitor how the code works in practice.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to take action to restrict the sale to minors of kits which can convert soft drinks into alcoholic soft drinks. [20924]

Mr. Burns: These products are covered by the provisions of the food labelling regulations and must be clearly labelled so as not to mislead consumers about their nature. We are not convinced that restrictions on the sale of these kits to children is the right approach. Use of such kits involves a number of detailed processes which would in practice need to take place in the home. As with other potential risks of this sort, it is up to parents to exercise supervision over their children to avoid them getting into danger.

Hospital Waiting Lists (Wakefield)

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average length of hospital waiting lists for non-urgent operations in the Wakefield district in (a) 1979 and (b) 1996. [20721]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available. Waiting list information collected centrally does not distinguish between urgent and non-urgent cases.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging Scanner

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those NHS trusts which do not have an MRI scanner. [20757]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not held centrally.

Electricity Transmission Lines (Health Implications)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 March, Official Report, columns 102–4, concerning the incidence of cancer or other abnormalities in adults and children if he will (a) ensure that the two pilot studies relating to cancer incidence incorporate maps showing high tension power lines and the places of domicile and work of those affected and (b) consult the appropriate medical and health bodies concerning (i) the practicality and (ii) the desirability of mapping such transmission lines and the incidence of other abnormalities in their vicinity. [20153]

Mr. Horam: The two pilot studies will explore the feasibility of investigating the possible relationship between the incidence of cancers and residential distance from electricity transmission and distribution systems. Neither of these studies is designed to investigate other abnormalities. However, the National Radiological Protection Board's advisory group on non-ionising radiation reviews work related to possible effects of electromagnetic fields on human health. It has been principally concerned with the risk of cancer but also keeps under review possible effects on other diseases and abnormalities as well as on developmental effects in utero.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20905]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is in the table.

Name of body	Annual report	Annual accounts	Minutes of meetings	Agendas of meetings	Register of member's interests[1]
Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority	Yes (statutory)	Yes (statutory)	No	No	No
Central Council for Education and Training in Social Workers	Yes (voluntary)	Yes (voluntary	Yes (voluntary)	Yes (voluntary)	No
National Biological Standards Board	Yes (voluntary)	Yes (statutory)	No	No	No
National Radiological Protection Board	Yes (voluntary)	Yes (statutory)	No	No	No
Public Health Laboratory Service	Yes (voluntary)	Yes (statutory)	No	No	No
English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting	Yes (statutory)	Yes (statutory)	Yes (voluntary)	Yes (voluntary)	No
Medical Practices Committee	Yes (voluntary)	Yes (voluntary)	Yes (voluntary)	No	No

[1] From 1 June, all executive NDPBs will be required to make their registers of members' interests open to the public.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [20941]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 14 March 1996, at columns 754–56.

Silicone Implants

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 739, if he will assess the advantages of classifying silicone implants as human prostheses. [20978]

Mr. Horam: Implanted human prostheses, such as breast implants, come within the scope of the Medical Devices Regulations (SI 1994 No 3017). Under the regulations medical devices fall into four different risk categories which dictate the severity of controls that are applied before the device may be sold; implanted human prostheses such as silicone implants fall into the second highest category. This means that before a manufacturer can place his device on the market with a "Conformity European" marking of conformity under the regulations he must have his design and manufacturing process verified by an independent certification organisation to ensure that the devices produced meet the relevant essential requirements relating to safety, quality and performance.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale community health council in respect of the award of the contract by East Lancashire health authority for provision of drug misuse services; and if he will make a statement. [21010]

Mr. Horam: We have received four letters; two from the chairman of the CHC and two from hon. Members enclosing copies of the chairman's letter. A full response will be sent as soon as possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Irish Medium Courses

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what factors preclude the curriculum studies and the education studies modules of the Irish-medium BEd course from being taught entirely through the medium of Irish; and what measures (a) St. Mary's college, Belfast and (b) the Department of Education for Northern Ireland are taking to increase the amount of teaching through the medium of Irish. [19697]

Mr. Ancram: Students are equipped to teach in both Irish and English medium schools with St. Mary's college building on the skills of its existing staff to increase the amount of teaching through the medium of Irish. The extent of such teaching is a matter for the college to determine within the resources available.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the role of the Irish-medium development officer in relation to each of the stage 1 modules of the Irish-medium BEd course and the PGCE course at St. Mary's college, Belfast, with particular reference to staff at the college. [19692]

Mr. Ancram: It is to develop the BEd modules and the PGCE course for Irish medium education in liaison with the relevant college staff.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the stage 1 main subject modules of the Irish-medium BEd course at the St. Mary's college, Belfast were last redesigned. [19693]

Mr. Ancram: In 1996.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the new Irish-medium PGCE course at St. Mary's college, Belfast is designed to cater for the specific needs of Irish-medium schools; and for what reasons the whole course will not be taught entirely through the medium of Irish. [19696]

Mr. Ancram: The figure is 100 per cent.

Students are being equipped to teach in both Irish medium and English medium schools.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of each of the stage 1 modules of the new Irish-medium BED course at St. Mary's college, Belfast caters for the needs of Irish-medium schools; and if he will make a statement. [19698]

Mr. Ancram: The figure is 100 per cent. of each.

The course is being developed to provide teachers for Irish medium schools.

Examination Results

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of children (a) sat and (b) achieved a grade A to C in (i) one and (ii) two or more science GCSEs in 1996; and if he will make a statement. [19874]

Mr. Ancram: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of candidates entered for science GCSEs conducted by the Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment in 1996 and the proportion who achieved grades A*–C is as follows:

	Number entered	Percentage grades A–C*
Biology	2,526	87.9
Biology (Human)	193	48.7
Chemistry	2,471	89.5
Double Award (Modular)	3,994	66.7
Double Award (Non-modular)	5,379	92.4
Physics	2,460	88.0
Single Award (Modular)	5,624	34.1
Single Award (Non-modular)	1,117	59.4

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of children (a) sat and (b) achieved a grade A to C in (i) history, (ii) geography and (iii) Latin, in (1) GCSEs and (2) A-levels in 1996; and if he will make a statement. [19878]

Mr. Ancram: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of candidates entered for history, geography and Latin GCSEs and A-levels conducted by the Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment in 1996 and the proportion who achieved grades A* to C (GCSE) and grades A–C (A level) is as follows:

	Number entered	Percentage grades A–C*
GCSE
History	6,419	68.9
Geography	11,296	64.9
Latin	214	90.7
A level
History	2,166	65.6
Geography	2,296	58.7
Latin	46	78.3

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of children (a) sat and (b) achieved a grade A* to C in (i) one and (ii) two or more live foreign language GCSEs in 1996; and if he will make a statement. [19876]

Mr. Ancram: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of candidates entered for French, German, Irish, Italian, and Spanish GCSEs conducted by the Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment in 1996 and the proportion who achieved grades A* to C is as follows:

	Number entered	Percentage grades A–C*
French	9,842	62.3
German	993	75.9
Irish	2,213	59.3
Italian	178	62.4
Spanish	1,123	70.6

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of children (a) sat and (b) achieved a grade A to C in (i) one, (ii) two and (iii) three or more science A-levels in 1996; and if he will make a statement. [19875]

Mr. Ancram: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of candidates entered for science A-levels conducted by the Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment in 1996 and the proportion who achieved grades A to C is as follows:

	Number entered	Percentage grades A–C
Biology	1,427	57.7
Chemistry	1,534	65.7
Physics	1,262	59.2

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of children (a) sat and (b) achieved a grade A to C in (i) one, (ii) two and (iii) three or more live foreign language A-levels in 1996; and if he will make a statement. [19877]

Mr. Ancram: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of candidates entered for foreign language A-levels conducted by the Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment in 1996 and the proportion who achieved grades A to C is as follows:

	Number entered	Percentage Grades A–C
French	1,149	62.2
German	170	63.5
Irish	296	67.9
Italian	38	73.7
Spanish	255	71.4

Latin and Ancient Greek

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of (a) comprehensive and (b) grant-maintained schools in Northern Ireland currently offer (i) Latin and (ii) ancient Greek as (a) a GCSE and (b) an A-level option; and if he will make a statement. [19879]

Mr. Ancram: The information is not available in the form requested. The number and percentage of grammar schools in Northern Ireland in which pupils took GCSE and A-level examinations in Latin and in Greek in 1995–96 are as follows:

	Number	Percentage
GCSE
Latin	29	40.8
Greek	4	5.6
A level
Latin	13	18.3
Greek	1	1.4

No non-grammar schools had pupils taking these examinations.

Petrol and Diesel

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to set up an inquiry into the sale and price of petrol and diesel in Northern Ireland on the same basis as the inquiry in Scotland. [20316]

Mr. Ancram: I have no such plans.

Retail Outlets

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which new retail outlets resulting from inward investments, have been given relief or assistance towards their annual rates demand in the past three years; and if he will make a statement. [20373]

Sir John Wheeler: No special rate reductions have been granted in Northern Ireland in the past three years to any part of the retail sector.

Department of Education

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the annual running costs of DENI headquarters, Bangor, for the past financial year; and what are the budgeted total running costs at this departmental headquarters for this financial year and for the next financial year. [20372]

Mr. Ancram: The departmental running cost baselines allocated to DENI for the specific years are as follows:

1995–96: £15.670 million

1996–97: £15.695 million

1997–98: £15.450 million

The figures are at 1995–96 prices.

Martin McGartland

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been paid to Martin McGartland in criminal injuries compensation in relation to the events surrounding his abduction by the IRA. [20750]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Denis Stanley. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. A. Stanley to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 19 March 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply on behalf of the Compensation Agency to your Question concerning the amount of money paid to Martin McGartland in criminal injuries compensation.

Mr McGartland's 1992 claim under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation)(Northern Ireland) Order 1988 had to be refused because it failed to satisfy a number of requirements of the legislation. His subsequent appeal to the County Court was also refused and as a result no money has been paid to him under the 1988 Order.

I trust this explains the position.

Statutory Rules

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Northern Ireland statutory rules were made in 1996, by Department; and what (a) number and (b) percentage replicated rules and regulations for Great Britain. [21003]

Sir John Wheeler: The number of statutory rules made, by Department, in 1996 was:

Department	Number in 1996
Department of Agriculture	93
Department of Economic Development	53
Department of Education for NI	30
Department of the Environment for NI	186
Department of Finance and Personnel	10
Department of Health and Social Services for NI	231

Although NI statutory rules and orders may follow a general policy set by GB legislation they do not replicate those made for Great Britain. The drafting will take into account for the NI institutions and entablements and apply the policies to the local/central government structures.

Licensing Law

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the policy appraisal and fair treatment guidelines were applied to the recent licensing law changes; and if he will make a statement. [21006]

Mr. Moss: As is the standard practice, the new licensing laws were assessed against the policy appraisal and fair treatment principles and there did not appear to be any aspect of the laws which would give rise to direct or indirect discrimination.

Ulster Museum

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the attendance figures for 1996 reported by the Ulster museum, including its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1995. [20111]

Mr. Ancram: In 1996 a total of 256,064 people visited the Ulster museum and the Armagh County museum—a decrease of 24.20 per cent. on the attendance figure for 1995.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Basingstoke, what is his scientific evidence for his statement that there is no difference between naturally found calcium fluoride and adding hexafluorosilicic acid or disodium hexafluorosilicate. [21136]

Mr. Moss: There is no evidence to suggest that there is any difference in effect between flouride which occurs naturally in water and that produced by adding either hexaflourosilicic acid or disodium hexaflourosilicate to water.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which (a) health and social services boards, (b) district councils, (c) political parties and (d) other organisations in Northern Ireland have sent representations to his Department (i) recommending and (ii) otherwise supporting, the fluoridation of water in Northern Ireland. [21135]

Mr. Moss: All four health and social services boards in Northern Ireland have recommended the fluoridation of water supplies for their resident populations. Antrim borough council is the only district council in Northern Ireland to have indicated support for the boards' recommendations.

Information on the views of Northern Ireland political parties and other organisations on fluoridation is not held centrally.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will announce his decision on whether or not to proceed with the fluoridation of water in Northern Ireland. [21137]

Mr. Moss: On 13 March I announced my decision to turn down requests from health and social services boards for approval to proceed with fluoridation proposals. However, health and social services boards may submit fresh applications in the future.

Ulster Savings

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of Ulster Savings. [21393]

Sir John Wheeler: All new investments in Ulster Savings ceased with effect from 1 June 1991, although arrangements for reinvestment were retained. Having given careful consideration to the findings of a further policy review, I have decided that the facility to reinvest in Ulster Savings should be withdrawn. However, It has been agreed that the proceeds of matured Ulster savings certificates may be reinvested instead in National Savings with effect from 1 April 1997.

Holdings Centre

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make an announcement about the posts of independent commissioner and deputy commissioner for the holdings centres which fall vacant on 31 March. [21426]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am happy to announce that Sir Louis Blom-Cooper and Dr. Bill Norris have accepted reappointment to the posts of independent commissioner and deputy commissioner respectively.

I am grateful to them both for accepting reappointment and I am confident that they will continue to monitor the care and treatment of detainees held in custody and to produce well-informed annual reports.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Consultants

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much her Department has spent on contracts with external consultants in each of the last five financial years. [20907]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

Actual figures

1992–93: £1,200,000

1993–94: £1,547,360

1994–95: £467,497

1995–96: £304,632

1996–97: £209,092

Sports Medicine (Lottery Awards)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the awards from national lottery proceeds made to sports medicine organisations, indicating the amount of the awards and (a) when they were agreed, (b) when they were made and (c) who were the recipients. [19104]

Mr. Sproat: By the end of February 1997 four awards had been announced for sports medicine organisations. The details are as follows:

Distributing body	Agreement date	Award date	Recipient	Award amount £
Scottish Sports Council	20 March 1996	21 March 1996	University of Strathclyde	474,500
Sports Council	22 April 1996	1 May 1996	University of Birmingham	131,300
Scottish Sports Council	26 June 1996	3 July 1996	Gordon Sports Medicine Centre	5,900
Sports Council	21 October 1996	6 November 1996	National Sports Medicine Institute	2,702,738
Total				3,314,438

Works of Art (Export Licences)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the items for which the issuing of export licences was withheld on the recommendation of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art during the half-year ended 31 December 1996, specifying in each case the valuation and whether an item was exported or retained, with particulars in the latter event of the acquiring institution; and if she will list any items for which licences have been withheld but the final disposal of which is not yet decided, specifying in each case (a) the valuation and (b) the relevant time limit. [20110]

Mr. Sproat: The information is as follows:

Description of item	Valuation £	Outcome

All of DNH's executive NDPBs are currently developing registers of members' interests. Many of these are already in place and are open to the public on request.

' Indicates where this is a statutory requirement.

' Indicates where an annual report is published by the organisation is only statutorily obliged to publish a triennial report.

' Indicates are available upon request.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open Government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [20938]

Mr. Sproat: The information is as follows:

(a) Bodies subject to the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are listed in schedule 2 of the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967 as amended. This includes:

Arts Council of England
British Film Institute
British Library
Crafts Council
English Sports Council
English Tourist Board
English Heritage
Museums and Galleries Commission
National Heritage Memorial Fund
Registrar of Public Lending Right
Royal Commission on Historic Manuscripts
UK Sports Council

(b) None.

(c) All of the Department's executive NDPBs are subject to scrutiny by the Comptroller and Auditor General.

(d) All bodies falling within the jurisdiction of the PCA are subject to the Code of Practice on Open Government. Lord Nolan's report on Standards in Public Life recommended that all executive NDPBs should develop their own codes of openness.

(e) The Department monitors the performance of its NDPBs through the Corporate Planning process and through annual Funding Agreements, in which targets and performance indicators are set.

(f) The principles of the Citizen's Charter apply to all the Department's NDPBs.

London Marathon

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what were the total costs incurred by the Royal Parks in staging the 1996 London marathon. [18973]

Mr. Sproat: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Royal Parks agency under its chief executive, Mr. David Welch. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Welch to Mr. Tom Pendry, dated 19 March 1997:

I have been asked by Mr. Iain Sproat to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the costs incurred by the Royal Parks by the 1996 London Marathon because I am responsible for the management of the Royal Parks.

The costs, which include the involvement of the Agency's staff in planning for the race, additional Royal Parks Constabulary manpower in the Parks on the day, supervision of the arrangements for the race, and employing contractors to clear up after the event, total £22,750.

Academy of Sport

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what evaluation procedure was used to select the shortlist of applications for the British Academy of Sport. [18336]

Mr. Sproat: The evaluation was carried out in an objective and non-political way by an experienced joint Department of National Heritage United Kingdom Sports Council evaluation panel. The evaluation panel was chaired by the chief executive of the UKSC and included two officers from the UKSC and two officials from DNH. In addition, the evaluation panel was advised by four outside consultants.

There was two stages to the evaluation process. At the first stage, all 26 bids were evaluated by the evaluation panel against pre-defined criteria drawn up to assess compliance with the bid prospectus. At that stage, a list of 13 bids which should proceed to a detailed technical evaluation in stage two was determined. At stage two, there was a detailed technical evaluation of each of the 13 bids by the evaluation panel and its outside advisers. Each bidder was also given an opportunity to present their bid at an interview with the evaluation panel and advisers.

Based on the advice of the evaluation panel, the Government and the UKSC announced on 25 February that the academy would be chosen from three contenders: the Central consortium, the Heyford Consortium and the Sheffield Consortium. These proposals are now being considered in more detail by the UKSC and DNH.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State or National Heritage if she will make a statement on the current position regarding the establishment of the Academy of Sport and on the sites under consideration. [20682]

Mr. Sproat: The United Kingdom Sports Council and the Department of National Heritage completed the second stage of the evaluation process on 25 February when it was announced that the British Academy of Sport will be chosen from three contenders: the Central Consortium, the Heyford Consortium and the Sheffield Consortium. These proposals are now being considered in greater detail with a view to identifying the preferred site. An announcement on the preferred site and organisation or organisations will not be made until after the general election.

Bletchley Park

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations she has received regarding the future of Bletchley Park; and what action she proposes to take. [20673]

Mr. Sproat: My Department has so far received around 120 letters on Bletchley Park. The Bletchley Park trust applied to the Heritage lottery fund in 1995 for funding towards the preservation of the park but was turned down. Decisions on applications to the Heritage lottery fund are made by the trustees of the National Heritage memorial fund and Ministers cannot intervene. However, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the chairman and chief executive of the Bletchley Park trust on 3 March to hear about their proposals for the site. She wished them well with any new application they chose to submit.

Inheritance Tax (Items in Lieu)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the allocations made to public institutions in the United Kingdom during the half-year ended 31 December 1996 of individual works of art and museum objects pre-eminent for national, scientific, historic or artistic interest which have been accepted in satisfaction of inheritance tax, together with information, where applicable, as to conditions or wishes expressed by testators or executors in the matter of allocations; and if she will list the works of art and museum objects which are still awaiting allocation, with the respective dates of their acceptance, in satisfaction of inheritance tax. [20109]

Mr. Sproat: The information which the hon. Member requests is as follows:

[3] Unconditional offer.
[4] The Stoke Edith hangings were accepted in lieu of estate duty in 1961 and ownership passed to HM Government. Following their acceptance the hangings remained on loan for display at Montacute House (a National Trust property) until as mutually agreed between the Victoria and Albert museum and the National Trust, the hangings were moved to the V and A in parts (in 1980 and 1994). In 1996 the V and A asked the Secretary of State to arrange for ownership of the hangings to pass to them on a permanent basis and Lord Inglewood agreed, making a section 9 direction on 9 November 1996.

Exercise

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions she has had with the Secretary of State for Health regarding a campaign to encourage people to take up exercise. [17415]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 26 February 1997]: Both our Departments were members of the Government's physical activity task force, whose recommendations led to the launch of the Active for Life Campaign, which encourages people to take up exercise. I am particularly keen to ensure good exercise habits are instilled from an early age, through our initiatives to promote sport in schools.

National Lottery

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 15 November 1996, Official Report, column 365, on feasibility studies funded by the national lottery, when the information on feasibility studies will be available. [17650]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer March 1997]: I apologise for the delay in providing the hon. Member with this information. To date, the national lottery distributing bodies have announced 320 awards for feasibility studies representing an investment of £30.4 million. So far, 79 of these studies have produced full applications and of these, six have resulted in lottery awards. Many studies have yet to be completed, while others have resulted in full applications which are being considered by the distributing bodies in the normal way. Awards to feasibility studies represent less than 1 per cent. of the total value of awards announced to the end of February 1997.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 272, if she will list the total amount of national lottery grants for each borough of (a) London and (b) the West Midland county expressed as an amount per head of population. [19595]

Mr. Sproat: National lottery awards announced up to the end of February 1997 for London and the west midlands are as follows:

London and West Midlands

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much her Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19385]

Mr. Sproat: The only document my Department has issued is the "Export Licensing Unit Code of Practice." This was issued in 1994 at a cost of £1,360.38 and approximately 1,000 have been issued. The Royal Parks agency has published and circulated a visitor's charter. This was first produced in 1994 at a total cost of £2,072.61 and has recently been revised at a total cost of £2,222.61. To date approximately 5,000 copies have been issued. Whilst the Historic Royal Palaces agency has its own visitor's charter it has not been published. It is prominently displayed at all ticketing offices at the palaces.

Football Clubs

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list for each of the last five years, the football clubs which have received grant aid from the Football Trust indicating in each case (a) the amount of money awarded and (b) if the money was awarded in respect of (i) safety and (ii) community. [19906]

Mr. Sproat: Over the past five years, the Football Trust has provided £140 million for Taylor-related redevelopment work, £20 million for ongoing safety work and £5.5 million for community work at professional clubs in England, Wales and Scotland, as well as £12.4 million for non-professional and grass roots football. I am today placing in the Libraries of both Houses a schedule, provided by the Football Trust, setting out information on the grants awarded to individual clubs.

Parliamentary Answers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many questions were tabled from reply by her Department in each Session since 1979–80; in how many instances in each year the reply has been that providing the information involved disproportionate cost; and in how many instances in each year questions have been given the reply that the information was not available centrally. [16793]

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage was established in April 1992.

The available figures for the number of questions answered by my Department in each parliamentary Session are as follows:

Session	Number of questions answered
1992–93	1,281
1993–94	1,099
1994–95	1,226
1995–96	1,124

The rest of the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many Bills her Department has sponsored in each year since it was formed; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19769]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The Department of National Heritage was formed in April 1992.

The following Bills have been sponsored by my Department:

National Lottery etc. Act 1993

Broadcasting Act 1996

National Heritage Act 1997

They have all been passed by Parliament.

S4C

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much S4C will receive from her Department in the current year; and how much it received in the previous year. [20718]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 18 March 1997]: S4C received £68,416,000 from my Department in 1996 and there is provision of £73,300,00 for the current year.

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what restrictions and requirements are placed on S4C as regards the language of programmes made using public funding provided by her Department. [20717]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The Welsh Fourth Channel Authority receives public funding to fulfil its function which is set out in section 57 of the Broadcasting Act 1990: to provide a television broadcasting service of high quality for reception wholly or mainly in Wales. Under that Act, S4C is required to ensure that a substantial proportion of its programmes broadcast between 6.30 pm and 10 pm are in Welsh.

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many of the new digital channels available to S4C will be used for broadcasting in (a) English and (b) Welsh. [20547]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The Government have offered S4C guaranteed capacity of half of the third multiplex in Wales. S4C is required to simulcast the Welsh language programmes in its peak analogue service as part of its digital service, but is not otherwise constrained as to the language in which its digital services are broadcast.

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if the chairman or any of the members of S4C have declared interests or shareholdings in any independent production company. [20715]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The chairman and members of the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority are required under the Broadcasting Act 1990 to declare any interests or shareholdings they may have in any independent production company. None has declared such an interest.

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what monitoring her Department carries out of the use of the public funds provided to S4C; and what assessment it has made of the use of those funds in the past year. [20719]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 18 March 1997]: It is a long standing policy that broadcasting services are independent of Government editorially and, to the greatest extent possible, in economic and regulatory terms. It is for the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority to regulate S4C and for S4C's management to supervise the efficiency of the broadcaster. There is a memorandum of understanding between my Department and S4C, the primary purpose of which is to ensure that S4C's systems of financial management are sufficient to safeguard public funds. The actual management of those funds is a matter for the authority.

Sport (Broadcasting)

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what restrictions exist on television companies in receipt of public funds bidding against each other to broadcast sports events. [20716]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The obligations placed on the BBC and the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority in respect of their broadcasting services, which are set out in the royal charter and agreement and the 1990 Broadcasting Act respectively, do not impinge on the freedom of these broadcasters to negotiate for programme rights to sports events.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will provide figures for her Department's private finance initiative projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93; and if she will list her latest estimates of annual totals for PFI projects, on the same basis as those given in table 5.5 of the Red Book. [20394]

Mr. Sproat: For the first part of the hon. Member's question, I refer him to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington on 13 March, Official Report, columns 281–82.

The current estimates of annual totals for PFI projects, are shown in the following table:

SCOTLAND

BSE

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what have been the costs of the BSE crisis in Scotland to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [18005]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 28 February 1997]: The Government's concern has been to provide support in a way which benefits all parts of the beef chain and enables a recovery of market confidence. The current estimates of the extra amounts paid out as a result of the BSE crisis in Scotland to the industry under the following schemes to 31 December 1996 are as follows:

	£ million
Beef special premium and suckler cow premium schemes:
top-ups	16.6
Beef marketing payment scheme	7.0
Over-30-months scheme:
producers payments	65.9
slaughter and rendering fees	13.5
Calf processing scheme	2.6
Slaughtering industry (emergency aid) scheme 1996	10.0

Also, in the period 1 April 1996 to 31 December 1996, the EU agreed to accept 10,901 tonnes of beef into intervention from Scotland at an estimated buying-in cost of around £22 million.

Sex Offenders

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a supervised release order mandatory for all those who commit sexual offences which result in custody, irrespective of whether the case is heard on indictment. [19075]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 March 1997]: Amendments to clause 3 of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill were tabled at Lords Committee stage. These raised a similar point to the hon. Member's question. No further Government amendments are proposed.

Organic Farming

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what percentage of farms in Scotland are currently classified as organic; and if he will make a statement. [19859]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 11 March 1997]: There were 99 registered organic units in Scotland as at February 1997. This represents approximately 0.2 per cent. of the 50,817 farms and crofts which submitted a separate census return in June 1996, although the two figures are calculated on a different basis.

Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made towards implementing Lord Cullen's recommendation for the development of a Scottish vocational qualification in respect of work with children; and if he will make a statement. [20095]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 March 1997]: Following receipt of Lord Cullen's report, Scottish Office officials met with representatives of the Scottish Vocational Education Council. SCOTVEC has now submitted a paper to the Scottish Office to facilitate consideration of the options for the development of vocational qualifications for adults working with young children.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by constituency, based on home addresses, the number of pupils currently supported under the assisted places scheme. [20216]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 17 March 1997]: Information on the home addresses of assisted place pupils is at present not held centrally. Following the commitment made by my right hon. Friend on 10 March 1997, Official Report, column 40, this information is being sought, and will be collated in the manner requested. I will respond in full as soon as possible.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total cost to public funds of the assisted places scheme for each year since 1987. [20977]

Mr. Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Monklands, East (Mrs. Liddell) on 29 January 1997, Official Report, column 244.

Regeneration Programmes

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been paid, from the priority partnership areas and regeneration programmes, to the districts of (a) Kelburn, (b) Woodhall, (c) Broadfield, (d) Bowfarm, (e) Greenock Central, (f) Gibshill, (g) Larkfield and (h) Brachturn in Greenock and Port Glasgow; and if he will make a statement. [20648]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 17 March 1997]: These districts are included within the boundaries of the Inverclyde priority partnership area, which was designated on 11 November 1996 and will receive urban programme funding in the order of £3.87 million over the first three years. Urban programme resources are defrayed in the first instance by local authorities who then claim 75 per cent. grant annually in arrears from the Scottish Office development department. At this stage, therefore, expenditure incurred in 1996–97 is a matter for Inverclyde council.

Banner Committee

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what actions he has taken on the recommendations of the Banner committee. [20422]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The Government have made significant progress in taking forward the various recommendations in the Banner report.

In particular, the Farm Animal Welfare Council has already agreed to adopt the general principles set out in the report and has established arrangements for liaison with the animal procedures committee.

A working party has also been set up to look into the role of non-veterinarians in relation to the artificial insemination of cattle and horses. We continue to support internationally harmonised controls on genetically modified organisms and efforts to achieve an acceptable EU patents directive.

Animal Geno-mapping

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on animal geno-mapping. [20423]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The Scottish Office does not fund any research on animal geno-mapping.

Under existing co-ordination arrangements for UK agricultural research, responsibility for animal geno-mapping research lies with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and with the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards patents established with the Roslin Institute during its motherhood of work leading to the cloning of sheep. [20424]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The Scottish Office holds no such patents with the Roslin Institute. This is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, who co-funded the work leading to the cloning of sheep.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of work at the Roslin Institute for addressing (a) cystic fibrosis, (b) haemophilia B, (c) blood-clotting and (d) the mathematics of the in-breeding of animals. [20425]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The work at the Roslin Institute has been funded by the Biotechnology and Biological Research Council, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the European Union and the private sector.

No detailed assessment of the impact of this research on specific medical conditions in humans has been made at this stage. The Scottish agricultural college has, however, been able to use the information on the mathematical theory of animal breeding in its advice to the farming industry.

Fishermen's Organisations

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the fishermen's organisations which (a) he and (b) his officials have met since 1 July 1996. [20493]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Since 1 July 1996 I have met with:

Fife Fishermen's Association
Pittenweem Fishermen's Mutual Association
Scottish Fishermen's Federation
Shetland Fishermen's Association
Mallaig and North West Fishermen's Association
National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations

In the same period, officials have met the following fishermen's organisations:

Aberdeen Fish Producers Organisation
Clyde Fishermen's Association
East Coast Licensed Small Boat Association
Fife Fishermen's Association
Fife Fish Producer's Organisation

In addition, there have been a number of joint meetings involving Ministers, officials and industry representatives from throughout the United Kingdom.

Fishermen's Association Ltd.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy in respect of meetings between (a) Ministers and (b) officials and the Fishermen's Association Ltd. [20494]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The Department arranges meetings with representatives of fishermen's organisations as and when appropriate.

Meat Hygiene

Sir Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence Professor Pennington asked for from the Meat Hygiene Service in Scotland in respect of standards of hygiene in slaughterhouses as part of his inquiry. [20736]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This is a matter for Professor Pennington and the expert group. Information from the Meat Hygiene Service has been made available through one of the group's members and the MHS is preparing further material to supply to the group. I understand that group members have also visited slaughterhouses to observe the position at first hand.

Salmon Strategy Task Force

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to implement recommendation No. 33 of the report of the Scottish Salmon strategy task force. [20815]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: I have sent a copy of the report to my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. No decisions on the report's recommendations will be taken until the consultation process now under way is complete.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the attendance figures for 1996 reported by the national museums and galleries in Scotland, broken down to the individual institutions but including their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1995. [20113]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

	1996	Percentage change since 1995
National Museums of Scotland	1,178,944	+5.8
National Galleries of Scotland	990,888	+9.9

Figures for the national museums of Scotland relate to the royal museum of Scotland, the museum of antiquities, the Scottish agricultural museum, the Scottish united services museum, the museum of flight, the museum of costume and the gasworks museum. The national galleries of Scotland figures relate to the national gallery of Scotland, the Scottish national portrait gallery, the Scottish national gallery of modern art, national galleries of Scotland exhibitions held in the royal scottish academy, Duff house in Banff and, for the first time, Paxton house, Berwick.

Forestry Sales (Wales)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 12 November, Official Report, columns 151–52, if he will list the woods that have been placed on the market by Forest Enterprise in Wales since 12 November 1996, to the latest available date, indicating in each cause (a) the name of the wood, (b) the unitary authority it lies in, (c) the number of hectares it covers, (d) the date on which it was put up for sale and (e) if a public access agreement (i) has been agreed and (ii) is being negotiated. [20979]

Mr. Kynoch: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise. I have asked its chief executive, Mr Gordon Cowie, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Gordon M. Cowie to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 19 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Scotland has asked me to reply to your Question about the sale of Forestry Commission woodlands in Wales.

There have only been three properties placed on the open market, since 12 November 1996, as follows:

Unitary authority/name of property	Area (ha)	Date placed on market	Access agreement
Rhondda Cynon Taff
Hendre Rhys	18.3	17 January 1997	No
Powys
New Forest Plantation	9.0	27 November 1996	Yes
Tack Wood	63.0	27 November 1996	Yes

Forestry Authority Schemes

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the total payments to private landowners under forest authority schemes in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland; and if he will list the 20 largest recipients in Scotland, indicating in each case the purpose of the award and the amount for each year since 1993. [20976]

Mr. Kynoch: The total payments to woodland owners by the Forestry Commission are set out in the table.

£ million

Year ending 31 March	GB	Scotland
1993	21.8	10.3
1994	29.8	13.4
1995	32.8	17.3
1996	32.1	16.3
1997[1]	27.5	14.5

[1] To end of February.

The Forestry Commission does not keep a record of cumulative payments made to each owner. To list the 20 largest recipients would require a manual search through a very large number of individual grant scheme files. This could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Health Budget

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated planned reduction in administrative costs projected for the Scottish health budget in each year for which a projection has been made in 1996–97 prices. [20972]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Health boards' management costs reduced by £3 million in 1995–96. NHS trusts and health boards will achieve savings of £14 million in 1996–97 and health boards will achieve savings in 1997–98 of £17 million.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown of the costs to public funds of the nursery voucher scheme for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [20975]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The Government plan to spend some £3.8 million, £47.4 million and £70 million on the pre-school education voucher initiative in Scotland in the three years 1996–97, 1997–98, and 1998–99 respectively.

Crime

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what percentage of crimes were carried out in each police authority in Scotland by people under the age of (a) 20 and (b) 16 years in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [21275]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is not collected centrally on the estimated age of offenders responsible for recorded crimes. Information is collected on the age of offenders convicted in the criminal courts. This could not, however, be relied on to provide an answer to the question, as not all recorded crimes are cleared up by the police and most persons under 16, and some persons aged 16 and 17, suspected of offending are not prosecuted but are referred to the reporter to the children's panel.

WALES

Assisted Businesses (Political Objectives)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if businesses or organisations with declared political objectives can, or could obtain, financial support from (a) the Welsh Development Agency and (b) the Development Board for Rural Wales. [20611]

Mr. Hague: Support cannot be given for political purposes. Any business or organisation can apply for financial support from the WDA and/or DBRW provided the application relates to a specific project or initiative which matches the economic or environmental criteria and objectives of an appropriate WDA or DBRW scheme. Aid to some sectors is restricted or prohibited by the rules of some schemes and by EU state aid rules.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake a review into the establishment of an education standard spending assessment in Wales equivalent to that which exists in England. [20526]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: With the agreement of the Welsh Local Government Association, standard spending assessments for local authorities in Wales are unhypothecated. It is for each authority to decide its spending priorities taking account of its statutory responsibilities and its own view of needs and priorities. The current system should encourage local accountability.

National Museum and Gallery of Wales

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the attendance figures for 1996 reported by the national museum and gallery of Wales, including its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1995. [20112]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A total of 819,605 persons visited the national museum and galleries of Wales during 1996, an increase of 5 per cent. compared with the number of 780,344 in 1995.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [20932]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is as follows:

(a) the Arts Council of Wales (ACW), the Cardiff Bay Development Corporation (CBDC), the Countryside Council for Wales (CCW), the Development Board for Rural Wales (DBRW), Housing for Wales (HfW), the Residuary Body for Wales (RBW), the Sports Council for Wales (SCW), the Wales Tourist Board (WTB), the Welsh Language Board (WLB) and the Agricultural Wages Committees are all open to the scrutiny of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration;

(b) the Audit Commissioner is the external auditor of the Residuary Body for Wales;

(c) the Comptroller and the Auditor General is the external auditor of all Welsh executive NDPBs except the RBW, Wales Youth Agency (WYA), HfW, and CBDC, to whose books and papers he nevertheless has access a) under the National Audit Act 1983 for the purpose of carrying out examinations on value for money, and b) by agreement, for the purpose of examining questions of regularity and propriety;

(d) all are encouraged to adopt procedures under the code of access to Government Information;

(e) all identify, publish and report against key performance measures in their annual reports other than the Higher and Further Education Funding Councils for Wales (HFEFCW), who give details in their corporate plan, which is also published.

(f) all are subject to the provisions of the citizens charter.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20893]

Mr. Hague: This information requested is as follows.

(a) All—under statute, charter or other controlling documents. The report of work by the Agricultural Wages Committee is included in the annual report of the Agricultural Wages Board;

(b) all except the Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments in Wales and the Agricultural Wages Committee—under statute or charter;

(c) none;

(d) none;

(e) all have adopted or are in the process of adopting a code of practice based on the "Code of Best Practice for Board Members of Public Bodies" published by HM Treasury in June 1994 and further guidance issued by HM Treasury in January 1997. They publish or will then publish or make available such a register for inspection.

Forest Enterprise (Sales)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each unitary authority in Wales the number of woods which Forest Enterprise intends to put up for sale by the end of the financial year 1996–97. [20980]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise. I have asked its chief executive. Mr. Gordon Cowie, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Gordon M. Cowie to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 19 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Wales has asked me to reply to your Question about the sale of Forestry Commission woodlands in the period up to the end of the current financial year.

We have no plans to market any new woodlands in Wales before 31 March 1997.

Glaucoma

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients suffering from glaucoma were treated by general practitioners during (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95 and (d) 1995–96. [21084]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held centrally.

Departmental Cash Limits

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he is proposing to make to the cash limits for his Department for the current financial year. [21427]

Mr. Hague: The local authority capital cash limit—WO/LACAP—will be reduced by £6,465,000 from £518,206,000 to £511,741,000; the Housing for Wales cash limit—WO/HFW—will be increased by £6,465,000 from £96,137,000 to £102,602,000.

The transfer of £6,465,000 from the local authority capital cash limit to the Housing for Wales cash limit is in respect of work undertaken by housing associations on behalf of local authorities.

Housing

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what progress has been made with the sale of Housing for Wales's loan portfolio. [19567]

Mr. Hague [pursuant to his reply 6 March 1997]: The purchase price will be subject to changes in the underlying portfolio and to movements in the gilt rate until completion on 26 March. I cannot therefore, give a figure for the final sale receipt until after Parliament has risen. However, I shall write to my hon. Friend when the final figure is available, and place copies of the letter in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Army Training Land

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current requirement for Army training land in the United Kingdom; and what arrangements there are for the stewardship of such land. [21457]

Mr. Soames: I have today published a document, "Striking a Balance '97", the second report on the management of the major Army training areas, following the original "Striking a Balance", published in October 1995. The new document describes the work going on in a number of areas to ensure that the land on which the Army trains is managed with as much sensitivity as possible to the requirements of local people.

The document also reports on the work we have done to analyse the Army's requirement for training land in the United Kingdom. This work shows that, following the return to this country of many units from Germany, and the introduction of new systems, the Army has a significant shortfall in training land in the UK. The report also shows a number of ways in which this shortfall can be reduced including by development of existing facilities and, in particular, the proposed development of Otterburn.

A copy of "Striking a Balance '97" has been placed in the Library of the House.

Army Sales Teams

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which countries Army sales teams were deployed in 1991. [20106]

Mr. Arbuthnot: According to our records, Army sales teams—now called export support teams—were deployed in the following countries during 1991: Brunei, France, Morocco, The Netherlands, Oman and Saudi Arabia.

Loan Service Personnel

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those countries where loan service personnel were deployed in 1991. [20174]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 18 March 1997, Official Report, columns 507–10.

Gulf War (Organophosphate Pesticides)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what quantities of Fenitrothion were taken to the Gulf for use at British military establishments as part of Operation Granby in 1990–91; up to what date it was used; and what additional stocks were (a) obtained locally and (b) used; [19086]

(2) what quantities of Neocydal 60 EC were obtained in the Gulf by British forces in 1990 and 1991 in Operation Granby; what languages were printed on the use instructions for this insecticide; what translation facilities were available for interpreting these instructions; and what use in action was made of Neocydal. [19093]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 4 March 1997, Official Report, columns 587–88.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of his annual departmental budget was spent in Wales in each of the past five years; what (a) non-departmental Government bodies and (b) executive agencies responsible for his Department operate in Wales; and what land his Department currently (i) owns and (ii) leases in Wales, indicating the area of each site. [20707]

Mr. Soames: It is not possible to split the total defence budget by geographical area. Defence expenditure on equipment and associated direct employment in Wales for the most recent five years for which analysis is available is in table 1.9 of "UK Defence Statistics 1996", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. For each financial year from 1990–91 to 1993–94 inclusive the estimated proportion of the total equipment expenditure spent in Wales was about 1 per cent. In the financial year 1994–95 the proportion is estimated to have been about 1.5 per cent.

The National Employer's Liaison Committee is my Department's only non-departmental Government body to operate in Wales.

Five Ministry of Defence agencies maintain operational establishments in Wales: the Army Initial Training Organisation; the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency; the RAF maintenance group; the RAF training group; and the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency. In addition the Army base Repair Organisation has a contracts office in Cardiff.

The Defence Estate Organisation, which is scheduled to launch as an agency on 18 March, maintains a deputy defence land agent office at Brecon, and is responsible for the management of the defence estate throughout Wales.

The following agencies maintain a presence or from time-to-time conduct operations or training in Wales: the Ministry of Defence police; the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency; the Meteorological Office; the Defence Dental Agency; and Military Survey Defence Agency.

I am placing the information requested regarding Department owned and leased land in Wales in the Library of the House of Commons.

Scott Inquiry

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's implementation of the recommendation of Sir Richard Scott on accountability to Parliament on trade in arms. [19460]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Mr. Sykes) on 22 January 1997, Official Report, columns 600–01, about action to implement the recommendations of Sir Richard Scott's report.

Defence Contracts

Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent defence contracts or subcontracts have been awarded to companies based in and around Colchester; and what is the value of each contract or subcontract. [20279]

Mr. Arbuthnot: During the current financial year, over 200 prime contracts have been placed by MoD contracts branches on approximately 100 companies either based in the area or where the major element of the work is being performed or sub-contracted in and around Colchester. Because of the number of contracts it is impractical to list them individually, but values range from several hundred to several million pounds.

The above does not include any minor sub-contract work, or local purchase orders placed locally by MoD units as this information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Army Apprentices College

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has made a decision on the future use of the former Army apprentices college near Harrogate; and if he will make a statement. [20681]

Mr. Soames: No firm decision has yet been made on the future of the Harrogate site. It will be drawn to the attention of bidders for the Army Foundation college, for which we intend to seek private finance, but we are not in a position to reach final conclusions at this stage.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [20931]

Mr. Arbuthnot: None of my Department's executive non-departmental public bodies are subject to investigation by the Audit Commission. While none of them are listed as subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner they are all subject to the code of practice on access to Government information—under which complaints may ultimately be investigated by the Parliamentary Commissioner. The Submarine museum has been incorporated as a charitable limited company and is not currently subject to audit by the National Audit Office. All other of my Department's executive non-departmental public bodies are subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office and all of my Department's executive non-departmental public bodies are subject to performance indicators and citizens charter provisions.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20900]

Mr. Arbutnot: There is a statutory right for the public to inspect the annual accounts of all the service museums, held by the Charities Commission; the National Army museum and the RAF museum publish their annual reports voluntarily. The Oil and Pipelines agency's annual report and accounts are laid before Parliament.

None of the MOD's executive non-departmental public bodies publishes the agendas or minutes of meetings; and there is no statutory requirement to do so.

Appointees to the Oil and Pipelines agency are required to declare any personal interests and records are maintained.

Low Flying

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on low flying by the RAF in the vicinity of Seaham on Monday 3 and Tuesday 4 March between 12 noon and 5 p.m; [19941]

(2) if the flight paths of low-flying exercises by the RAF now incorporate the vicinity of Seaham. [19944]

Mr. Soames: The RAF police have been tasked to investigate the activity of 3 and 4 March. My noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence, will write to the hon. Member when these inquiries are complete. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the number of family credit claims and (b) the average payment of family credit by benefits offices made each year since 1992. [20296]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of family credit is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Stephen Timms, dated 18 March 1997:

As Peter Mathison is away from the office on annual leave, the Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking the number of Family Credit (FC) claims and the average payment of FC by benefits offices made each year since 1992.

The information is not available in the format requested. It may be helpful if I explain that FC is administered centrally by the Family Credit Unit. Statistics are produced on a national basis and provide the number of families in receipt of FC within a particular Benefits Agency (BA) office area at a given date. However, this only serves as a "snap-shot" of the position at that given date and does not provide details of the number of families in receipt of FC annually.

The scan was introduced in 1989 and details are normally held for 18 months. However, details have been retained which indicate the number of families in receipt at April 1993 and each successive year.

Details of the number of FC claims by BA offices will be placed in the Library.

Details of the average award of FC are only available on a national basis and are not broken down by BA office area. Details for 1992 and each successive year shown in the attached annex.

I hope you find this reply useful.

Average awards of family credit

May 1993	43.34
May 1994	47.09

Benefit Recipients

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bristol, East (Ms Corston) of 12 February, Official Report, columns 247–48, if he will list the

95 per cent. confidence limits for his number of estimated recipients of council tax benefit and retirement pension, and entitled non-recipients of income support; [18677]

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bristol, East (Ms Corston) of 12 February, Official Report, columns 247–48, in respect of council tax benefits, if he will list the assumptions which have been made in supplying the answers to her question. [18676]

Mr. Roger Evans: The figures in my written answer to the hon. Member for Bristol, East (Ms Corston) on 12 February, Official Report, columns 247–48, were based on the housing benefit management information system annual 1 per cent. sample. This database consists of detailed records of approximately one in every 100 recipients of housing benefit, council tax benefit or both. This information is supplied by the local authorities responsible for the administration and payment of these benefits. The records include details of amounts of housing benefit and council tax benefit being received, eligible council tax, details of other benefits being received by the claimant or partner and details of any dependants and non-dependants.

No particular assumptions were therefore made in producing figures for the number of recipients of council tax benefit and retirement pension or the number of recipients of council tax benefit, retirement pension and income support.

To provide an estimate for recipients of council tax benefit and retirement pension eligible for but not claiming income support, information on the relevant database records was used to calculate whether council tax benefit, after adding back in any deductions for non-dependants, is equal to eligible council tax. This then indicates whether the recipient has income less than his applicable amount—the total of personal allowances and premiums—and therefore whether they would be eligible for income support. Differences in council tax benefit and income support rules relating to earnings disregards and capital amounts have been taken into account in this calculation.

The only assumptions made are that:

1. Recipients of council tax benefit and retirement pension, who are not already claiming income support, but receive either war disablement or war widow's pension and have council tax benefit equal to eligible council tax, will not be entitled to income support. This is due to the differences between how income from war disablement or war widow's pension is disregarded for council tax benefit and income support. Analysis of the cases where council tax benefit is equal to eligible council tax, which would total around 16,000, indicates that the vast majority would be unlikely to qualify for income support due to these differences and the relatively large amounts of war disablement or war widow's pension paid in addition to retirement pension. The effect of this assumption, if any, would be slightly to underestimate the number of entitled non-recipients of income support.

2. The number of special cases where a non-dependant deduction would not be applied and which cannot be identified from the information on the database, is relatively small. In these cases, it has been assumed that a non-dependant deduction has been made and so this deduction has been added back in the calculation described above. The effect will be slightly to overestimate the number of entitled non-recipients of income support.

3. The effects of any other minor differences between the entitlement rules of council tax benefit and income support are small.

Due to the possible effects of these assumptions, the estimated figure was rounded to the nearest 10,000.

The 95 per cent. confidence limits are as follows, and do not take into account the effect of the assumptions described above:

	Number (000s)	Approximate 95 per cent. confidence interval
Recipients of council tax benefit and retirement pension	2,431	2,411 to 2,451
Estimated recipients of council tax benefit and retirement pension, eligible for but not claiming income support	260	250 to 270

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary; [20896]

(2) if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [20935]

Mr. Burt: The information is as follows:

The Occupational Pensions Board does not publish annual reports or accounts, minutes and agendas of meetings. It has compiled, voluntarily, a register of members' interests which is available for public inspection. On 5 March the board published a final report which contained a detailed history of the board's work and achievements. It is subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, scrutiny by the National Audit Office, the statutory provisions for open government and provisions under the citizens charter. It is not subject to performance indicators. The board will cease to exist from 6 April.

The Pensions Compensation Board was established in August 1996 and commences full operation on 6 April. It will publish an annual report and accounts. It is compiling voluntarily a register of members interests which will be available for public inspection. It is subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, scrutiny by the National Audit Office, the statutory provisions for open government and provisions under the citizens charter. It will also be subject to performance indicators.

The Occupational Regulatory Authority was established in April 1996 and commences full operation on 6 april 1997. It will publish an annual report and accounts. It has compiled voluntarily a register of members interests which is available for public inspection. It is subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, scrutiny by the National Audit Office, the statutory provisions for open government and provisions under the citizens charter. It will also be subject to performance indicators.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 342, to the hon. Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Olner), what is his estimate of the numbers of (a) women and (b) men who could gain if new claims for invalid care allowance were allowed for people over retirement age. [18982]

Mr. Burt: The estimated number of women and men who would gain if new claims for invalid care allowance were allowed for people over the age of 65 are 65,000 and 5,000 respectively. Most of these are estimated to gain by only a small proportion of the basic invalid care allowance rate, because of the rules on contributory benefits. Those on income-related benefits would gain entitlement to carer premium.

Note:

Estimates are rounded to the nearest thousand.

Tax and National Insurance (Lower Earnings Limits)

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the costs and savings to individuals and employers of aligning the national insurance lower earnings limit and the personal tax allowance at (a) £62 and (b) £70 per week for the year 1997–98. [18978]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table:

Estimated increase/decrease in revenue from aligning the national insurance contribution lower earnings limit and the personal tax allowance for 1997–98 at (a) £62 and (b) £70

	(a) £62	(b) £70
Employee contributions[1]	Nil	–£575 million
Employer contributions[1]	Nil	+ £100 million[2]
Income Tax[3]	+ £4.7 billion[4]	+ £2.3 billion[4]

Notes:

[1] Source: Government Actuary's Department.

[2] The estimated net gain in revenue from employers' national insurance contributions arises from the counter effect of the contracted-out rebate being applied to a narrower band of earnings.

[3] Source: Inland Revenue.

[4] Estimates based on information projected from the 1994–95 survey of personal incomes and the 1994–95 family expenditure survey. Figures include the tax yield from reducing the aged personal allowances for people aged 65, whose total income is greater than the aged income limit of £15,600, or over to a minimum level equivalent to (a) £62 per week or (b) £70 per week.

National Insurance

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 27 February, Official Report, column 309, what percentage of the total amount of national insurance contributions from employees was paid by (a) those with more than twice and (b) those with less than average earnings in (i) 1979–80 and (ii) 1995–96. [19681]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Figures for 1979–80 are not available and could only be provided a disproportionate cost.

Percentage of total employee national insurance contributions in each band

	1995–96
More than twice average earnings	12.8
Less than average earnings	35.3

Personal Pensions

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the net present cost, in 1996 prices, of national insurance rebates and incentives paid to those who have joined appropriate personal pensioners since 1988–89, assuming the social discount rate used by his Department. [19950]

Mr. Heald: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) on 20 February, Official Report, column 712.

Housing Benefit

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the additional housing benefit costs in (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99 arising from the provisions under (a) section 167 and (b) section 197 of the Housing Act 1996. [21133]

Mr. Roger Evans: No estimates are available.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) single people under the age of 25 years and (b) single people aged 25 to 59 years living in the private rented sector made a claim for housing benefit prior to 2 January 1996 which is still continuous. [21139]

Mr. Evans: The information is not available.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a breakdown of the costs associated with the establishment of the jobseeker's allowance in Scotland. [20973]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested.

The overall one-off costs of implementing the jobseeker's allowance in Great Britain are estimated at £348 million.

Long-term Unemployment

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the estimated total cost of long-term unemployment in Scotland in 1996, separately identifying the costs of (a) the jobseeker's allowance, (b) housing benefit and (c) income support; and if he will indicate the number of people in receipt of such benefits. [20974]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table:

Estimated annual cost of long-term unemployment in Scotland—1996

	Number of claimants	Total weekly benefit £	Implied annual expenditure £
Income support	83,000	4,506,000	234,000,000
Unemployment benefit	13,000	664,000	35,000,000
Housing benefit	n/a	n/a	n/a

Notes:

1. The latest available information for expenditure purposes in May 1996. Since jobseeker's allowance was not introduced until October 1996 figures for unemployment benefit have been provided.
2. It has not been possible to include figures on housing benefit since data are not yet available for 1996. Once data are available, analysis is limited to claimants also in receipt of income support.
3. Long-term unemployed has been defined as those claiming unemployment benefit for more than six months and includes those who receive income support only.

Basic Pension Plus

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cumulative gross cost to public funds of implementing the basic pension plus proposals between 2001 and 2040. [20993]

Mr. Heald: It is not possible to give a precise cumulative cost since that will depend on when the scheme is introduced and what the initial age limit is. The overall cost to public funds of implementing basic pension plus, including the new rebates and reversing the timing of tax relief, will rise on average by about £160 million in each year following implementation reaching a maximum of about £7 billion by 2040 or later.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the Government Actuary's advice on which he has based his estimate that a person on average earnings paying minium contributions to basic pension plus throughout their life would receive a pension of around £150 a week. [20994]

Mr. Heald: The Government Actuary's assumptions, on which the estimated pension of £175 per week for a person on average earning was based, are shown in the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 11 March, Official Report, columns 195–96.

Departmental Select Committee Report

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the Government's response to the Third report of the Social Security Committee, "Uprating of State Retirement Pensions Payable to People Resident Abroad" (HC 143 of Session 1996–97). [21424]

Mr. Lilley: The Government welcome the Committee's report, which focused on the long-standing policy of uprating UK state retirement pensions when paid abroad in specific countries. The report is an important and useful study.

The report contained one recommendation:

"That there should be a free vote at prime time to allow Members to express their opinion on the principle of whether the Government should pay upratings to some or all of those pensioners living in countries where upratings are not paid at present".

Whipping arrangements are a matter for the business managers of all parties. The Government note that the House had the opportunity to debate the uprating of pensions paid abroad during the passage of the Pensions Bill in July 1995. Over 200 hon. Members voted on amendments aimed at providing uprating increases, which were heavily defeated.

The Committee's report rightly recognises that priorities for public expenditure will inevitably be taken into account in considering the issue. Almost £1 billion a year is paid to UK pensioners abroad. It would cost another £250 million a year to bring frozen pensions up to the rate that would be paid if the pensioner were in the UK.

Pensions and Benefits (Earnings Link)

Mr Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the savings to his Department in 1995–96 of ending the link between disability benefits and annual earnings at current prices. [16782]

Mr. Burt [holding answer Tuesday 25 February 1997]: The information is in the table.

The link between the benefit uprating and earnings was broken in 1980 to ensure that long-term provision for the sick and disabled should be sustainable.

Expenditure savings 1995–96

	£ million
Incapacity benefit	1,495
Invalidity allowance/age addition	80
Attendance allowance/disability living allowance	1,335
NCIP/severe disablement allowance	105
Invalid care allowance	105

Notes:

1. Estimates are rounded to nearest £5 million.
2. Estimates converted to 1996–97 prices using GDP deflator.
3. Estimates take account of offsetting costs in the income related benefits.
4. Disability living allowance includes the higher and middle rate care components. The mobility components and lowest rate of care component have been excluded from the calculation as they were never linked to earnings.

Disability Payments

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the reasons for the corrections to his answers to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe of 11 November, Official Report, column 90 and of 4 December, Official

Report, columns 714–15 in respect of disability benefits; and if he will update his answers to include figures for the year 1995–96. [16780]

Mr. Burt [holding answer 25 February 1997]: The estimates of the additional costs of uprating invalidity benefit, including invalidity allowance, in line with the higher of earnings or prices in my replies of 11 November 1996, Official Report, column 90 and 4 December 1996, columns 714–15, did not take account of the fact that between November 1980 and November 1985, the rate of basic invalidity pension was abated by 5 per cent. in lieu of taxation and that an equivalent abatement applied to the rates of invalidity allowance between November 1980 and November 1981.

The revised estimates in my answers of 10 February, Official Report, columns 78–79 were based on the assumption that such an abatement would not have applied if the link with earnings had been maintained.

The estimates also incorporated refined calculations, based on information that had not been originally available, of the offsetting savings arising from fewer claims to income-related benefits.

Sickness and Social Security

Mr. Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, what factors underlie the expected expenditure on sickness and social security between 1996–97 and 2001–02 projected in the financial statement and Budget Report 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [17651]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 25 February 1997]: I have been asked to reply.

Two factors account for the expected increase in social security expenditure on the sick and disabled between 1996–97 and 1990–00. First, a large increase in the number of sick and disabled claimants. Secondly, an increase in the number receiving premiums over and above the basic benefit payment.

My reply to the hon. Member on 24 February, Official Report, column 19, about growth in cyclical social security expenditure, highlighted that projections beyond 1999–00 are based on simple broad assumptions. Consequently, a detailed breakdown of expenditure trends is not meaningful, which is why projections of benefit expenditure beyond 1999–00 are rounded to the nearest £1 billion.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 20 March 1997

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Child Support (Legal Aid)

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the costs to the legal aid budget from court cases where the Child Support Agency decision has led parents without care to seek a ruling to establish contact time with their children. [20173]

Mr. Streeter: None.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21206]

Mr. Streeter: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, Official Report, columns 613–14. Any further information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Court Fees (Exemptions)

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidance has been issued to court staff on dealing with applications for exemption from court fees; and if he will publish it. [21400]

Mr. Streeter: The question concerns a matter which has been assigned to the Court Service under the terms of its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Keith Hill, dated 20 March 1997:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about the guidance issued to court staff on exemptions from court fees. Written guidance on dealing with applications for fee exemption and remission is given to court staff when any fees order includes this issue. The guidance, which is lengthy, is designed for internal use only.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions an individual in receipt of (a) family credit, (b) disability working allowance and (c) housing benefit has (i) applied for exemption from payment of a court fee and (ii) been granted exemption from payment of a court fee in each of the last five years. [21401]

Mr. Streeter: The question concerns a matter which has been assigned to the Court Service under the terms of its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Keith Hill, dated 20 March 1997:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of fee exemptions applied for, and granted, in each of the last five years. Fee exemption is granted automatically to anyone in receipt of Income Support. In family cases, it is also granted to people receiving Family Credit. Information on the number of people to whom it has been granted is not collected centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Litigants on family credit in non-family cases, as well as people in receipt of disability working allowance and housing benefit, can apply for fee remission. Information on the number of applications for fee remission is not kept centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However, the table below shows the total number of court cases in which remission has been granted.

Year	Number of cases
1991–92	766
1992–93	953
1993–94	2,261
1994–95	4,153
1995–96	3,414

Land Registry

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the key performance targets for Her Majesty's Land Registry executive agency for 1997–98. [21623]

Mr. Streeter: The following table sets out the key performance targets that the Lord Chancellor has set for Her Majesty's Land Registry for 1997–98.

HM Land Registry
Key performance indicators and targets 1997–98

Indicator	Target
Financial
Return on average capital employed[1]	2 per cent.
External financing limit	£0
Efficiency
Cost per unit in real terms	£26.67
Cost per unit in cash terms[2]	£29.94
Charter Standards Speed
Percentage of pre-completion applications handled within two working days and	98 per cent.
time taken to process all pre-completion applications	3 working days
Time taken to process 80 per cent. of all registrations	25 working days
Accuracy
Percentage of registrations handled free from any error	98.50 per cent
Percentage of customers responding to the annual survey who perceived the accuracy of registrations to be excellent or good	Better than 90 per cent. (being the result of the 1996 survey)
Development of Land Registration
Bringing into force provisions of the Land Registration Act 1997 introducing new "triggers" for compulsory first registration	1 January 1998
Number of computerised titles in the Land Register (millions)	15.10
Number of computerised title plans (millions)	1.00

HM Land Registry
Key performance indicators and targets 1997–98

Indicator	Target

Number of account holder using the Direct Access service at the end of the year	550
National Land Information Service
Feasibility study of the National Land Information Service	Complete initial phases of feasibility study and report to Government by 31 December 1997

Fuller details of the agency's targets are given in its business plan, which is available from Her Majesty's Land Registry.

[1] ROCHE below 6 per cent. reflects agreement with HM Treasury to apply surplus income generated in 1993–95 (when ROCHE exceeded 25 per cent. in each year) fee reductions in 1996–99.

[2] The inflation factor for the cost per unit in cash terms is derived from the GDP indices announced by HM Treasury in December 1996.

The Court Service

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the key performance targets for The Court Service executive agency for 1997–98. [21621]

Mr. Streeter: The following table sets out the key performance targets that the Lord Chancellor has set for The Court Service for 1997–98.

The Court Service
Key performance targets 1997–98

	Indicator	Target
Quality of service	1. Average percentage of charter standards achieved	99 per cent.
Civil courts	2. Percentage of Administrative process dealt with within target time	92 per cent.
Crown court	3. Percentage of defendants whose trial commences within target time (16 weeks) or less	75 per cent.
Unit costs (civil)	4. Unit cost of an item of originating process in the civil courts	£95
Cost recovery	5. Percentage of the cost of the civil courts recovered through fees	91 per cent.
Unit costs (Crown)	6. Unit cost of a case in the Crown court	£1,926

Public Trust Office

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the key performance targets for the Public Trust Office executive agency for 1997–98. [21622]

Mr. Streeter: The following table sets out the key performance targets that the Lord Chancellor has set for the Public Trust Office for 1997–98.

Public Trust Office
Key performance indicators and targets 1997–98

Indicator	Target
1. To carry out accounting transactions within target times.	To bring to account at least 98.5 per cent. of receipts and payments transactions within turnaround targets by volume weighted performance.
2. To achieve investment targets.	To pay annually not less than the rate provided by the average of a model set of comparators for special and basic rate at 75 per cent. of special rate; on an annual basis to ensure that 85 per cent. of all measured funds perform in line or better than their model based on stock market indices; on a three year rolling basis to ensure that 80 per cent. of all measured funds perform in line or better than their model based on stock market indices.
3. To achieve charter standards.	To achieve 98 per cent. of charter standards.
4. To achieve unit costs in activity areas.	The cost per unit to be £195.65.
5. Percentage of full costs recovered.	To ensure that 100 per cent. of full costs are recovered.

Fuller details of the agency's targets are given in its business plan, which is available from the Public Trust Office.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Portcullis House (Jubilee Line Extension)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will make a statement about the progress of the Portcullis House project and the effect upon it of recent announcements concerning the delay to the Jubilee line extension. [21516]

Sir Raymond Powell: I am pleased to be able to report the progress which has been made with the design and procurement of the new parliamentary building, which Madam Speaker has agreed should be called Portcullis House. Contracts for the structure, the external envelope and all the main services have been awarded and off-site manufacture is well under way. The contractors and consultants are successfully overcoming problems which inevitably arise in such a complex building and, with good co-operation, will continue to be able to resolve them. The Committee had the opportunity recently to meet representatives of many of the firms involved. They can have no doubt of the importance that the House attaches to the building being completed on time and within budget. We were pleased to hear of the commitment and skills that they will bring to this demanding project.

As I advised my right hon. Friend the Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon) in my earlier reply, Official Report, 12 February 1997, columns 254–56, London Underground's work on the construction of the new Westminster station has not proceeded according to programme so it was not able to give possession of the site on 2 February 1997, the agreed date. Instead, there was to be a phased programme starting with the erection of the first tower crane at the beginning of May and increasing site possession from mid-May until the site was to be transferred on 29 July. Although London Underground remains confident that it will achieve the July date, the early handover has been gradually eroded. Thus, our main construction work will start at a slower pace than we had planned and this will increase the pressure on the project team to complete construction of the building in the year 2000. It will require a concerted effort by all the contractors and consultants to achieve this objective.

ENVIRONMENT

Go-karts

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to establish national guidelines in respect to the guarding of exposed rear drive shafts and disc in-running nips on go-karts; and if he will make a statement. [20538]

Sir Paul Beresford: There is no manufacturing standard or type approval for go-karts. A voluntary standard is being discussed by the European standard body CEN, committee TC 152, working group 1.

The Health and Safety Executive's national interest group for entertainment has met the go-kart manufacturers to discuss manufacturers' and suppliers' responsibilities. Further discussions are due to take place.

Cetaceans

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received with regard to the protection of whales, dolphins and porpoises in United Kingdom waters; and if he will make a statement. [20519]

Mr. Clappison: Concern about the conservation status of cetaceans continues to generate a steady stream of inquiries from the public. However, no significant representations concerning their protection in United Kingdom waters have recently been received.

The United Kingdom, as a member of the International Whaling Commission and the agreement on the conservation of small cetaceans of the Baltic and North seas, continues to be committed to the conservation of all cetaceans.

Pollution Abatement Technology

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate (a) the United Kingdom's current share of the world market for pollution abatement technology and (b) the size of that market share during (i) the next five years and (ii) the next 10 years. [20926]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Small Business, Industry and Energy on 11 March 1997, Official Report, column 136.

Metropolitan Councils (Capital Receipts)

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total current capital receipts for each of the metropolitan councils; and if he will make a statement. [20730]

Mr. Curry: The amounts of accumulated usable capital receipts at 31 March 1996 for each metropolitan council are listed in the table:

Nirex Ltd.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the advice the Nirex peer reviewers provided to Nirex in report S96-004 appendix 3 concerning the report title used in the document submitted to the review panel for initial review concerning the use of the word hydrogeological. [20996]

Mr. Clappison: I understand that the baseline report review group advised Nirex that the use of the word "hydrogeological" in the initial title proposed for the report was too general and therefore gave insufficient guidance as to the content of the report.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his review of the application by UK Nirex Ltd. to build a rock characterisation facility at Longlands farm, Cumbria; and what has been the cost of this review to his Department. [21307]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State's reasons for dismissing the planning appeal by UK Nirex Ltd. are set out fully in the decision letter which was issued on 17 March. A copy of the letter has been sent to the hon. Member. The specific cost of individual planning appeals is not available.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names and numbers of the reports prepared by the disposal safety assessment team co-ordinated by Nirex on scientific and technical issues on (a) the disposal of radioactive wastes and (b) the development of the safety analysis of the proposed repository evaluated by (i) his Department, (ii) Nirex and (iii) the UK Atomic Energy Authority. [20997]

Mr. Gummer: This information should be requested from UK Nirex Ltd. The report produced by Nirex's disposal safety assessment team on which Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's review studies were based was Nirex report 337 "Deep Waste Repository: A Preliminary Assessment of Post-closure Performance", D. E. Billington (editor), 1992, four volumes. A number of research reports containing supporting information were also reviewed.

Local Government Finance (Devon)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public money was provided to (a) Devon county council, (b) South Hams district council, (c) Teignbridge district council and (d) Torbay Borough Council in each of the past five years. [21346]

Mr. Curry: The local authorities have reported the following amounts of central Government grants in the past four years. In 1992–93, under the community charge system, revenue support grant was paid to the lower tier authorities to support the charge payer in respect of spending by all tiers, so comparable figures for the individual authorities are not available.

[2] Before the setting up of separate police authorities in 1995–96, county councils had responsibility for police services, therefore these figures include expenditure funded by police specific grant.

[3] Budget estimates.

Irrigation (Water Abstraction)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the use of abstraction licences to control the use of water for trickle irrigation. [21148]

Mr. Clappison: No licence is currently required for the abstraction of water for irrigation, except for spray irrigation. We have announced that we shall be conducting a full review of the abstraction licencing system.

Fur

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to implement European regulation 3254/91. [21328]

Mr. Clappison: The regulation can be implemented effectively only through concerted action by all EU member states. The European Commission is negotiating with the major fur producer countries an agreement by which the principles of the regulation can be implemented. The Council of Ministers has requested the Commission to introduce a fur import ban if no satisfactory agreement can be reached.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations have been made to him by other Government Departments during the last three years regarding the implementation of European regulation 3254/91. [21329]

Mr. Clappison: There have been regular contacts at both official and ministerial level between all Departments concerned with UK Government policy on this matter.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21202]

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, Official Report, column 613. Any additional information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Associations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was his Department's expenditure on housing associations in Devon in each of the past five years. [21345]

Mr. Curry: The Department provides funding to housing associations through grant in aid to the Housing Corporation. Capital expenditure in Devon through the Housing Corporation's approved development programme in each of the past four years was as follows:

1993–94: £30.2 million

1994–95: £28.8 million

1995–96: £18.8 million

1996–97: £16.9 million (forecast).

The 1992–93 capital expenditure figure for Devon cannot be separately identified from other approved development programme expenditure.

Hedgerow Regulations

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the protection afforded to the linnet under the draft hedgerow regulations. [21089]

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what protection the draft hedgerow regulations provide for the song thrush. [21298]

Mr. Clappison: The draft Hedgerows Regulations 1997, as laid before Parliament, protect hedgerows which are important in terms of their historic, wildlife or landscape value, as set out in the criteria listed at schedule 1. One of the criteria for determining the wildlife value of the hedgerow is the presence of species of birds, mammals, insects or plants within specified categories, which do not include the linnet or song thrush.

A costed action plan to halt the decline of the song thrush by the year 2000 was drawn up by the biodiversity steering group. The group is currently preparing an action plan for the linnet.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the average cost of implementing the draft hedgerow regulations for each local authority in England. [21295]

Mr. Clappison: Costs of implementing the draft Hedgerows Regulations, as laid in Parliament, together with costs relating to many other individual services, are included within local authorities' "All Other Services" standard spending assessments, but are not separately identified.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to enable the biodiversity value of a hedgerow to be measured within the evaluation period; and if he will make a statement. [21297]

Mr. Clappison: Schedule 1 to the draft Hedgerows Regulations, as laid in Parliament, sets out the criteria which local planning authorities must use to determine the importance of a hedgerow notified to them. The criteria include several relating to the value of the hedgerow for wildlife and for biological diversity.

Zinc

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his plans are for reducing the input of zinc in sewage sludge which may be spread on the land. [21149]

Mr. Clappison: The Government have accepted in its response to the report of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution on the sustainable use of soil that there should be continued action to reduce the concentration of zinc and other metals in sewage sludge. We intend to commission a further survey of sewage sludge quality in 1998. This will provide the opportunity to confirm the effect of trade effluent controls in considerably reducing metal concentrations over the last two decades and will provide a basis for assessing the need for any further steps, taking into account the potential costs and benefits.

Multi-occupancy Accommodation

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the provisions in the Housing Act 1996 relating to the inspection of multi-occupancy accommodation will come into effect. [21428]

Mr. Clappison: Most of the provisions of part II of the Housing Act 1996 relating to houses in multiple occupation came into effect on 3 March 1997. Section 73 of the Act, which imposes a new duty on landlords of HMOs to keep their property fit for the number of occupants will be introduced at a later date. A number of related statutory instruments also took effect from 3 March 1997. These are the Houses in Multiple Occupation (Fees for Registration Schemes) Order 1997, S.I. 1997/229, the Housing (Fire Safety in Houses in Multiple Occupation) Order 1997, S.I. 1997/230, the Housing (Enforcement Procedures for Houses in Multiple Occupation) Order 1997, S.I. 1997/227, and the Housing (Recovery of Expenses for Section 352 Notices) Order 1997, S.I. 1997/228.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the United Kingdom action plan for the phasing out and destruction of polychlorinated biphenyls and dangerous polychlorinated biphenyl substitutes. [21562]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I am publishing today the action plan which forms part of our strategy for fulfilling the commitment, made by the United Kingdom at the third North Sea conference at The Hague in 1990, to phase out and destroy identifiable PCBs. It is also the first step towards meeting the requirements of EC directive 96/59/EC, which will be implemented by regulations in due course.

It has long been recognised that PCBs pose an environmental threat, particularly to marine life. That is why, in 1986, we banned their sale and most uses. There are many organisations, including factories, offices, schools and hospitals, which may have equipment containing PCBs.

A key element of the action plan is that there should be co-operation between the competent authorities, companies who destroy PCBs and those who may have equipment containing them. Our proposals are designed to ensure an orderly phase-out and the most effective use of destruction capacity, in the interests of industry and the environment.

A copy of the action plan has been sent to all local authorities, education authorities, health authorities and universities throughout the United Kingdom as well as the relevant trade associations. Copies of the action plan have also been placed in the Library of the House.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an announcement about the spending plans of the Department of the Environment, Ordnance Survey and the Office of Water Services for the years 1997–98 to 1999–2000. [21653]

Mr. Gummer: I have today published the Department of the Environment's annual report for 1997, which sets out in detail the outcome of the public expenditure survey as announced in the November 1996 Budget statement, as it affects my areas of responsibility. The report shows how my Department, Ordnance Survey and the Office of Water Services have discharged their functions over the past year. It provides background on each spending programme, and sets out our achievements to date and plans for the future.

Environment Agency

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the award of costs at hearings held in connection with the functions of the Environment Agency or appeals against the agency. [21654]

Mr. Clappison: Subsection 250(5) of the Local Government Act 1972 enables the Secretary of State to make an order as to the costs of the parties at an inquiry and as to the parties by whom the costs are to be paid. Subsection 53(2) of the Environment Act 1995 applies subsection 250(5) of the 1972 Act to inquiries and other hearings held in connection with the functions of the Environment Agency or the Secretary of State's functions in relation to the agency. These include appeals over integrated pollution control authorisations and waste management licences under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, waste carrier licences under the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989, and abstraction licences and discharge consents under the Water Resources Act 1991.

The parties at these hearings are normally expected to meet their own expenses irrespective of the outcome. Costs are awarded only on grounds of "unreasonable" behaviour resulting in unnecessary expense. An award of costs does not therefore follow the event of the decision on merits.

In considering the award of costs, the Secretary of State will apply by analogy the guidance on award of costs in planning proceedings in DOE circular 8/93 (Welsh Office 23/93). The circular includes a summary of the criteria for unreasonable behaviour and advice on the general principles for awards of costs for unreasonable behaviour, general procedural requirements, and applications for costs.

Section 53 of the 1995 Act enables costs to be awarded only in cases where a hearing is held. Unlike planning proceedings, costs are not available where a hearing is cancelled due to a party's withdrawal.

Subsection 250(5) of the 1972 Act does not apply to proceedings in connection with local authority air pollution control decisions under part 1 of the Environment Protection Act 1990. Consideration will be given to seeking such provision in due course.

Council Tax Capping

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an announcement on the capping arrangements for 1997–98. [21655]

Mr. Gummer: All local authorities have now set their budgets for 1997–98. The next step in council tax capping is for the Secretary of State to announce capping principles for all authorities. However, in view of the announcement of the general election, I consider it more appropriate that decisions on capping should be taken by the next Administration. This is the approach which was adopted in 1992.

Cash Limits

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to change the 1996–97 cash limits and external financing limits for which he is responsible. [21656]

Mr. Gummer: The DOE/HC—Housing Corporation—cash limit will be decreased by £5,916,000 from £1,037,868,000 to £1,031,952,000. This reflects a switch within city challenge expenditure from funding via the Housing Corporation to funding via other single regeneration budget schemes.

The external financing limit for urban development corporations will be increased by £764,000 from £209,817,000 to £210,581,000. This reflects a transfer of an underspend of £600,000 from city challenge to Tyne and Wear development corporation's grant in aid and a transfer of £600,000 from the city challenge and single regeneration budget challenge fund programmes to the Black Country development corporation's grant in aid, both transfers allowing regeneration projects to be brought forward. The transfers will be offset by a reduction in Plymouth development corporation's grant in aid of £436,000, transferred to the urban programme and the single regeneration budget challenge fund.

The external financing limit for the urban regeneration agency—English Partnerships—will be increased by £52,883,000 from £158,082,000 to £210,965,000. This reflects a transfer of provision from English Partnerships' derelict land grant of £2,000,000, and also amends the limit to take account of the increases in grant in aid at the winter supplementary estimates of £30,883,000, and at the spring supplementary estimates of £20,000,000.

The external financing limit for the housing action trusts will be increased by £457,000, from £89,210,000 to £89,667,000, consisting of a reduction of £1,550,000 at the spring supplementary estimates and a subsequent increase of £2,007,000, transferred from estate action, city challenge and the single regeneration budget challenge fund. I draw attention to the figures for the external financing limit for the housing action trusts in my answer of 4 November 1996 to my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) Official Report, column 346. This incorrectly showed the limit rising from £878,960,000 to £879,210,000. The correct figures were £88,960,000 rising to £89,210,000.

The DOE/NT—new towns—non-voted cash limit will be reduced by £4,554,000 from minus £110,000,000 to minus £114,554,000. This reduction reflects an increase in capital receipts to the Commission for New Towns of £1,750,000 and a technical transfer of £2,804,000 to the DOE/OES—other environmental services—non-voted cash limit which is described later.

The DOE/OES non-voted cash limit will be increased £2,804,000 from £25,289,000 to £28,093,000. This reflects a transfer from the DOE/NT—new towns—non-voted cash limit to provide for supplementary credit approvals to local authorities to cover their capital contributions to the Commission for the New Towns under road cost sharing arrangements.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 4—local government and planning, England—covering sections A to F of that vote, will be reduced by £1,250,000 from £31,127,007,000 to £31,125,757,000. The decrease is the cumulative result of reductions in the payments made to the Valuation Office Agency, and in the expenses of valuation tribunals in section A—valuation services, in the grant payable to the Local Government Commission in section B—reorganisation of local government; and in the planning and minerals research programme, section D. This amount will be transferred to the DOE/LGR—local government reorganisation—non-voted cash limit for the reasons given later.

The DOE/LGR—local government reorganisation—non-voted cash limit will be increased by £1,250,000 from £105,669,000 to £106,919,000 to meet a greater than forecast demand for commutation and transitional costs of reorganisation supplementary credit approvals. The increase will be a met by the transfer from class VI vote 4—local government and planning, England—cash limit referred to above.

Some of the increases will be offset either by savings or transfers; the remainder is allowed for in the 1996–97 control total forecast outturn shown in the "Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses", Cm 3601, published on Thursday 20 March 1997.

Sellafield (Rock Characterisation Facility)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those organisations which responded to the renewed invitation to make submissions on the plans by Nirex to develop a rock characterisation facility near Sellafield, indicating the documents that each submitted. [21002]

Mr. Gummer: Letters received since the close of the inquiry, and the main reports to which they refer, are listed in the annex attached to the decision letter on the appeal, a copy of which has been sent to the hon. Member.

Wirral, South (Visits)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times he visited the Wirral, South constituency during (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [21217]

Mr. Gummer: I have made one visit to Wirral, South in the last three years, which was not on departmental business.

PRIME MINISTER

Basic Pension Plus

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on basic pension plus proposals. [19816]

The Prime Minister: The Government's proposals for basic pension plus will bring about the largest extension of personal ownership since the spread of home ownership and will provide secure pensions for the increasing number of elderly people in the next century.

Contraceptives (Minors)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has made to the petition presented to him by Mrs. Jenny Bacon, together with right hon. and hon. Members, on Wednesday 12 March, on the subject of the provision of contraceptives to minors. [21284]

The Prime Minister: My office has sent an acknowledgement. The Under-Secretary of State for Health my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Horam), will write to Mr. and Mrs. Bacon about their petition shortly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21208]

The Attorney-General: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, Official Report, columns 613–14. This gives figures of 94.3 per cent. for the Crown Prosecution Service and 92 per cent. for the Serious Fraud Office. In the case of the Treasury Solicitor's Department, 75 per cent. of invoices were paid within 30 days. The Government Property Lawyers paid all bills in accordance with contract.

Next Steps Principles

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Attorney-General how next steps principles are being applied in the Crown Prosecution Service and Serious Fraud Office. [21514]

The Attorney-General: As I announced on 27 October 1995, Official Report, column 797, to the hon. Member, the Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office are now both operating according to next steps principles. Each Department has agreed a management framework which explains how these principles, which include the introduction of new performance measures and devolution of responsibilities, are being applied in practice. Copies of the management frameworks have been put in the Libraries of the House.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Government Car Service

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what performance targets he has set for the Government car service and interdespatch service; and if he will make a statement. [21643]

Mr. Freeman: Following my announcement on 3 December, I have made arrangements for the establishment of a new agency from 1 April. It will comprise the Government car service and the interdespatch service and will be known as Government Car and Despatch Agency. I have set the following performance targets for the financial year 1997–98.

Financial

Achieve 100.5 per cent. cost recovery on an accruals basis.

Operate within a maximum deficit on the Vote of –£270,000 excluding payments for voluntary early retirement or severance.

Achieve a sales turnover of £10. 3 million.

Quality

Achieve a customer satisfaction rating of 92 per cent.

Maintain ISO 9002 accreditation for the Government car service pool, and extend it to the interdespatch service.

Efficiency

Achieve no less than 2 per cent. reduction in running costs in real terms.

Environment

Achieve an annual average of 25.5 miles per gallon for GCS and IDS fleets.

I am placing copies of the framework document for GCDA in the Libraries of the House.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those compliance cost assessments published during the latest six month period. [21644]

Mr. Freeman: Since April 1993, the Government have required Departments to prepare and publish compliance cost assessments with all proposed legislation presented to Parliament to assess the impact on business costs. This includes a special test of the impact on small businesses. Since January 1996, the responsible Minister has had to certify that he has seen the CCA and is satisfied that the regulatory proposal strikes the appropriate balance between cost and benefit.

I have presented to Parliament today a Command Paper—Cmd 3593—listing 101 CCAs published between 1 July 1996 and 31 December 1996 plus two CCAs published in June 1996 which were omitted from the previous Command Paper. Copies of the CCAs listed are available in the Libraries of the House. This is the sixth such Command Paper.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will publish guidance for Crown servants involved in the investigation or prosecution of a criminal offence referred to in his answer of 22 January, Official Report, columns 600–01, summarising the Government's response to the recommendations made by Sir Richard Scott following his inquiry into the export of arms and arms-related equipment to Iraq. [21637]

Mr. Freeman: I have today published two guidance booklets—"Giving Evidence or Information about Suspected Crimes: A Guide for Crown Servants" and "Giving Evidence or Information about Suspected Crimes: Guidance for Departments and Investigators".

The booklets provide advice on the responsibilities of Crown servants who believe that they have official information which may be relevant to the investigation or prosecution of a criminal offence. The booklets also set out comprehensive procedures for handling requests for such information from investigators, prosecutors or the defence. The availability of the booklets is being made known to all Crown servants. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21196]

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, columns 613–14.

Bletchley Park

Mr. Allason: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received concerning the purchase of Bletchley park by Admiral Sir Hugh Sinclair and its current ownership. [20674]

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of its framework document to the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate under its chief executive, Mr. Neil Borrett. The agency is therefore responding to the question.

Letter from N. E. Borrett to Mr. Rupert Allason, dated 19 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has asked me to reply to your Question regarding Bletchley Park.

PACE is responsible for the management and disposal of the part of Bletchley Park owned by the Secretary of State for the Environment.

PACE has not received any representations concerning the purchase of Bletchley Park by Admiral Sir Hugh Sinclair. We are not aware of any Government Department receiving such a representation.

The Land Certificate records that the title is registered at the Land Registry and is currently vested in the Secretary of State for the Environment and British Telecommunications Plc.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Football Trust

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps she is taking to ensure that the Football Trust can resume its grant aid programmes for football at all levels of the game. [20992]

Mr. Sproat: I have recently met representatives of the Football Trust to discuss its future funding programme. I am hopeful that a solution will be found soon that will enable the trust's grants programme to be resumed. The Government remain committed to delivering on schedule the essential football ground safety improvements agreed following the Taylor report.

Lottery Awards

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the lottery awards in excess of £100,000 which have been made to charitable bodies. [21177]

Mr. Sproat: I have arranged for a list of all awards in excess of £100,000 to charitable bodies—as defined by each distributor—to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the lottery awards in excess of £1 million which have been made for the arts. [21178]

Mr. Sproat: To date, there have been 105 awards in excess of £1 million for the Arts. I have arranged for a list to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the lottery awards in excess of £1 million which have been made for sport. [21176]

Mr. Sproat: To date, there have been 79 awards in excess of £1 million for sport. I have arranged for a list to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Crystal Palace

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement regarding the future provision of athletic facilities at Crystal Palace. [21350]

Mr. Sproat: No decisions about the long-term investment in the future of Crystal Palace national sports centre will be taken without prior consultation with the relevant sporting governing bodies. The English Sports Council have decided that the needs of athletics should be included in consideration of plans for developing Crystal Palace. However, should it ultimately be decided after consultation to change or close the athletics facilities there, this would be only after ensuring that additional facilities are provided elsewhere in London.

North West Tourist Board (Charter)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment she has made of the tourism charter issued by the North West tourist board; and if she will make a statement. [21181]

Mr. Sproat: I have seen the North West tourist board's charter for tourism. Tourism makes an invaluable contribution to the economy in the region covered by the board. Some 10.8 million visitors. including 1.2 million from overseas, came to the region in 1995, spending over £1.4 billion. The tourism industry in the region will benefit from the action plan set out in the tourism strategy "Success through Partnership" which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched on 5 February.

The English Tourist Board will help to take forward this plan through its Agenda 2000 consultation. I am sure that the North West tourist board will play a full part in the regional discussions that are being organised by the ETB, and in particular the roadshow for the north-west which is due to take place on 26 March. I have no doubt that the tourism charter will form a sound basis on which discussions can take place.

Globe Theatre Site

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage for what reason she accepted the advice of English Heritage to cover over for perpetuity the site of the original Globe theatre before archaeologists and academics had the opportunity to pursue the excavations to determine the position and the shape and size of the stage, without further consultation. [21235]

Mr. Sproat: The Globe's remains were discovered in 1989 and part of the site was subsequently excavated and fully recorded; the exposed material was protected by a temporary covering. The current development proposals do not involve any disturbance of the Globe's remains. They do, however, provide an opportunity to replace the temporary protection, and it is in respect of that work that scheduled monument consent was applied for and granted last year. In this particular case, it would not have been open to us, even if we had wished, to attach conditions to the statutory consent requiring further excavation. Leaving the Globe's remains buried will keep open the possibility of their being further investigated in the future when this can be done comprehensively and well. This approach to the remains is consistent with Government policy set out in PPG16, "Archaeology and Planning".

Listed Buildings (Ecclesiastical Exemption)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to review the ecclesiastical exemption from listed building and conservation area controls. [21611]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In implementing proposals to restrict the ecclesiastical exemption in 1994, the Government undertook that the new arrangements would be formally reviewed after two years.

My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales and I have invited Mr. John Newman, reader in the history of art at the Courtauld Institute of Art, university of London, and a former chairman of English Heritage's churches advisory committee, to conduct the review. His terms of reference will be:

> To review the operation of the Ecclesiastical Exemption (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Order 1994; in particular to establish whether there is, within each of the six denominations whose buildings retain the ecclesiastical exemption under the terms of the order, a formal control procedure for proposed works to listed churches and unlisted churches in conservation areas which provides protection for such buildings comparable with what would otherwise apply under secular controls.

Mr. Newman will start in May and aims to submit a report by September. He will be consulting the six exempt denominations, the principal heritage organisations in England and Wales and representatives of local authorities. He would also welcome comments from other interested bodies and individuals. These may be sent to him c/o Buildings, monuments and sites division, Department of National Heritage, 2–4 Cockspur street, London SW1Y 5DH.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of bills to her Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and

(b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21207]

Mr. Sproat: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 12 March 1997, Official Report, column 220.

Works of Art (Acceptance in Lieu of Tax)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will place in the Library a list of the objects and property accepted in satisfaction of inheritance tax during the financial year ended on 31 March; and if she will specify (a) the amount of tax satisfied in each case, (b) which offers carried conditions as to destination, (c) the date in each case of the recommendations received by her from the Museum and Galleries Commission for the acceptance of objects, (d) the total for the financial year of the tax thus satisfied and (e) how much of this total was covered in the public accounts by means of resort to the reserve in accordance with Government policy as announced on 26 July 1985, Official Report, column 779. [21348]

Mr. Sproat: The information requested is as follows:

Item	Tax satisfied (£)	Conditions as to destination	Date of MGC recommendations
Four paintings and silverware from Temple Newsam House	155,400.00	Conditional	16 October 1995
An archive of family papers	78,140.21	Wish	7 March 1996
Two wings of a 13th-century ivory triptych	17,500.00	Wish	11 January 1996
A collection of military medals	16,000.00	Conditional	11 January 1996
Furniture and lamps by Giacometti	80,500.00	Wish	18 October 1995
10 acres of woodland at Tadworth, Surrey	4,800.00	Unconditional	[1]n/a
Two archives of documents relating to estates in Cumbria and Somerset	9,450.00	Wish	25 January 1996
Les Andelys (painting) by Maurice de Vlaminck	48,272.69	Conditional	15 April 1996
Three Thomas Girtin watercolours and a portrait by John Opie	373,000.00	Wish	28 March 1996
A 17th-century pair cased alarm striking clock by Edward East	14,000.00	Unconditional	28 March 1996

[1] The Museums and Galleries Commission does not advise my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on offers of land. Instead, my right hon. Friend seeks advice from bodies such as the Countryside Commission.

The total expenditure in respect of the AIL scheme to date for the financial year 1996–97 is £1,733,258.90. This includes an additional payment of £78,140.21 for an archive of family papers which were accepted in 1995–96. One offer costing £608,958 was met from a call on the reserve.

Lottery Funding (Advice)

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps she is taking to ensure that groups and organisations who wish to apply for lottery funding know whom to approach for information and advice. [21647]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My Department has published a new lottery information leaflet, produced in conjunction with the national lottery distributing bodies and Camelot. The leaflet has been designed to promote understanding of the purpose and function of the lottery. It tells potential applicants who does what and how to contact them.

Two million copies of the leaflet have been printed and over one and a half million are being distributed to bodies such as libraries, citizens advice bureaux and local authorities. They will also be sent to members of business organisations such as the Lions, Rotary International, chambers of commerce and round tables. They might be able to assist groups in putting together lottery applications.

Copies of the leaflet are available from the Libraries of the House and can also be obtained free of charge from my Department, the distributing bodies and Camelot.

Museums and Galleries (Attendances)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will place in the Library the attendance figures for the financial year ended 31 March reported by the national museums and galleries for which she is responsible, broken down into the individual institutions, but including their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage change on the attendance figures for the preceding year. [21338]

Mr. Sproat: The following table lists the forecast number of visits to the 12 national museums and galleries in England for the financial year ended 31 March 1997, and the actual figures for the financial year 1995–96. The information is provided by the institutions. More accurate figures for 1996–97 will be available in July.

	Number of visits in 1995–96 (million)	Forecast number of visits in 1996–97 (million)	Provisional percentage increase/decrease over the previous year
British Museum[1]	6.1	6.5	+7
Imperial War Museum	1.31	1.23	–6

Return of Historic Objects

Mr. Legg: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is her policy on the return of historic objects in museums to countries of origin; and if she will make a statement. [21609]

Mr. Sproat: Decisions about the possible return of historic objects in museums to countries of origin are primarily matters for the governing bodies of each museum. These decisions raise complex issues of law and of general museum policy. Where there are legal constraints on disposal, the Government have no intention of legislating to remove those constraints. The Museums and Galleries Commission is currently preparing good practice guidelines on the steps that museums should take in response to the requests for the return of objects from abroad. Any director concerned about specific requests for the return of objects may wish to write for advice to the chairman of the Museums and Galleries Commission.

Library and Information Matters (Report)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she will make a report on library and information matters in accordance with her responsibilities under the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964. [21610]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have today laid before both Houses a copy of my report for 1995 and 1996.

English Sports Council

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement about the appointment of ministerial nominees to the English Sports Council in the regions. [21567]

Mr. Sproat: Further to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves) on 24 July 1996, Official Report, columns 496–97, a paper setting out the remit of the ministerial nominees to the regions of English Sports Council was agreed with the chairman of the council. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. I expect to meet those concerned shortly to discuss this.

Public Libraries (Information Technology)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she will report on the terms of reference of the working group on information technology in public libraries which was announced in "Reading: The Future". [21648]

Mr. Sproat: I have today placed in the Libraries of the House a copy of the detailed terms of reference which I have given to the Library and Information Commission's working group on information technology in public libraries, which will be chaired by Mr. Matthew Evans.

Lottery Award Information

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the national lottery awards in excess of £1 million made to heritage projects. [21568]

Mr. Sproat: To date there have been 82 awards in excess of £1 million for heritage projects. I have arranged for a list to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she expects to provide national lottery awards information based on the new parliamentary constituency boundaries. [21569]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have today provided this information to the House of Commons Library.

Flounder's Folly, Craven Arms

Sir Julian Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will take steps to ensure that funds from the national lottery are provided to shore up Flounder's folly on Callow hill, Craven Arms, Shropshire. [21372]

Mr. Sproat: Decisions on heritage lottery applications are made independently of Government by trustees of the National Heritage Memorial Fund. The fact that Flounder's folly is privately owned would, at present, rule out lottery funding. However, new powers will be introduced later in the year which will allow the NHMF to fund any worthwhile heritage project which provides public benefit and access, irrespective of ownership. Guidance, taking into account the new powers, will be issued in the autumn.

WALES

EU Funding

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 238, what cost element of each expenditure heading in "Government Expenditure and Revenue, Wales 1994–95" relates to expenditure supported by receipts from European Community institutions; where those receipts are shown in that publication; and if he will make a statement on his Department's accounting methodology for such expenditure. [20820]

Mr. Hague: Those receipts from European Community institutions which were administered by the Welsh Office, including those which passed through the Intervention Board, totalled around £220 million in 1994–95. These were applied to the agricultural programme—£167 million—and other environmental services programme—£53 million. Expenditure supported by non-Welsh Office receipts is included in the total of estimated general government expenditure in Wales but is not separately identifiable.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what factors underlie the different treatments of financial contributions of the EU in (a) "Government Expenditure and Revenue, Wales, 1994–95" and (b) "Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis 1996–97", Cm. 3201; and if he will make a statement. [20817]

Mr. Hague: No attempt is made in "Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis 1996–97" to make a territorial allocation of the UK's net contribution to the European Communities as this expenditure is non-identifiable. In "Government Expenditure and Revenue, Wales 1994–95", Wales is allocated a share based on Gross domestic product. This amounts to £53 million—4.2 per cent. of the UK's net contribution of £1,267 million.

Departmental Employees

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) permanent full-time, (b) part-time and (c) temporary employees his Department has; and how many of these in each category are employed in (i) London, (ii) Wales and (iii) elsewhere. [20740]

Mr. Hague: The number of permanent full-time, part-time and temporary staff employed by my Department are as follows:

	Full-time	Part-time	Temporary
London	24	—	—
Wales	1,875	278	226
Elsewhere	—	—	—

The figures include staff working in CADW.

Social Security Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what factors underlay the differences in the definition of social security expenditure in (a) table 5 of "General Expenditure and Revenue, Wales, 1994–95", and (b) table 7.7 of "Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis 1996–97", Cm 3201; and if he will make a statement. [20818]

Mr. Hague: The figure for non-identified social security expenditure published in table 7.7 of "Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis 1998–97" is incorrect. Her Majesty's Treasury issued an erratum slip in August 1996. The figure in table 5 of "General Expenditure and Revenue, Wales 1994–95" is correct.

Outturn Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the total outturn expenditure by his Department on purchases of goods and services during the 1996–97 financial year and the amount of this spent on goods and services purchased in Wales. [20748]

Mr. Hague: The estimated outturn for expenditure by my Department on pay and other current expenditure on goods and services for 1996–97 is £2,583 million. This is consistent with the definition used in table 3.6 of the "Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses 1997–98", Cm 3601. Information on the amount which is spent on goods and services purchased in Wales is not available.

Pharmaceutical, Dental and Ophthalmic Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the estimated outturn figures for expenditure in Wales for 1996–97 by the family health services authorities and the Dental Practice Board on (a) pharmaceutical services, (b) general dental services and (c) general ophthalmic services. [21222]

Mr. Hague: Forecast gross outturn, based upon health authority financial returns to January 1997—Dental Practice Board to February 1997—is detailed as follows:

	£ million
Pharmaceutical services	206
General dental services	72
General ophthalmic services	18

Health Service Revenue (Charges)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the estimated revenue to the national health and welfare services in Wales for 1996–97, broken down by the charges made to recipients for services in respect of (a) hospitals, (b) pharmaceuticals, (c) general dental treatment and (d) welfare foods. [21221]

Mr. Hague: There are no central records kept for hospital charges. The following table details estimated revenue by service to be achieved in this financial year:

Service	£ thousand
Pharmaceutical services	17,100
General dental services	19,300
Welfare foods	150

Glaucoma

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many prescriptions for the treatment of glaucoma were issued in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what were the net ingredient costs for each year. [21082]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information is given in the following table. Before 1993–94, figures were not available to a sufficient level of detail to identify specific treatments for glaucoma.

Number of prescription items prescribed for the treatment of glaucoma in Wales

	Number of items prescribed	Net ingredients cost (£000)
1993–94	242,000	1,761
1994–95	248,000	1,789
1995–96	258,000	1,868

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients received hospital in-patient or day care treatment for glaucoma in each of the last five years. [21083]

Mr. Jones: The information requested is given in the following table.

Number of in-patients or day cases treated for glaucoma in Wales[1]

	Number
1991–92	1,662
1992–93	1,729
1993–94	1,770
1994–95	1,633
1995–96	1,541

Health Service Contracts

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many trusts failed to meet the deadline to agree contracts with their purchasers; and how many he expects to go to arbitration. [21086]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Agreement was reached by all trusts and health authorities in the 1996–97 financial year without recourse to arbitration.

Negotiations for 1997–98 contracting round are on-going.

Health Service Salaries and Wages

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the NHS salaries and wages costs for (a) administrative, clerical and management staff and (b) nurses and midwives in each financial year from 1989 to 1995 prices. [21085]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is contained in the following table:

	(a) Administrative, clerical and management £000	(b) Nurses and midwives £000
1988–89	86,869	438,480
1989–90	94,255	434,736
1990–91	103,547	433,982
1991–92	110,285	450,356
1992–93	125,594	457,093
1993–94	147,826	440,070
1994–95	153,156	444,644
1995–96	160,654	442,604

Sources:
Financial returns and annual accounts of district health authorities, NHS trusts, family health services authorities, the Health Promotion Authority for Wales and the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

Notes:
1. Information on salaries and wages costs for family health services authorities are not held centrally, and figures for nurses and midwives cannot be disaggregated from administrative and clerical costs.
2. These figures exclude the costs of general practitioners' administrative staff as the information was not separately collected.
3. The latest version of HM Treasury gross domestic product deflators was used to uplift the figures to 1995 prices.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that (a) ecologists and (b) environmental scientists are employed by the Countryside Council for Wales; and if he will make a statement about recent redundancies of (a) and (b) at the Countryside Council for Wales. [21355]

Mr. Hague: The Countryside Council for Wales currently employs 176 full-time equivalent scientists—some of them part-timers—all of whom are qualified and/or engaged in ecological and natural science issues. The council will continue to employ suitably qualified staff to carry out its work. There have been no recent redundancies in the council, but eight staff employed on fixed-term contracts for specific work are due to leave in May when their work is completed.

General Practitioners

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many and what percentage of the current general practitioner work force in each health authority area falls within the age deciles (a) 30 to 39, (b) 40 to 49, (c) 50 to 59 and (d) 60 to 69 years. [21532]

Mr. Hague: The information is given in the following table:

Public Bodies

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to notify the economic development non-departmental public bodies in Wales of his strategic guidance for 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [21651]

Mr. Hague: I have written to the chairmen of the Welsh Development Agency, the Development Board for Rural Wales, Cardiff Bay development corporation, the Land Authority for Wales and the Wales tourist board, to inform them of many strategic targets and priorities for 1997–98. Copies of the letters have been placed in the Library of the House.

The targets I have set are demanding but will lead to private sector investment of over £700 million, the creation of over 10,000 jobs and the establishment of a network of strategic sites for further economic development throughout Wales. The majority of jobs to be created will be in those areas of highest unemployment, including the south Wales valleys and the west.

Derwen and Pembrokeshire Trusts (Merger)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those individuals and organisations who expressed (a) support for, and (b) opposition to, the merger of the Derwen and Pembrokeshire NHS trusts. [20301]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) on Monday 17 March 1997, Official Report, column 442.

Wentlooge Levels (Flood Defences)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the chairman of the Wales Committee of the Environment Agency concerning the commencement of construction of the improvement of the flood defences on the Wentlooge levels sea wall between Cardiff and Newport. [21330]

Mr. Hague: None. Construction works commenced on the first phase of improvements to the Wentlooge sea defences in July of 1996.

Asthma

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of admissions to Welsh hospitals for asthma broken down by the patient's postcode in each of the last five years. [21288]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is in the table:

[1] Estimates based on latest returns from hospitals.

Hedgerow Regulations

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what wildlife conservation research skills will be required by local authorities in Wales to apply the proposed hedgerow regulations. [21296]

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on the protection afforded to the linnet under the draft hedgerow regulations; [21087]

(2) what wildlife conservation expertise will be required by local authorities in Wales to apply the draft hedgerow regulations. [21094]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The research undertaken by ADAS to develop hedgerow evaluation criteria took account of the skills and advice currently available to local authorities.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the estimated cost to each local authority in Wales of implementing the draft hedgerow regulations. [21088]

Mr. Evans: The costs of implementing the draft regulations as laid in Parliament are included within local authorities' standard spending assessments but are not separately identified.

Schot Nippon Factory

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is now in a position to reply to the right hon. Member for Aberavon regarding the Schot Nippon factory and its financing. [21040]

Mr. Hague: I have no outstanding correspondence from the right hon. Member on this matter.

Inward Investment

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new guidelines he has issued to the Welsh Development Agency as regards financial incentives to encourage inward investment to West Glamorgan and other areas. [21041]

Mr. Hague: On 19 March I wrote to the chairman of the WDA to inform him of the agency's strategic targets and priorities for 1997–98; a copy has also been placed in the Library of the House.

The guidance stated that the agency should concentrate on the creation and safeguarding of jobs through inward investment and company development. Moreover, the benefits should be spread throughout Wales, particularly in the remaining areas of higher unemployment in the south Wales valleys and the western areas of Wales; the targets which have been set reflect that and the agency is expected to recognise, within UK and EC limits, the extra costs of locating in areas outside of the eastern M4 and A55 corridors.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what estimate he has made of the number of children who will take up the nursery voucher scheme and the voucher income accruing in each local education authority area; [21075]

(2) what estimate he has made of (a) the number of children who will take up the nursery voucher scheme in (i) the private sector and (ii) the independent sector and (b) the corresponding voucher income in each local authority area. [21050]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: On the basis of the estimates from local education authorities of the number of voucher-bearing children in their schools in the 1997 summer term, the total annual income for each authority would be:

Authority	Estimate of numbers	£ income
Anglesey	650	715,000
Blaenau Gwent	1,100	1,210,000
Bridgend	1,309	1,439,900
Caerphilly	2,148	2,362,800
Cardiff	3,400	3,740,000
Carmarthenshire	2,100	2,310,000
Ceredigion	750	825,000
Conwy	1,066	1,172,600
Denbighshire	900	990,000
Flintshire	1,763	1,939,300
Gwynedd	1,267	1,393,700
Merthyr Tydfil	750	825,000
Monmouthshire	636	699,600
Neath Port Talbot	1,640	1,804,000
Newport	1,850	2,035,000
Pembrokeshire	1,370	1,507,000
Powys	1,552	1,707,200
RCT	2,770	3,047,000
Swansea	2,535	2,788,500
Torfaen	1,081	1,189,100
Vale of Glamorgan	1,512	1,663,200
Wrexham	1,585	1,743,500

The number of voucher-bearing children in the private and independent sectors will not be known until those vouchers are redeemed. Some 450 schools, nurseries and play groups in private and voluntary sectors are registered to take part in the voucher scheme from April.

M4 (Baglan Bridge)

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 240, if he will take steps to provide facilities to segregate smaller vehicles on the occasions when it is safe for them to use the bridge. [21151]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Due to the preceding interchanges not being suitable for upgrading to provide segregation facilities, and the fact that a suitable adjacent alternative route is available, it is not proposed to provide segregation. Efforts are being concentrated on improving driver information about closure arrangements by the provision of electronic message signing.

Rivers (Pollution)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many incidents of category 1 and 2 pollution have taken place in Welsh rivers in the first (a) six months and (b) nine months of 1996–97 and in each equivalent period for the pervious five years. [21331]

Mr. Hague: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. The Environment Agency, and its predecessor the National Rivers Authority, publishes annual reports on "Water Pollution Incidents in England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library of the House. I understand that the report for 1996 is to be published shortly.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21209]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, Official Report, columns 613–14. Additional information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dental Services

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many and what percentage of NHS general dental practitioners do not currently provide crowns and bridges. [21336]

Mr. Hague: The information is not available centrally in the form requested. However, information on the number of dentists not claiming payment for the provision of crowns and bridges is shown in the table:

NHS general dental practitioners with an open contract who received a payment schedule in the period 1 October to 31 December 1996

	Number	Per cent.
Those not claiming for provision of crowns	106	12
Those not claiming for provision of bridges	351	41

NHS general dental practitioners with an open contract who received a payment schedule in the period 1 October to 31 December 1996

	Number	Per cent.
Those not claiming for provision of either crowns or bridges[1]	104	12

Note:
[1] Dentists not claiming for the provision of either crowns or bridges are also included in the individual totals for crowns and bridges shown in the table.

Baglan Hospital

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advertisements have now been issued inviting private finance initiative tenders for the Baglan hospital; and what dates have been fixed or estimated for the next stages in the contractual arrangements. [21116]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Glan-y-Mor NHS trust placed an advertisement in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 20 February 1997. Twenty-eight companies responded and will be given a prospectus and pre-qualification questionnaire by the trust. The trust is to organise a briefing day on 25 March with the intention that completed pre-qualification questionnaires be returned by early April. This will enable a shortlist of six to eight companies to be interviewed.

Care for the Vulnerable

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is in a position to reach a decision as to what steps are now to be taken in the matters regarding care for the vulnerable, referred to him by Mr. Michael Power. [21150]

Mr. Hague: I am writing to the right hon. Member today about this case.

Velodrome Cymru Centre

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the implications for the development of cycling in (a) Blaenau Gwent and (b) Wales of the decision of the national lottery panel on sport to turn down an application for funding for the Velodrome Cymru centre in the Ebbw Fach regeneration area. [21279]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many animals were exported by species from the United Kingdom in (i) 1995 and (ii) 1996 (a) with a for breeding certificate, (b) with a further fattening certificate, (c) with a for production/breeding certificate, (d) with a for slaughter certificate and (e) in total. [17826]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 27 February 1997]: For exports of cattle, sheep and pigs to other member states in 1996, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 24 February 1997, Official Report, column 76–77. It is not possible to provide the additional information in the form requested.

Table 1 shows the numbers of farm animals certified for export to other member states in 1995. Table 2 gives details of exports of poultry to other member states in 1996. The figures in these two tables are collated from the ANIMO system and remain provisional and subject to amendment.

Table 1: Numbers of animals certified for export in 1995 with breeding, further fattening/production or slaughter certification

	Breeding	Further fattening/production	Slaughter
Cattle	550	335,050	0
Sheep	5,470	967,010	89,430
Pigs	78,110	790	1,150
Poultry	[1]12,000,640	—	227,860

[1] Comprises poultry certified as breeding and production; and as day-old chicks.

Table 2: Numbers of poultry certified for export in 1996 with breeding/production or slaughter certification

	Breeding/production	Slaughter
Poultry	[1]8,086,360	437,500

[1] Comprises poultry certified as breeding and production; and as day-old chicks.
GB figures only; figures for Northern Ireland not yet available.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what training hauliers must receive in order to be authorised to conduct humane slaughter during a sea crossing. [18997]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 6 March 1997]: I am not aware of any training provided with this specific aim.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 406, if (a) a competent stockman is present on every sailing of the MV Cap Afrique from the United Kingdom when it is carrying livestock and (b) when animals are not accompanied by drivers on the MV Cap Afrique there is always a competent stockman on board. [20698]

Mrs. Browning: The attention of the operators of the MV Cap Afrique was drawn to the need to comply with the requirement for animals to be accompanied by an attendant.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy on the export for slaughter of live farm animals to another EU member state where those animals are to be slaughtered in a manner which is in breach of the Community provisions on the welfare of animals at slaughter. [20514]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 March 1997]: There is nothing to add to the statement which was given to the hon. Member on 13 March 1997, Official Report, column 356.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department takes to ensure that pigs and piglets exported through Dover do not come into contact with any cloven-hoofed animals other than bovine animals or swine for breeding or production. [20621]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 March 1997]: A local veterinary inspector certifying pigs for breeding or production for export to another EU member states must receive a declaration from the exporter or transporter confirming that they will not come into contact with other cloven-hoofed animals other than bovine animals or swine which fulfil the conditions laid down for intra-Community trade. Additionally, spot checks, including supervised loading of animals on to livestock vessels, are carried out to ensure compliance with EU rules.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pigs exported during December 1996 and January 1997 were (i) acquired and (ii) loaded at (a) an EU approved collection centre and (b) a lairage. [20619]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 March 1997]: None. All pigs exported in December 1996 and January 1997 were acquired and loaded at their premises of origin.

Red Meat (Hygiene)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he received the final report from the hygiene advice team on red meat. [19571]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 March 1997]: This report was an internal working document for the Meat Hygiene Service which summarised and provided a comprehensive baseline of standards and practices in the fresh meat industry. I received a copy on 6 March 1997, although the range of problems identified had been known to me for some time and were, and continue to be, addressed on a plant by plant and strategic basis by the MHS in accordance with ministerial policy.

BSE

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what research published after 1990 he has evaluated into the effects of the disposing of BSE infected carcases in landfill sites; [20525]

(2) what discussions he has had with scientific bodies on the disposal of BSE-infected carcases to landfill sites. [20524]

Mrs. Browning: In May last year a sub-group of the independent Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, which advises Ministers on BSE, considered the issue of BSE and the environment, including the question of disposal to landfill sites. They considered that, although the spongiform encephalopathy agent was not yet fully characterised, there was good evidence to believe that individual molecules were not infectious and that infectivity was associated with macro-molecular agglomerations indeed possibly with tissue fragments, albeit small ones. On this basis they concluded that "it was unlikely that leachate from landfill sites would present a significant risk and there was certainly no justification for taking heroic measures to excavate sites, even those which had previously been used for material such as BSE-confirmed cattle".

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the estimated cost to Government for each financial year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000 of (a) the compensation arrangements to farmers for cattle over 30 months of age which cannot now enter the food chain, (b) the payments to slaughterhouses for handling cattle over 30 months of age which cannot now enter the food chain, (c) payments to renderers for handling cattle over 30 months of age which cannot now enter the food chain, (d) the cost of storage, prior to incineration, of the rendered remains of cattle over 30 months of age which cannot now enter the food chain, (e) the cost of incineration of the remains of cattle of 30 months of age which cannot now enter the food chain, (f) the calf slaughter premium, (g) the package of aid for the renderers, (h) the package of aid for the abattoirs, (i) the package of aid to the cutting industries, (j) the feed recall scheme, (k) the additional running costs for the agriculture departments and (l) each other item of expenditure resulting from the BSE crisis; and if he will list where applicable the net EU contribution for each measure, taking account of both the United Kingdom's contribution to additional EU spending and the effect of additional receipts on the United Kingdom abatement. [18670]

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 6 March 1997]: Details requested are as follows:

BSE-related measures

		£ million
		1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the minimum temperature required (a) of the external gases and (b) inside a carcase for the safe disposal of a cattle carcase slaughtered under the over-30-months scheme. [20810]

Mr. Baldry: The independent Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, which advises Ministers on BSE has looked at current and proposed methods of dealing with waste material from the slaughter of cattle last May, including incineration. The committee concluded that incineration in plants in which temperatures reached at least 850°c, would be sufficient to ensure that there was no risk either to those exposed to the smoke plume—that is, those living in the neighbourhood or those living downwind of the plant—or in relation to the ash which would be safely disposed of in appropriately licensed landfill sites. A copy of the news release issued by this Department on 7 June 1996 to publicise SEAC's advice is in the Library of the House.

Chickens

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many chickens have been found to be dead on arrival at United Kingdom poultry slaughterhouses since 25 April 1996. [20714]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The information requested is as follows:

	Total throughput	Dead on arrival
Great Britain	580,897,449	1,144,814	to
Northern Ireland	53,303,906	137,677	28 February 1997

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many broiler chickens slaughtered in the United Kingdom since 24 April 1996 were judged to be unfit for human consumption. [20713]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The information requested is as follows:

	Total throughput	Unfit for human consumption
Great Britain	580,897,449	6,995,228	to 28 Feb. 1997
Northern Ireland	53,303,906	538,065	to 28 Feb. 1997

Offal Ban

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the inclusion of calves' brains in the specified offal ban; and if he will make a statement. [20923]

Mrs. Browning: The matter has been reviewed on several occasions by the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, which has not recommended that the specified bovine material ban should be extended in this way. This is based on the scientific evidence which shows that brains from experimentally infected calves do not harbour detectable levels of infectivity although infectivity can be detected in parts of the intestine—distal ileum—which were declared SBM as a result.

Cattle Cull

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle were slaughtered under the 30-month scheme (a) up to and including 16 June 1996 and (b) (i) from 17 June 1996 to 25 August 1996, (ii) 26 August 1996 to 31 December 1996 and (iii) 1 January 1997 to the latest available date; how many abattoirs were paid for each period; and what was the total amount paid to abattoirs (1) gross and (2) net of EU contributions for each period. [20986]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

Slaughterings under the over-30-months scheme

	Animals slaughtered[1] (number)	Abattoirs receiving payment (number)	Slaughter fees paid to abattoirs[2] (£ million)
(a) Up to and including 16 June 1996	136,901	59	5.9
(b) From 17 June 1996 to 25 August 1996	279,395	61	23.7
(c) From 26 August 1996 to 31 December 1996	716,401	66	26.2
(d) From 1 January 1997 to 7 March 1997	168,760	61	13.2
Total	1,301,457	—	69.0

[1] Includes OTMS animals slaughtered on-farm and subsequently incinerated.

[2] The slaughter fee is wholly funded by the Exchequer.

Salmonellosis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of salmonellosis have been recorded in farm animals categorised by species in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [21114]

Mrs. Browning: The Zoonoses Order 1989 requires that all isolations of salmonella from farm animals and poultry are reported. Incidents reported to this Department over the last five years are:

Year	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996 (provisional)
Cattle and cCalves	940	1,465	1,899	2,052	1,575
Sheep	106	106	188	211	227
Pigs	261	346	360	353	347
Fowl	1,447	1,295	744	841	950
Turkeys	441	327	401	277	222
Ducks and geese	453	357	133	102	86

An "incident" refers to an isolation or isolations of salmonella from either an individual animal or from one or more animals in a group on one or more occasions.

The Department has a major research programme aimed at developing measures for the control and prevention of salmonella in livestock. In consultation with the industry, the Government has issued codes of good practice which offer advice on preventing the introduction and spread of salmonella in animal feedingstuffs and poultry flocks. Further codes are in preparation.

Apples

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the dangers to human health of the use of pesticides on apples grown in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the EU and (c) other countries; and if he will make a statement. [21096]

Mrs. Browning: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) on 17 March 1997, Official Report, columns 372–73.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to promote the farming of apples in the United Kingdom without the use of pesticides; and if he will make a statement. [21097]

Mr. Boswell: There are no specific plans to promote the farming of apples without the use of pesticides. However, we are doing much to encourage organic farming which makes limited use of a very restricted range of mainly natural pesticides. There is an aid scheme which provides direct financial support for conversion, a free advice service and a dedicated research and development programme. We also fund the independent United Kingdom register of organic food standards.

Rendering Industry

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 10 March, Official Report, column 49, if he will list the rendering plants and companies which have received financial assistance under the rendering industry support scheme 1996; and how much was paid to each. [21187]

Mr. Baldry: In 1996, 18 rendering companies received support under the rendering industry support scheme 1996, which covers the period 1 April 1996 to 31 March 1997. Since January 1997, the number of companies in receipt of support has increased by four bringing the total to 22.

The companies and the locations of the plants concerned are:

Company	Location
A. Hughes & Son (Skellingthorpe) Ltd.	Skellingthorpe
A. & W. Chambers Ltd.	Huddersfield
Anglo Beef Processors Ltd.	Newry
	Shrewsbury
Canterbury Mills Ltd.	Canterbury
Croda Colloids Ltd.	Market Harborough
Duncrue Food Processors Ltd.	Belfast
Dundas Brothers Ltd.	Inverurie
Dundas Chemical Company (Mosspark) Ltd.	Dumfries
Fats and Proteins (UK) Ltd.	Lancaster
Foyle Meats Ltd.	Londonderry
Gilberts Animal By-Products Ltd.	Cheddleton
J. F. Rockett & Sons Ltd.	Huddersfield
Lisburn Proteins Ltd.	Lisburn
Lloyd Maunder Ltd.	Cullompton
McIntosh Donald Ltd.	Aberdeen
Mid Ulster Proteins Ltd.	Craigavon
P. Waddington & Co. Ltd.	Bradford
Prosper de Mulder Ltd.	Doncaster
	Exeter
	Nuneaton
	Silvertown
	Widnes
Peninsular Proteins Ltd.	Torrington
Smith Brothers (Hyde) Ltd.	Hyde
Ulster Farm By-Products Ltd.	Crumlin
William Forrest and Son (Paisley) Ltd.	Motherwell

Support under the scheme is paid on a four-weekly basis. As at 19 March payments totalling about £82 million had been authorised.

I am unable to disclose information about support paid to individual renderers for reasons of their commercial confidentiality—exemption 13 in the code of practice on access to Government information.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 10 March, Official Report, columns 49–50, if he will list the rendering plants and companies contracted by his Department to render (a) specified bovine material and (b) cattle carcases. [20958]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 18 March 1997]: Of the plants approved to render cattle by-products in Great Britain, the following are currently contracted to the Intervention Board executive agency to process over-30-month scheme cattle carcases, including their specified bovine material, in rendering lines licensed under the Specified Bovine Material Order 1996 (as amended):

Canterbury Mills Ltd., Canterbury
Dundas Brothers Ltd., Kintore
Fats and Proteins (UK) Ltd., Lancaster
Gilberts Animal By-Products, Leek
Granox Ltd., Widnes
J. G. Pears (Newark) Ltd.
J. L. Thomas Ltd., Exeter
Peninsular Proteins Ltd., Torrington
William Forrest and Sons (Paisley Ltd.), Motherwell.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21212]

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Fabricant) by the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, Official Report, columns 613–14. Any additional information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Soil Erosion

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress in combating run off and soil erosion from fields sown to maize. [21147]

Mr. Boswell: The risk of run-off and soil erosion from fields sown to maize can be significant. In response to this the Maize Growers Association, with assistance from this Department and the Environment Agency, has produced a booklet entitled "Managing Maize", which will be sent to all known maize growers next month. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 17 to 19 March; and if he will make a statement. [21564]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I represented the United Kingdom for part of the Agriculture Council in Brussels on 17–19 March and for the remainder of the period the UK was represented by my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland and officials.

The Council reached unanimous agreement on important proposals on cattle identification and beef labelling on a basis of article 43 of the treaty. The identification proposal requires the establishment of computerised systems for tracing cattle movements throughout their lives, improving cattle tagging, and a system of cattle passports similar to the one introduced in Great Britain last summer. Adoption of this proposal will facilitate the implementation of plans to develop a fully computerised database of cattle movements in Great Britain. The arrangements agreed on labelling provide for member states to decide whether or not to require the compulsory labelling of beef from the year 2000; and for the details of what information should be provided on labels under a compulsory system to be decided by the Council in the light of member states' experience between now and 1999. The labelling proposal as adopted met UK concerns to have a flexible, informative and less bureaucratic system than that originally put forward by the Commission, and this was secured in the final outcome.

The Council also agreed unanimously a proposal from the Commission determining measures and compensation relating to appreciable currency revaluations affecting farm incomes. The United Kingdom had strongly opposed the original proposal on the grounds that it discriminated against United Kingdom farmers faced with significant revaluations of the agricultural conversion rate for sterling. As a result, the proposal was substantially modified in the course of negotiation and the discriminatory elements removed on terms which fully met United Kingdom requirements.

On BSE, my noble Friend reported to the Council on progress in the United Kingdom on fulfilling the terms of the Florence agreement, and the recent submission to the Commission of a proposal for excluding meat from certified UK herds from the EU export ban. He urged the early submission of this proposal to the appropriate scientific committees, as provided for in the Florence agreement.

The Council had a first discussion of the Commission's proposals on agricultural prices for 1997–98, which include a long-standing proposal to reduce arable aid and set-aside payments. The United Kingdom endorsed the Commission's intention to achieve budgetary savings, but regretted the absence of moves to reduce agricultural support prices generally, or of proposals for the early reform of sectors such as milk, beef and cereals.

In a third structured dialogue with the countries of central and eastern Europe, the Council considered with those countries how to assist in the implementations of the EU's veterinary and phytosanitary regulations. There was agreement on the need for a better exchange of information on EU policy and legislation in this area, and for help from the PHARE programme to establish the required control and inspection facilities.

The Council discussed, at the request of France, the need for changes in the operation of the early marketing scheme for veal and the calf processing scheme. It was agreed that the beef management committee would address these issues as a matter of urgency on 21 March, and would consider inter alia a possible reduction in the rate of calf processing premium in response to a long-standing UK request.

The Council agreed some changes to the mandate of the European Commission in its negotiations with the USA on a veterinary equivalence agreement; and adopted by qualified majority—Spain, Portugal and Italy voting against—a proposal to open a malting barley quota for the USA in order to fulfil the EU's obligations under the World Trade Organisation.

The United Kingdom raised in the Council the need for an urgent report and proposals from the Commission on the welfare of battery hens, on which the Commissioner promised early action. The UK also backed a German request for the rapid submission to the Council of proposals on the transport of animals.

Livestock Cleanliness

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the document defining standards for clean livestock is to be published. [21565]

Mrs. Browning: As foreshadowed in the statement which my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food made on 12 March 1997, Official Report, columns 372–74, the existing guidance in the Meat Hygiene Service operations manual has been enhanced today to provide a pictorial guide on dirty animals and the appropriate action to take when such animals are presented for slaughter. This will reinforce to all those involved in slaughtering, as well as other sectors of farming and associated industries, what is expected of them and the controls which will apply if they do not meet the appropriate standards. This issue was included in the interim report of the expert group on E. coli being chaired by Professor Pennington.

Proposals for publicising the potential sources of contamination and how to ensure that contaminated animals do not enter the food chain are being sent to interested organisations today for comment. Once comments have been considered, the Meat Hygiene Service proposes to launch a publicity campaign.

I have placed in the Library of the House copies of the amendment to the operations manual and draft publicity material sent to interested parties.

Veterinary Medicines Directorate

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets have been set for the Veterinary Medicines Directorate for 1997–98. [21628]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have set the following targets for the Veterinary Medicines Directorate in 1997–98.

Financial Performance

1. To recover from industry and Government the full economic cost (calculated according to accruals accounting) of each of its main business activities of:
   licensing and surveillance policy work
   residue monitoring.
2. To operate within the net cash allocation as agreed by the MAFF Management Board.

Quality of Service

3. To deliver high quality policy advice to Minister.
4. To deliver high quality scientific assessment work.
5. To determine 80 per cent. of new marketing authorisations within 120 clock days;
   95 per cent. within 200 clock days.
6. To ensure that the first assessment of variations outstanding for more than 75 clock days on 1 April 1997 is completed by 31 October 1997 and that a first assessment of renewals outstanding for more than 90 clock days on 1 April 1997 is completed by 31 December 1997; and to ensure that first assessments for variations and renewals arriving after 1 April 1997 are completed within 75 and 90 clock days respectively.
7. To meet target timescales for centralised, decentralised and MRL applications under EU procedures.

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets have been set for the Central Science Laboratory for 1997–98. [21629]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The relocation of the Central Science Laboratory to the new purpose-built laboratory near York, with the subsequent closure of four major sites and several smaller sites, will be completed during the summer of 1997. In view of the major changes taking place within CSL, I have decided that during 1997–98 the baseline should be established which will allow efficiency and productivity improvements to be measured in subsequent years. I have set the following demanding but achievable targets for 1997–98 in relation to other areas:

Financial

100 per cent. recovery of full costs after allowing for relocation costs;

To achieve a net PES allocation agreed by MAFF Finance.

Efficiency

1 per cent. improvement in utilisation of productive time.

Delivery of Science

At least 90 per cent. of work completed to time and within budget;

Achieve a mean score of 3 on a scale of 0 to 5 for the assessment of customer satisfaction using the established methodology;

Proportion of project milestones achieved to be at or greater than 82 per cent. (MAFF commissioned projects).

Veterinary Laboratories Agency

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets have been set for the Veterinary Laboratories Agency for 1997–98. [21630]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have set the Veterinary Laboratories Agency the following strategic performance targets for 1997–98:

Financial Performance

full cost for all Veterinary Laboratories Agency services management with the Supply Estimates Targets

Efficiency

an overall efficiency gain of 3 per cent.

Service Delivery

85 per cent. of ROAME R and D milestones achieved

Service Quality

achievement of a satisfactory report from a Visiting Group achievement of laboratory accreditation for the Tissue Culture Section in Virology Department, the Lasswade laboratory and the Veterinary Investigation Centres.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets have been set for the Meat Hygiene Service for 1997–98. [21631]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and I have set the following targets for the Meat Hygiene Service in 1997–98.

Operational

1. To take all necessary measures to ensure full compliance by the slaughterhouse industry with The Specified Bovine Material Order 1977, The Heads of Sheep and Goats Order 1996, and other related Statutory Instruments.

Quality and Delivery of Service

2. To carry out, in collaboration with the State Veterinary Service, a review of the guidance on HAS scoring in abattoirs as set out in the Operations Manual by 30 April 1997.
3. To ensure that all MHS contract and employed OVS, Meat Hygiene Inspectors and Meat Technicians have completed a formal training programme in hygiene by 31 July 1997.
4. To ensure that by the end of 1997–98 at least 90 per cent. of abattoirs are achieving HAS scores of more than 65.
5. To implement strictly the MHS clean livestock strategy included in the Operations Manual as revised in March 1997.
6. To implement a strict prohibition on carcases showing any faecal contamination being health marked for human consumption.

Financial Performance

7. To recover from plant operators the full economic cost (calculated in accordance with the relevant charging legislation and accruals accounting and Industry charges guide) of providing the statutory health inspection and controls at fresh meat premises.
8. To recover from Government Departments, Agencies and the Intervention Board the full economic cost (calculated in accordance with the relevant charging legislation and accruals accounting) of providing agreed services or other work undertaken on their behalf.
9. To operate within the net cash allocation as agreed during the year by the MAFF Management Board.

Meat Disposal Chain

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements are being made for financial support to the meat disposal chain in 1997–98. [21633]

Mr. Baldry: Support arrangements for the rendering industry in 1997–98 have now been finalised following consultation with interested parties. These implement the previously announced policy of making up to £59 million support available to the disposal chain as it adjusts to the changed value of animal by-products. They take the form of a non-statutory scheme, the rendering industry support scheme 1997. Copies of the scheme are being placed in the Library of the House.

The scheme provides for:

Payments to individual rendering companies for the rendering of 'clean' material (i.e. excluding the products of the Over Thirty Month Scheme);

Payments to be on a depressive basis phased out over the financial year and based on the actual amount of tallow produced and of meat and bone meal disposed of;

Tallow and MBM to attract different support rates (relating to average past values), phased out over different time-scales in recognition of future values.

Individual rendering companies will be free to set charges and prices to their suppliers on the basis of commercial judgment, taking account of support. Support levels will be transparent to suppliers of animal by-products. The Office of Fair Trading will continue to keep the competitive situation within the market under review.

The scheme will be administered by the Intervention Board.

In order to inform Ministers' decisions on the design of these support arrangements, Coopers and Lybrand were commissioned to report on the prospects for recovery in the markets for renderers' products. Their report is being published and copies are being placed in the Library of the House.

Sea Fish Conservation

Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to report to Parliament on the implementation of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1992, as required by section 10. [21634]

Mr. Baldry: The primary purpose of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1992 was to make provision for the introduction of restrictions on time spent at sea. Implementing legislation in the form of the Sea Fish Licences (Time at Sea) (Principles) Order 1993 was introduced, but the policy was subsequently suspended following a legal challenge which was referred to the European Court of Justice.

Despite the European Court's endorsement of the legality of measures adopted by this House, it was decided that it would not be sensible to implement the planned arrangements for the days at sea policy for the reasons set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 25 October 1995, Official Report, columns 711–12.

In these circumstances there is nothing of substance to report and we do not propose to make any further reports to Parliament on this matter.

Butchers' Shops (Survey)

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information (a) his Department and (b) the National Meat Hygiene Service provided to the European Commission concerning the survey carried out by environmental health officers in Birmingham of bone-in beef in butchers' shops. [21237]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No information was provided to the European Commission by the Meat Hygiene Service. Information on the audit carried out by Birmingham environmental health department was included in the "Programme to Eradicate BSE in the United Kingdom" which was presented to the Commission at a Council meeting on 3 June 1996. A copy of this document was placed in the library of the House on 4 June 1996.

The audit was also referred to in the document "BSE in Great Britain, A Progress Report, May 1996" which has been sent to Commissioner Fischler. A copy of this document was placed in the Library of the House on 1 July 1996.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the results of the survey carried out by environmental health officers of butchers' shops in Birmingham. [21236]

Mr. Hogg: I understand that the environmental services department of Birmingham city council carried out an audit in May 1996 of all 350 retail butcher outlets in Birmingham to check on compliance with specified bovine material controls. A small number of alleged cases of non-compliance were found.

Birmingham city council informed the Meat Hygiene Service, which is responsible for enforcing SBM controls in licensed beef slaughterhouses, of its findings. The MHS immediately carried out a full investigation. After examination of the samples provided to the MHS, two of the alleged cases were cleared as not being SBM. The MHS was unable to identify conclusively the nature of the remaining sample tissues in view of their age and deterioration. The MHS decided the most appropriate action was to destroy the material as if it were SBM.

In view of the council survey results, MHS principal official veterinary surgeons visited all the plants which traditionally supply the Birmingham market and reinforced the importance of full compliance with SBM controls to all MHS and plant staff.

Pesticides Safety Directorate

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets have been set for the Pesticides Safety Directorate for 1997–98. [21627]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have set the following targets for the Pesticide Safety Directorate in 1997–98.

Financial Performance

1. To recover from industry the full economic cost, calculated according to accruals accounting, of its services.
2. To recover from Government the full economic cost (calculated according to accruals accounting) of its services.
3. To operate within the net cash allocation as agreed by the MAFF management board.
4. To deliver the throughput of applications and processing times set out in the table below.

Quality of Service

5. To deliver high quality policy advice to Ministers.
6. To deliver high quality scientific work.
7. To achieve IIP accreditation by October 1977.
8. To carry out a customer satisfaction survey, covering both MAFF customers and the agrochemical industry, and to achieve a satisfactory result.

Table 1

[2] Completed applications (these have no outstanding actions e.g. an approval issued or the application has been refused). These exclude withdrawals before evaluation has started.

[3] For EC applications (reviews or new active substances), completion is when the monograph is received by the Commission.

Swann Report

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he was notified of disagreements between Mr. Swann and (a) his Department and (b) the Meat Hygiene Service in respect of the contents of his report for the Meat Hygiene Service. [20039]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 13 March 1997]: On 6 March 1997.

Fur Farms

Mr. Livingstone: Toask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many times officials of the State Veterinary Service (a) carried out routine inspections of fur farms over the last 12 months and (b) observed the killing of mink and fox during the last 12 months; and what method of killing was used in each case. [21240]

Mrs. Browning: The State Veterinary Service carried out six inspections of mink farms during 1996. Killing was not observed on any of these occasions.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fox farms there are in England and Wales by county. [21239]

Mrs. Browning: There is no requirement to register fox fur farms. However, I am not aware of any in England and Wales.

Grain Store, York

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the grain store at Clifton, York, was cleared of grain; for how long it remained empty; what is stored there currently, indicating the nature of the material and tonnage stored; what proportion of the total capacity is currently in use; whether the store has been, or is being, considered for storing bovine material resulting from the cattle cull; and how much per annum the store costs his Department to run (a) when empty and (b) currently. [21108]

Mr. Baldry: Before the current cereals intervention purchasing period which commenced on 1 November 1996, the store was cleared of barley on 31 January 1996.

The store remained empty for a period of ten and a half months until mid-December 1996 when 738 tonnes of rye was allocated to the store. This tonnage has now been sold but is still awaiting collection by the purchaser. A further 190 tonnes of rye has been allocated to the store, and should be delivered before the end of March 1997.

In addition to the rye, two of the eight sheds with a storage capacity of 20,000 tonnes have been sub-let to a private contractor for the storage of sugar beet nuts. The store has a total wheat capacity of 82,350 tonnes, comprising eight sheds totalling 79,500 tonnes and 32 bins totalling 28,250 tonnes.

The store is not being considered for storing bovine material resulting from the cattle cull.

The running costs of the store, when empty, is approximately £386,600 per annum, including store management fees, opportunity rent and contribution in lieu of rates. The additional running costs for actual storage are variable depending on time of intake and discharge and volume in store; these costs are calculated on the basis of £0.80 per tonne for intake, £0.70 per tonne for discharge and £0.022 per tonne per day for storage.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food where is the grain store nearest to York which is being used to store bovine material resulting from the cattle cull. [21107]

Mr. Baldry: The nearest grain store to York used for bovine material from the cattle cull is the Government-owned store at Hemswell Cliff, Gainsborough, Lincolnshire, converted last year to store frozen product from the over-30-month-scheme.

Bovine Tissue

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances the National Meat Hygiene Service is permitted to destroy samples of bovine tissue provided to it as suspect specified bovine material. [21238]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The procedures which the Meat Hygiene Service would follow, if presented with samples of bovine tissues provided to it as suspect SBM, would depend on whether investigation showed that the samples were indeed SBM. If, following examination, the samples were discovered to be SBM, the MHS would rigorously investigate the circumstances of the case, gathering available evidence. When no longer required as part of the investigation and after appropriate photographs, the tissue would be stained and destroyed as such in accordance with the SBM order. If, following examination, the material is discovered not to be SBM, but is otherwise unfit for human consumption, the tissue would be stained and destroyed as unfit material in accordance with the Animal By-Products Regulations 1995. The MHS would undertake any relevant investigation of the provided material before destruction.

Newcastle Disease

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what (a) financial and (b) other assistance is available to farm businesses whose supply of point of lay pullets is halted by measures taken to contain Newcastle disease. [21145]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Animal Health Act 1981 makes no provision for the payment of consequential losses following an outbreak of a notifiable disease, including Newcastle disease and so such payments are made.

Directive 92/66/EEC, as implemented in Great Britain by the Diseases of Poultry Order 1994 (as amended) requires that controls on the movement of poultry are imposed in an area surrounding each confirmed outbreak of Newcastle disease. Every effort is made to limit disruption to the poultry industry consequent upon the imposition of these controls subject to the overriding need to contain the spread of disease.

Pigs (Welfare)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he plans to take to ensure compliance with the prohibition in the Welfare of Livestock Regulations 1984 on the routine tail docking of piglets. [21294]

Mrs. Browning: The State Veterinary Service enforces all aspects of the Welfare of Livestock Regulations 1994. Welfare inspections of pig farms include, where appropriate, checks on compliance with paragraph 3, part IV, schedule 3 of those regulations concerning the tail docking of piglets.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he plans to take to ensure the enforcement of the law in respect of the welfare of pigs on farms and at slaughter. [21293]

Mrs. Browning: The State Veterinary Service carries out inspections to check compliance with legislation relating to the welfare of pigs on farm. All complaints are followed up as a matter of urgency. Legislation relating to animal welfare in slaughterhouses is enforced by the Meat Hygiene Service. In both cases, any unsatisfactory conditions or practices which are found are addressed immediately, by advice or by formal enforcement action, including, where necessary, the initiation of prosecution proceedings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, how he plans to take forward the action plan on meat hygiene which he announced to the House on 12 March. [21632]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Meat Hygiene Service will be instructed to work to the performance targets which are set out in my reply earlier today to the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff). In working to these targets the Meat Hygiene Service will be giving effect to the comprehensive programme of action which I announced on 12 March. Once this range of measures has been implemented, I would anticipate repeating, if possible before April 1998, the thorough audit of hygiene standards in each individual plant which was carried out in 1995–96. For this campaign on hygiene standards to succeed, it will be essential for the industry to give full co-operation both collectively, through the Industry Forum of the Meat Hygiene Service and the Government/ Industry Group instituted by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, and in day-to-day operations in individual plants.

SCOTLAND

Scientists

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many scientists were employed by his Department and each of his Department's agencies on (a) the most recent date available and (b) for each year since 1979 on matters equivalent to those covered by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food; and if he will list each agency, service or central laboratory employing scientists on such projects. [18165]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 5 March 1997]: The number of scientists employed in the Scottish Office, including its executive agencies other than the Scottish Prison Service, are shown in the table. This includes details for (a) the most recent date available—1 March 1997—and (b) a breakdown for each year since 1979.

The agencies and branches employing staff in the science group are as follows:

(a) Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department

Food Safety and Animal Health

Freshwater Fish Laboratory

Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries

Marine Laboratory

Scientific Advisers Unit.

(b) Scottish Agricultural Science Agency

(c) Department of Health

Public Health Policy Medical Division.

(d) Education and Industry Department

Innovation and Support services.

Woodlands

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those areas of Forestry Commission woodland proposed for sale in the next three financial years in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland; indicating for each (i) its area, (ii) its approximate location and (iii) if an agreement is in place to protect public access. [19707]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 12 March 1997]: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. Gordon Cowie, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Gordon M. Cowie to Mr. Paddy Tipping, dated 20 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Scotland has asked me to reply to your Question about the sale of Forestry Commission woodlands.

The Forestry Commission's current disposals programme will continue until the end of the century, and the selection of properties for sale will accordingly be staged over that period. Advance notification of properties to be placed on the market is given in the Estates Gazette before a firm decision to sell is taken by the Commission. Copies of the Estate Gazette are to be found in the Library.

We have, therefore, not yet decided which areas we will be selling over the next three years, but I can tell you which forest areas are at present being offered for sale on the Open Market. I have indicated those where a Continued Public Access Agreement has been agreed or is under negotiation. The Commission encourages local authorities to enter into the Access Agreements it offers them but it is, of course, up to the local authorities to decide whether or not they wish to accept the offer.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total amount spent by his Department on executive search agencies for appointments to non-departmental public bodies annually since 1992. [20184]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has incurred no expenditure on executive search services for appointments to non-departmental public bodies in the period stated.

NHS Trusts (Grants)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been given in start-up grants to NHS trust hospitals since 1990. [20181]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total cost of start-up grants to NHS trust hospitals since 1990 is £8,455,000.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the HIV and (b) the drug misuse budget for each health board in Scotland in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98. [20199]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1997]: The resources available to Scottish health boards and the state hospital for HIV/AIDS and drug misuse services in 1995–96 and 1996–97 are set out in the tables. Provision of £25.659 million has been made available for these services in 1997–98, but the individual budgets have not been finalised.

Prisoners

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of criminals currently serving time for offences in Scotland were previously convicted of offences when they were aged under 18 years; and if he will make a statement. [21273]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of this question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 20 March 1997:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about what percentage of criminals currently serving time for offences in Scotland were previously convicted of offences when they were aged under 18 years. The information requested is not collected centrally.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much in public funds local enterprise companies in Scotland control. [21017]

Mr. Kynoch: In 1995–96 local enterprise companies' budgets accounted for £461.4 million—85 per cent.—of the overall budgets for the Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise network. That figure includes £43.6 million for adult training allowances paid by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise on behalf of their local enterprise companies.

Departmental Equipment (Theft)

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total value of (a) computer equipment, (b) artwork and (c) other items stolen from his Department in each of the past five years. [20447]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is available for the last three years and is set out in the table,

	Computer £	Artwork	Other £
1994–95	—	—	[1]30,208
1995–96	10,500	—	9,695
1996–97	15,000	—	2,212

[1] Includes the theft of a vehicle and the loss of items valued at £15,000 as a result of a burglary.

Crime

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many recorded (a) burglaries, (b) incidents of assault, (c) incidents of car theft and (d) other incidents of violent crime there were for each police authority in Scotland in (i) 1985, (ii) 1992 and (iii) 1996. [21277]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The tables provide the information for 1985, 1992 and 1995, the latest year for which information is available:

Loch Ewe Several Order

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce his decision in respect of the Loch Ewe Several Order application; and if he will make a statement. [21152]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The Loch Ewe Several Order was laid before Parliament on 14 March and is due to come into force on 4 April.

Glaucoma

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients received hospital in-patient or day care treatment for glaucoma in each of the last five years. [21157]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of the letter in the House Library.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prescriptions for the treatment of glaucoma were issued in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what was the net ingredient cost for each year. [21156]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information for the years 1992 to 1996 is shown in the table.

The costs shown are based on the value of ingredients before addition of dispensing fees or deduction of discount or patient charges.

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Number of prescription items	281,779	288,217	296,685	304,356	320,680
Cost of ingredients (£)	2,060,686	2,113,062	2,164,059	2,221,377	2,461,542

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients suffering from glaucoma were treated by general practitioners during (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95 and (d) 1995–96. [21158]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Hospital Trusts (Contracts)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many trusts failed to meet the deadline to agree contracts with the purchasers; and how many he expects to go to arbitration. [21161]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Agreement was reached by all trusts and health boards in Scotland on their contracts in the present financial year without the need for arbitration. Negotiations on contracts for 1997–98 are continuing and I do not anticipate any requirement for arbitration.

Hospital Waiting Times

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the median waiting times of admissions for (a) cataract operations, (b) hip replacements and (c) cardiac surgery (i) at each hospital where this operation was provided, (ii) by health authority and (iii) nationally in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [21160]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of the letter in the House Library.

Highlands and Islands Enterprise

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what (1) provision Highlands and Islands Enterprise has made to run the proposed Cairn Gorm funicular in the event of the failure of the Cairn Gorm Chairlift Company; [21191]

(2) what financial provision Highlands and Islands Enterprise has made for reinstating the cost and removal of the proposed Cairn Gorm funicular in the event of it ceasing to operate; [21192]

(3) what limit has been placed on the period within which Highlands and Islands Enterprise must find a new operator of the Cairn Gorm funicular if the Cairn Gorm Chairlift Company fails; [21193]

(4) if he will list those projects in Scotland which the Highlands and Islands Enterprise (a) has made proposals for and (b) is currently fully underwriting in the event of a failure by the existing operator. [21194]

Mr. Kynoch: These are operational matters for Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I will ask the chairman of that organisation to write to the hon. Member.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21198]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, Official Report, columns 613–14. Any additional information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Secure Unit

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to set up a secure unit in a Scottish prison; and if he will make a statement. [21037]

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The subject of the question related to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. W. E. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. George Foulkes, dated 20 March 1997:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question about whether there are plans to set up a secure unit in a Scottish prison.

Prisoners in Scotland are held in conditions appropriate to their security classification and there are no plans to set up any "special" secure units of the kind which exist in some other prison jurisdictions. At present there are relatively few security Category A prisoners in Scotland. They are held in a number of different prisons including the small units at Peterhead and Shotts Prisons. The units were set up to manage those prisoners who need for a time to be located out of the mainstream but are suitable for use by Category A prisoners as necessary. Otherwise such prisoners are integrated within the secure prison system.

Health Service Commissioner

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many full-time equivalent support staff were provided to the health service commissioner for Scotland in each year since 1992. [21055]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The posts of Health Service Commissioner for Scotland, for England and for Wales and the post of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are all held by the same person. I understand that support services for those posts are provided from a central resource and are not separately allocated.

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints were made to the health service commissioner for Scotland in each year since 1992. [21053]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The health service commissioner's annual reports show:

Year	Complaints received
1992–93	119
1993–94	133
1994–95	144
1995–96	146

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many investigations into complaints were completed by the health service commissioner for Scotland in each year since 1992. [21054]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The health service commissioner's annual reports show:

Year	Completed investigations
1992–93	9
1993–94	11
1994–95	6
1995–96	7

Fox and Mink Farms

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many fox and mink farms there are in Scotland by county. [21291]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: There are no fox or mink farms in operation in Scotland.

Cairn Gorm Funicular Railway

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Highlands and Islands Enterprise has authorisation to fund removal of the proposed Cairn Gorm funicular in the event of its failure. [21195]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend has yet to complete his consideration of the request from Highlands and Islands Enterprise for approval of its proposed financial contribution to the cost of the funicular railway project. He is awaiting further information from Highlands and Islands Enterprise on the impact of the recently agreed visitors management regime on the project's financial projections. In considering the request for approval, my right hon. Friend will wish to be satisfied as to the financial viability of the project.

Trunk Road Projects

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the trunk road projects proposed by his Department which have not yet started in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–00; and if he will indicate the estimated cost of each project in each financial year. [21542]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table.

Project/proposed construction start	Estimated expenditure 1997–98 £	1998–99 £	1999–2000 £
1997–98
M6 DBFO[1]	2 million	2 million	11 million

[1] DBFO—Design, Build, Finance and Operate.

Class Sizes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils are in classes of 40 or over at (a) primary and (b) secondary level in each Scottish local education authority. [21541]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: There are no classes with 40 or more pupils at either primary or secondary level in Scotland.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many families in each housing authority area in the constituencies of (a) Roxburgh and Berwickshire and (b) Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale have been on waiting lists for local authority tenancies in each of the years 1979, 1983, 1987, 1991, 1993 and any subsequent years for which figures are available. [21544]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information requested is not held centrally.

Health Board Funding

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the public expenditure general allocation uplifts and parity adjustments for all health board areas in Scotland for 1997–98. [21539]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: General allocation uplifts and parity adjustments for 1997–98 are as follows:

Health Board	General allocation uplift £000	Parity adjustment £000
Argyll and Clyde	8,994	–789
Ayrshire and Arran	7,584	3,303
Borders	2,318	–839
Dumfries and Galloway	3,255	–876
Fife	6,748	–1,291
Forth Valley	6,090	–2,481
Grampian	9,727	921
Greater Glasgow	21,127	–5,473

Lanarkshire	10,582	4,865
Lothian	14,424	–663
Orkney	434	253
Shetland	508	473
Tayside	8,353	–2,215
Western Isles	784	–123

Homelessness

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many households were registered as homeless in the constituencies of Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale and Roxburgh and Berwickshire in (a) 1979, (b) 1983, (c) 1987, (d) 1991, (e) 1993 and (f) each subsequent year for which figures are available. [21528]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The available information relates to local authorities and not to parliamentary constituencies. It is published in the Scottish Office series of housing statistical bulletins—bulletins HSG/1992/3, HSG/1995/7, HSG/1996/4. These are available in the House Library.

Small Town Initiative

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the extra resources which will be granted to Hawick as a result of inclusion in the first round of Scottish Enterprise's small town initiative. [21547]

Mr. Kynoch: The expenditure on projects and programmes to benefit Hawick in the context of the small towns initiative have yet to be finalised. At this stage, it is not possible to determine the extent of any additional resources which may be required.

Scottish Borders Enterprise

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the budget made available to Scottish Borders Enterprise for the past five years for which figures are available. [21543]

Mr. Kynoch: The allocation of budgets to its local enterprise companies is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Farm Enterprises

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total amount of money paid from UK and EU funds to farm enterprises in Roxburgh and Berwickshire and in Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale for the last five years for which figures are available. [21537]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information required could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

House Building

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of houses built in the constituencies of Roxburgh and Berwickshire and in Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available broken down into different kinds of tenure, and indicating how many were built by (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) other social rented sector providers. [21540]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The available information, which relates to local authorities and not to parliamentary constituencies, is set out in the table. Information by tenure is not available.

Local Government Staff Commission Report

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the local government staff commission (Scotland) report; and if he will make a statement. [21606]

Mr. Kynoch: The staff commissioners submitted their report to my right hon. Friend on 10 March 1997. I am placing copies in the House Library today.

Scottish Agricultural Science Agency

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the performance of the Scottish Agricultural Science Agency against its targets for 1996–97; and if he will make a statement on the targets for 1997–98. [21605]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The agency is on course to meet the key performance targets for 1996–97 which I set out in my written answer of 3 April 1996, column 276).

For 1997–98 I have set the agency the following key performance targets:

- Fulfilment of the Service Level Agreement with SOAEFD within the running costs allocated to SASA for 1997–98;
- Continuation of the programme of consultation with all customers on the quality of the work done by the Agency;
- Completion of 93 per cent. of all scientific tests and analyses within the timescales set by customers;
- Improvement in the unit cost of the scientific work of the Agency (cost per direct scientist hour);
- Publication of a comprehensive review of the scientific work of the Agency 1992–97.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20894]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information required is as follows: (a) Those executive NDPBs which are covered by the Companies Acts are required to publish annual reports and some other bodies are also required by the statute creating them to publish annual reports. These bodies are:

- Hannah Research Institute
- Macaulay land Use Research Institute
- Moredun Research Institute
- Rowett Research Institute
- Scottish Crop Research Institute
- Scottish Conveyancing and Executry Services Board
- Scottish Council for Educational Technology
- Scottish Hospital Endowments Research Trust
- Scottish Seed Potato Development Council
- Scottish Vocational Education Council.

In a number of other cases the body is required by statute to produce an annual report on the exercise and performance of its functions for the Secretary of State which he is obliged to lay before Parliament. These bodies are:

Crofters Commission
Highlands and Islands Enterprise
National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Scotland
National Museums of Scotland (required by statute at least every three years, but voluntarily produces an annual report)
National Galleries of Scotland (required by statute at least every three years)
Deer Commission for Scotland
Royal Botanic Garden Edinburgh
Scottish Agricultural Wages Board
Scottish Enterprise
Scottish Examination Board
Scottish Homes
Scottish Legal Aid Board
Scottish Natural Heritage
Scottish Tourist Board
Scottish Hospital Endowments Research Trust
Parole Board for Scotland
Scottish Environment Protection Agency
Scottish Children's Reporter Administration.

Some bodies publish reports on a non-statutory basis. They are:

Accounts Commission for Scotland
National Library of Scotland
Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland
Scottish Arts Council
Scottish Community Education Council
Scottish Film Council
Scottish Further Education Unit
Scottish Higher Education Funding Council
Scottish Medical Practices Committee
Scottish Sports Council.

(b) Those bodies which are required to publish their annual accounts under the terms of the Companies Acts, the Friendly Societies Acts or other legislation are:

Hannah Research Institute
Macaulay Land Research Institute
Rowett Research Institute
Scottish Crop Research Institute
Scottish Council for Educational Technology
Scottish Hospital Endowments Research Trust
Scottish Seed Potato Development Council
Scottish Vocational Education Council.

Some bodies are required by statute to submit annual accounts to the Secretary of State who is obliged to pass them to the Comptroller and Auditor General. He is then obliged to lay copies of them before Parliament. These bodies are:

Accounts Commission for Scotland
Highlands and Islands Enterprise
National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Scotland
National Library of Scotland
National Galleries of Scotland
National Museums of Scotland
Royal Botanic Garden Edinburgh
Scottish Enterprise.

Some other bodies hold registers which are available for inspection at the offices of the body. These are: Highlands and Islands Enterprise—financial decisions relating to registered interests are also published in the annual report, National Museums of Scotland, Scottish Arts Council, Scottish Enterprise—summary is also available at time of annual report and financial transactions involving board members published in annual report and accounts, Scottish Film Council and Scottish Children's Reporter Administration. The Scottish Environment Protection Agency is currently preparing a list of members' interests which will be available to the public on request.

Scottish Office Quangos

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the (a) total running costs of Scottish Office quangos and (b) the running costs of each such quango in each year since 1992, showing in each case the total (i) salary bill and (ii) expenses paid to members; and what were the salary and expenses paid to each individual in respect of quango membership in the latest year for which figures are available. [19231]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about payments made to individual board members of executive non-departmental public bodies in Scotland in 1996–97 is given in "Scottish Office Appointments to executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies and NHS Bodies at 1 December 1996", copies of which were placed in the House of Commons Library on 23 December 1996. All NDPBs publish annual reports which are also placed in the House of Commons Library. With one exception, these include such information as is available on running costs, staff salaries and members expenses. The exception is the Crofters Commission, for which the available information is:

	1992–93 £'000	1993–94 £'000	1994–95 £'000	1995–96 £'000
Running costs	1,307	1,397	1,607	1,446
Staff costs	936	1,037	1,046	1,006
Board member expenses	37	33	47	34

Employment

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) male and female employees were engaged in (i) manufacturing and (ii) agriculture and fishing in the constituencies of (x) Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale and (y) Roxburgh and Berwickshire in the (1) 1979, (2) 1983, (3) 1987, (4) 1991, (5) 1993 and (6) the last year for which figures are available. [21545]

Mr. Kynoch: Information for the parliamentary constituency areas requested is available for years since 1984 in which the census of employment has been held, and is shown in the table:

Employees in employment

Parliamentary constituency	1980 Standard industrial classification				1992 Standard industrial classification
	[3]1984	1987	1989	1991	[2]1991	1993	[1]1995

Agriculture and Fisheries	200	200	200	100	—	[4]—	[4]—

[1] The annual employment survey replaced the biennial census of employment in 1995.
[2] Data are available under the 1992 standard industrial classification only from 1991. Some employees previously classified under manufacturing in the 1980 SIC are classified under services in the 1992 SIC. For 1991, both bases are given for manufacturing for comparison.
[3] A census was not held in 1983; 1984 figures are provided.

Public Relations

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department has spent on public relations (a) in actual terms and (b) in real terms in each year since 1979. [20540]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not available in the form requested.

TRANSPORT

Whitburn Street Relief Road, Bridgnorth

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the application for a transport supplementary grant in respect of the Whitburn street relief road in Bridgnorth; and if he will make a statement. [21174]

Mr. Watts: Shropshire county council included this scheme in its transport policies and programme bid for resources in the local transport capital settlement for 1997–98. The scheme was part of the council's general minor works programme. It was not possible to meet any bids under that heading. All resources for 1997–98 under the TPP system have been allocated. The county council could bid for additional supplementary credit approval should any surplus SCAs become available for redistribution.

A46 Dualling

Sir Kenneth Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce the start of construction work on the dualling of the A46 between Lincoln and Newark; and if he will make a statement. [21173]

Mr. Watts: I have instructed the Highways Agency to complete the statutory procedures as rapidly as possible. The next stage would be to make the compulsory purchase order. This would enable preparation to begin for the invitation of tenders for building the scheme, with a view to start of works in 1999.

Westhaven AH190 (Sinking)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he plans to issue to fishing vessels working in the same vicinity as that in which the Westhaven AH190 sank. [20842]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 19 March 1997]: I have asked the chief executive of the Marine Safety Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Andrew Welsh, dated 20 March 1997:

Navigational information is promulgated and regularly updated through Admiralty charts and Notices to Mariners. Information about pipelines, cables and other seabed installations is set out on specialist charts produced for the fishing industry by the Sea Fish Industry Authority.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date responsibility for the collation and dissemination of information about the emergency position indication radio beacon for the Westhaven AH190 was transferred from the Marine Safety Agency to the Coastguard agency; what were the procedures for that transfer; and in what form the information was expressed. [20844]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 19 March 1997]: I have asked the chief executive of the Marine Safety Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Andrew Welsh, dated 20 March 1997:

Responsibility for collation and dissemination of information about Emergency Position Indicating Radio Beacons, including that for the 'Westhaven AH 190', was transferred from the Marine Safety Agency (MSA) to the Coastguard Agency (TCA) on the 24 February 1997. Training on registry procedures was given by the MSA to TCA during week commencing 13 January 1997. Both written and verbal instruction on the mechanisms for EPIRB registration was provided during this period.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what (a) co-ordination and (b) staff training took place in the Coastguard service related to the transfer of emergency position indication radio beacon administration from the Marine Safety Agency; and what staff and at what grades worked at the Coastguard agency on the date of the transfer. [20845]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 19 March 1997]: The transfer of the emergency position indicating radio beacon—EPIRB—administration from the MSA to the Coastguard Agency took place on 24 February 1997.

(a) The co-ordination of the transfer was conducted by the appropriate operations managers of both organisations at a series of meetings and involved:

(i) conversion of the MSA database to operate under Coastguard software;

(ii) one month period "double entry" on the MSA and Coastguard databases to ensure consistency in the input process;

(iii) the familiarisation and training of Coastguard staff on the database system.

(b) Coastguard staff training related to the transfer covered a five-day period from 13–17 January 1997, and included:

(i) familiarisation on the background to the EPIRB registration database;

(ii) the general administration regime of the database;

(iii) data input training.

In addition to the "double entry" period during which Coastguard staff improved their familiarity with the database, they also received appropriate software application training on 13 December 1996.

The Coastguard staff involved with the EPIRB database on 24 February were:

One coastguard station officer; one administration assistant; one part-time clerk/typist.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when the emergency position indication radio beacon documentation was received from the skipper of the Westhaven AH190; when it was processed; on what dates it was logged; and which authorities dealt with it; [20841]

(2) what actions his Department intends to take in respect of the loss of the Westhaven AH190; and what is the planned time scale for these actions; [20843]

(3) at what time and what date the emergency position indication radio beacon of the Westhaven AH190 was activated; [20846]

(4) what steps he intends to take to implement compulsory registration of emergency position indication radio beacons on fishing vessels. [20847]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 19 March 1997]: The loss of the fishing vessel Westhaven is the subject of an inspector's inquiry carried out by the marine accident investigation branch. Investigations of this type should be completed within 12 months of the date of the accident. Interim recommendations can, however, be made at any time if there are urgent lessons to be learned emerging from the investigation.

The registration of the Westhaven's emergency beacon is being examined by the Marine Safety and Coastguard agencies. The results will be passed to the MAIB.

M25 (Widening)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will announce his decision on proposals to widen the M25 between junctions 12 and 15. [21515]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend has decided that the proposals for widening the M25 between junctions 12 and 15 should go ahead. A copy of the decision letter is being sent to all those who commented on the environmental statement and copies have also today been placed in the Library.

A36 (Improvements)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the A36 is classified as a strategic route; an what are the current plans for improvements along the A36. [21245]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 20 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the programme for improvements on and the classification of the A36 route.

The A36, (together with the A46), is an important strategic trunk road route linking Southampton and Bristol. There are two major schemes in the trunk road programme for the A36–the proposed Salisbury Bypass and the proposed Codford-Heytesbury Improvement. There are also two network enhancement projects in the programme for the A36: Phase 2 of the West Wellow traffic calming scheme and the preparation of the third and final phase of the scheme, to include Whinwhistle Road junction.

Departmental Management Plans

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out his Department's management plans for the coming financial year. [21641]

Sir George Young: I have today published my Department's departmental plan 1997. This outlines how my Department will use its administrative and other resources in 1997–98 and the following two years. Copies of this document are available in the Library. It will be supplemented by the business plans to be published by each of my Department's executive agencies.

The transport report 1997, presented to Parliament today, sets out expenditure plans for the Department of Transport, the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and the Office of the Rail Regulator, for the period 1997–98 to 1999–2000. Copies are available in the Library.

London Underground (Service Objectives)

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has set quality of service objectives for London Underground Ltd. to achieve in 1997–98. [21624]

Mr. Bowis: As is customary at this time of year, I have today written to Peter Ford, the chairman of London Transport, setting London Underground's quality of service objective for the year ahead. The table shows those objectives, London Underground's objectives for 1998–99, which were set last year as part of a package of three-year objectives, and its interim targets for this year and its performance to the beginning of January.

Performance is to be measured using the mean average of the 13 periods of the year in question.

London Transport Finance

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changed he has made to London Transport's external finance limits for 1996–97. [21638]

Mr. Bowis: The external finance limits for London Transport for 1996–97 has been increased from £939 million to £964 million to reflect arrangements for paying grant in respect of Croydon tramlink. The external finance limit for crossrail has been formally reduced from £14 million to 6 million, reflecting my right hon. Friend's answer of 2 April 1996, Official Report, column 130, about the project.

Electrically Powered Vehicles

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he proposes to take following the public consultation on measures to extend the concessions for electrically assisted pedal cycles to a wider range of electrically powered vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [21625]

Mr. Bowis: None. A significant number of respondents to the consultation exercise were not in favour of amending the existing regulations. After careful consideration of the submissions my Department received and of the implications to road safety should these concessions be extended, I have decided not to amend the present regulations.

Transport Council

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Transport Council held in Brussels on 11 March. [21639]

Sir George Young: The Transport Council met in Brussels on 11 March. My noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping represented the United Kingdom.

The Council agreed a common position on a draft directive to continue for another four years the present arrangements harmonising the start and end dates of summer time throughout the Community. The UK asked for a statement to be entered in the Council minutes recording our preference for a recommendation. The Council and Commission agreed a joint declaration on the need for a study of the effects of summer time.

The Council reached political agreement, by qualified majority, on a draft regulation to continue Community funding for combined transport projects aimed at encouraging the transfer of traffic from road to more environmentally friendly modes of transport. The UK said that it would vote against the text when formally adopted, on the basis that the regulation was not an effective way of achieving this aim. Germany also opposed the measure. This was the only item on which the question of a vote arose.

The Council also reached political agreement on an amendment to directive 92/14 on aircraft noise. Its main effect is to update the list of aircraft from developing nations exempted until 2002 from the phase-out of some noisier aircraft. A provision allowing noisier aircraft to be banned from two of the three Berlin airports—Tempelhof and Tegel—was agreed.

The Council agreed terms of reference for a high-level group of officials to consider possible Community involvement in the European Organisation for the Safety of Air Navigation—EUROCONTROL—and in a European aviation safety authority. The group will make a progress report to the June Transport Council.

The Council held an orientation debate on proposals for the introduction of a new digital tachograph. The issue was remitted to the Committee of Permanent Representatives—COREPER—for further consideration.

The Council held a further orientation debate on a draft directive on taxation and road user charges for heavy goods vehicles, and received a report from the Commission on proposals aimed at taking forward the Community's negotiations with Switzerland on transport issues. Conclusions were agreed instructing COREPER to pursue discussions on the draft directive, noting that agreement should be reached in conjunction with the conclusion of land transport negotiations with Switzerland.

The Council agreed a resolution calling on member states introducing new electronic fee collection systems for road pricing to use the technical standards developed by CEN—the European standardisation body.

The Council was invited to comment on a draft resolution, to be considered further by the ECOFIN Council, calling on the Commission to study the effects on the transport sector of levying a duty on aviation fuel.

The Commission gave progress reports on transport research, public-private partnerships for trans-European network projects and trans-European rail freight freeways.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what targets he has set for the executive agencies in his Department. [21640]

Sir George Young: The following key targets have been set for the Department of Transport's executive agencies. The targets are set out in the agencies' business plans, which include management objectives, performance indicators and key tasks, where appropriate to the agencies' business. Copies of the business plans are placed in the Library.

The key targets for the Coastguard agency are to:

discharge the Secretary of State's responsibility for maritime search and rescue, through its own or dedicated assets by:

maintaining a 24 hours SAR co-ordinating capability within, and including the coasts and shoreline of the UK search and rescue region;

arriving on the scene of coastal incidents with 30 minutes of the call, 95 per cent. of the time; and by getting helicopters airborne within 15 minutes of a notification to "scramble" during the daytime and 45 minutes at night;

maintaining a comprehensive radio reception and transmission coverage of the UKSRR which enables SAR co-ordination action for the duration of incidents without interruption or equipment malfunction; testing contingency plans for major maritime SAR incidents, particularly those involving passenger carrying vessels and merchant shipping and the offshore oil and gas industry by undertaking at least five live exercises, and additionally as required by the shipping industry to exercise passenger vessel emergency plans with SAR services; and by conducting 34 SAR awareness seminars;

maintain a fully operational 24-hours channel navigation information service covering the Dover strait traffic separation scheme, in concert with the appropriate French authorities; discharge the Secretary of State's responsibility for dealing with marine pollution by the maintenance of a national contingency plan and in particular:

activate the plan within 30 minutes of notification of an incident;

commence action at sea to deal with a spill of dispersible oil within four hours of notification of an incident; undertake one national and six local exercises in conjunction with local authorities, oil companies and harbour authorities; and review the national contingency plan by 31 March 1998; increase the number of prosecutions undertaken for marine pollution offences in conjunction with the Marine Safety Agency;

complete the installation of a computerised SAR incident recording system by 31 July and to report to the Department by the end of October 1997 on suitable targets for effecting a reduction in the number of incidents.

To implement phase 2 of the proposed reorganisation of the HM Coastguard operational structure "Focus for Change" by 31 March 1988.

The key targets for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency are to:

make an efficiency gain (on the basis of an overall efficiency index) of 2.5 per cent.;

complete successfully 495,000 vehicle excise duty enforcement cases by imposition of penalties and to recover, through penalties and duty from licensing, at least £2.85 for every £1.00 full cost spent by DVLA on vehicle excise duty enforcement; deliver 95 per cent. of ordinary driving licences to customers within 10 workings days, 95 per cent. of vocational driving licences within nine working days, and 95 per cent. of first provisional driving licences within nine working days.

deliver 95 per cent. of registration documents for new vehicles within 12 days, and 95 per cent. of changes to vehicle registration documents within 13 days; deliver answers to 96 per cent. of written inquiries within eight working days, and to answer 90 per cent. of telephone inquiries within 30 seconds; ensure that at least 98 per cent. of driving licences, 98 per cent. of registration documents for new vehicles, and 97 per cent. of changes to registration documents are issued without a DVLA induced error.

The key targets for the Driving Standards Agency are to:

achieve an average annual return on capital employed on statutory activities of 6 per cent. of net assets, over the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 2002;

increase the weighted average of fees by no more than the increase in prices as measured by the retail price index over the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 2000, and by no more than the retail price index minus 1 per cent. in both 2000–01 and 2001–02; achieve a national average waiting time for car and practical tests of six weeks and make appointments available within 10 weeks at 99 per cent. of permanent test centres; aim to keep 99.5 per cent. of all practical test appointments which are in place two days prior to the appointment date;

answer practical test booking office telephones so that:

four of five calls will be answered on their first dialling attempt;

90 per cent. of calls which have been answered by an automatic system will then be answered by a human voice within 30 seconds; and an average of no more than 4 per cent. of calls in the queue will be abandoned before being answered; achieve a national average waiting time for theory tests of two weeks; ensure theory test booking office telephones are answered so that:

incoming lines will not be engaged for more than 30 seconds in any week; and 95 per cent. of all calls which have been answered by an automatic system will be answered within 10 seconds by a human voice.

The key targets for the Highways Agency are to:

improve performance against the road user's charter targets set out in annexe C of the agency's business plan where achievement levels were below target in 1996–97 and improve systems for monitoring performance;

implement the six Whitehall standards set out in the citizen's charter fifth anniversary White Paper (As set out in annexe C of the business plan); achieve 80 per cent. of the milestones relating to national schemes, design build finance and operate projects and other private finance initiatives listed in annex D of the business plan, or other milestones as may be substituted or added by Ministers;

complete 85 per cent. of the network enhancement and network control projects listed in annex E of the business plan;

complete 1,400 lane kilometres of surface renewal, including reconstruction, overlays, resurfacing, inlays and surface dressing (including resin-based surface treatments and retexturing); assess the structural capacity of all remaining structures by March 1998 to ensure that from 1 January 1999, all vehicles up to and including the new 40-tonne maximum gross weight standard can use all structures supporting trunk roads and other important routes over trunk roads; and complete 4,400 general inspections and 2,150 principal inspections; safeguard 126 structures for use by 40-tonne vehicles; contribute to the Government's target of reducing road casualties by one third by 2000 (compared to the annual average for 1981–85) by ensuring that accident rates between 1996 and 1998 on the motorway and all-purpose trunk road network do not exceed 21 accidents involving personal injury for every 100 million vehicle kilometres of travel and by completing 180 local safety schemes; publish congestion monitoring information, including national road network assessment system maps and TrafficMaster data; publish, as part of the agency's annual report, information about and activities covered by the agency's environmental strategy, for new schemes and network management and maintenance activities, demonstrating that the agency has given full weight to environmental issues. The information will quantify specific environmental effects and will detail measures taken to reduce the impact of roads on the environment, as indicated in annex F of the business plan;

develop revised efficiency indicator(s) by 30 June 1997; ensure applications to the national roads scheme committee in 1997–98 to increase the cost of schemes are not to exceed 2 per cent. of the total programme value;

complete a risk analysis, and obtain client agreement to the risk estimate and referral points for those national schemes listed under the preferred route announcement;

Order publication, public inquiry and award of contract milestones in Annex D of the business plan.

The key targets for the Marine Safety Agency are to:

reduce the accident rate of UK merchant ships on a three-year rolling average;

reduce the number of deaths of crew and passengers on UK merchant ships on a three-year rolling average;

reduce the accident rate of UK registered fishing vessels on a three-year rolling average; reduce the number of deaths on UK registered fishing vessels on a three-year rolling average;

ensure that the rate of merchant ship losses in the Red Ensign fleet remains below the world fleet rate on a three-year rolling average;

reduce the number of Red Ensign registered vessels detailed by other flag states as a percentage of the number inspected under port state control arrangements on a three-year rolling average;

undertake port state control inspections of 25 to 30 per cent. of foreign-registered ships visiting UK ports; increase the number of prosecutions undertaken for Marine Pollution Convention offences, in conjunction with the Coastguard Agency; ensure that at least 60 per cent. of available time is spent on core activities.

The key targets for the Vehicle Certification Agency are to:

achieve a net unit cost target of £74.96; have at least 98 per cent. of approval certificates issued error free;

ensure that where errors do occur in certificates, corrected documents are issued within three working days in 95 per cent. of cases; have at least 98 per cent. of invoices issued error free;

ensure that where errors do occur in invoices, corrected documents are issued within three working days in 95 per cent. of cases; audit at least 50 per cent. of VCA's approved quality procedures.

receive a satisfactory appraisal report on the agency's technical performance from the Department of Transport's chief mechanical engineer.

The key targets for the Vehicle Inspectorate are to:

meet the requirements on levels and types of activity laid down in the memorandum of agreement on each road enforcement transport scheme;

develop a target for the 1998–99 financial year that will reflect effective provision of a statutory testing service to the industry, taking account of customer survey feedback; for 1997–98, to continue to achieve current test measures, as specified in the business plan; meet the quality and general effectiveness levels as specified in the business plan measures; devise a comprehensive and qualitative system for assessing customer satisfaction against which the performance of the agency can be judged; make an efficiency gain (on the basis on an aggregated cost efficiency index) of 2 per cent;

break even while achieving an average 6 per cent. rate of return on capital, over the period 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1998; improve staff awareness and satisfaction as measured through the annual survey; secure the long-term development of the organisation through working for the investors in people award, implementation of an information systems strategy, and commencement of the MOT computerisation project.

Sefton Eurogateway Regional Challenge

Sir Mark Lennox-Boyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress with the trunk road aspects of the Sefton Eurogateway regional challenge. [21642]

Sir George Young: I am pleased to say that the Highways Agency will make its contribution of £770,000 to the Eurogateway project by funding the environmental improvements to the A5036 in 1998–99. This should now enable the project to go forward.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made with regard to the provision of roads supporting the channel tunnel rail link. [21215]

Mr. Watts: I have instructed the Highways Agency to proceed as rapidly as possible with trunk road schemes which support the channel tunnel rail link. A number of key decisions have been taken. These include:

Following approval by Royal Assent of the £170 million A2–M2 widening between Cobham and M2 junction 4, work is to proceed on preparation of the contract documentation with the aim to invite tenders for a design and build contract in the spring of 1998 with a view to a start of works in 1999.

Work is to begin on the next stage of developing the £70 million A2 widening scheme between Bean and Cobham, which will comprise two phases, with the Highways Agency launching the selection process for the design agent(s).

In association with the Bluewater development, work started last November on widening the eastbound carriageway of A2 between A296, Watling street and A2260 Pepperhill. Tenders have been received for the second stage of those works—adding two replacement slip roads and upgrading the third to the B255 Bean junction—programmed to start later this spring. Both contracts together will cost some £5 million and are being funded almost entirely by the developer.

Work is to proceed on the next stage of the £34 million A2–A282 Dartford improvement, with the Highways Agency starting the selection process for the Design Agent.

The Highways Agency has also identified a number of small-scale measures to improve safety, such as improved signing, white lining and merge areas on junctions between Pepperhill and Cobham, which will be introduced in the shorter term at a cost of about £30,000. Work on some of these has already begun.

The Highways Agency expects to announce the successful design agents for the A2 schemes later this year. This will allow the Agency to continue work on these important schemes which, will remove congestion and traffic delays that can occur, particularly during peak periods and in the summer.

A49 (Improvements)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for improvements to the A49 trunk road at its intersection with the A489. [21175]

Mr. Watts: I have allocated funds for the Highways Agency to develop plans to improve the layout of the A49–A489 junction by providing a separate lane for traffic turning right off the trunk road. The proposal includes realigning the trunk road carriageway and widening the Stretford bridge over the River Orny south of the junction.

Recently, advance warning signs have been improved to make the junction more conspicuous and help reduce accidents. The agency is also considering the possibility of improving visibility at the junction without prejudicing the main scheme. The agency expects its design agents, Shropshire county council, to issue a report on this at the end of March.

London Underground (Northern Line Improvements)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) stations and (b) interchange stations on the Northern line were improved in each of the past three years; and which stations will be improved in 1997–98. [21079]

Mr. Bowis: Improvements to London Underground's Northern line stations are an operational matter for London Underground. However, I understand the position to be as follows:

Heathrow Airport Terminal 5 Inquiry

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 419, (1) if he will furnish the reply given to the hon. Member for Thurrock in respect of the Heathrow terminal 5 inquiry to the inspector, Mr. Roy Vandermeer; [21226]

(2) if it is intended to revise the statement of Mr. T. Dockerty of the Department of Transport given to Mr. Roy Vandermeer on 27 February in respect of the Heathrow terminal 5 application; [21225]

(3) what mandate Mr. Dockerty of the Department of Transport had to give evidence at the inquiry into Heathrow terminal 5. [21230]

Mr. Watts: I will arrange to let the inspector of the Heathrow terminal 5 inquiry have a copy of the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Thurrock which appeared in column 419 of the Official Report on 17 March. There is no intention to revise the statement by Mr. Dockerty to the inquiry on 27 February.

Mr. Dockerty is a project manager in the Highways Agency, which acts for the Secretary of State for Transport at the inquiry. He is charged with representing the Secretary of State on a wide range of surface access matters, including evidence about the draft highways orders.

A36 (Salisbury Bypass)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold a planning conference into the proposed A36 Salisbury bypass. [21247]

Mr. Watts: No. Public consultation on three alternative routes for the bypass in 1988 showed overwhelming support for a route to the south of the city. This resulted in the selection of the published route which was the subject of year-long public inquiry held between 20 April 1993 and 27 April 1994. The inspector recommended in favour of the published route with one modification to take it further away from housing at Harnham on the south-west outskirts of the city.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the evidence submitted from the statutory agencies into the environmental impacts of the proposed A36 Salisbury bypass; and if he will announce a timetable for further consultation on this evidence. [21246]

Mr. Watts: Written representations by English Nature, English Heritage and the National Rivers Authority were made publicly available during the 1993–94 public inquiry into the proposed bypass. None of these bodies nor the Countryside Commission appeared at the inquiry to object to the proposed bypass. The report on the public inquiry was published on 29 October last year when my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport announced that they were minded to confirm the draft orders to authorise construction of the bypass subject to their further consideration of certain specified matters.

Since then, English Nature, the Countryside Commission and the Environment Agency have been consulted in the course of reviews of the bypass which my right hon. Friends instructed the Highways Agency to carry out before they made a final decision on the scheme. The Highways Agency report on these reviews was placed in the Library on 17 March. It included the responses to the agency. The agency's report by the bodies they consulted will now be sent to interested parties to allow them an opportunity to comment. These comments will be taken into account in reaching a final decision on the bypass along with other representations received since last October's announcement. Six weeks are to be allowed for comments on the agency's report.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received from the Wiltshire area (a) for and (b) against the proposed Salisbury bypass since the start of the public inquiry. [21244]

Mr. Watts: The inspector who held the public inquiry reported objections to the bypass from some 300 sources, 20 of which were subsequently withdrawn. In addition, there were 280 pro-forma objections and four petitions of objection. He reported support for the bypass from 40 sources and one petition of support. He also reported that publication of objectors alternative routes attracted support for the published proposals from 75 additional sources.

Between the close of the inquiry and the announcement on 29 October last year that my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment were minded to confirm the draft orders authorising construction of the bypass a further 166 representations were received which included some 120 general objections to the bypass and three letters of support. Since the announcement on 29 October, a further 2,771 representations have been received of which 2,599 are pro forma postcards and letters. Of these representations, 802 are for the bypass and 1,956 against. The majority of representations are from the Wiltshire area.

British Rail Passenger Companies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each former British Rail passenger company (a) the estimated value of the assets, (b) the sale price, (c) the levels of subsidy to be paid for those years for which information is available and (d) the length of the subsidy period. [20981]

Mr. Watts: The asset value of the former British Rail train operating companies at the point of sale was a matter for the British Railways Board. The TOCs were each sold at a net asset value of £1—that is assets net of all liabilities. Subsidy levels to be paid for each franchise by franchise year are set out in my answer of 31 October 1996, Official Report, columns 241–42; and my answers to the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) on 13 January, Official Report, columns 118–19 and 27 February, Official Report, columns 294–95.

Railfreight Distribution

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the amount of the subsidy paid to English, Welsh and Scottish Railways following the sale of Railfreight Distribution and the length of time this subsidy will be paid; [20917]

(2) if he will list the estimated value of the assets of Railfreight Distribution; [20918]

(3) if he will list the income received by the Exchequer following the sale of Railfreight Distribution; [20919]

(4) if English, Welsh and Scottish Railways Holdings Ltd. will be allowed to operate through the channel tunnel without payment being made by the company; [20920]

(5) if his Department will be making payments to Eurotunnel as part of the financial arrangements made following the sale of Railfreight Distribution; [20921]

(6) if English, Welsh and Scottish Railways have been allowed a pensions holiday as part of the financial arrangements following its purchase of Railfreight Distribution; [20914]

Mr. Watts: The financial terms of the sale will be made known after sale completion.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the companies which bid to purchase Railfreight Distribution. [20922]

Mr. Watts: Bids were received from English, Welsh and Scottish Railway Holdings Ltd. and from a consortium led by Management Consortium Bid Ltd.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what basis the sale of Railfreight Distribution requires the approval of the European Commission. [20911]

Mr. Watts: The Commission has been notified of the offer for sale under article 93(3) of the treaty.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the total cost of advisers, consultants and legal advice of the sale of Railfreight Distribution. [20912]

Mr. Watts: The sale of Railfreight Distribution has not yet been completed.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff are currently employed by Railfreight Distribution; and at what location. [20913]

Mr. Watts: The number of staff currently employed by Railfreight Distribution is 1,182, based principally at Allerton, Birmingham, Crewe, Derby, Dolland's Moor, Mossend, Paddington, Saltley, Tinsley, Trafford Park, Wakefield, Wembley and Willesden.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if English, Welsh and Scottish Railway Holdings Ltd. has applied for a safety case for (a) new locomotives and (b) rolling stock. [20915]

Mr. Watts: English, Welsh and Scottish Railway is discussing with Railtrack a prospective route acceptance safety case for its new Class 66 locomotive.

British Railfreight Companies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the former British Railfreight companies (a) the estimated value of the assets, (b) the sale price, (c) the amount of subsidy to be paid to the purchaser and (d) the length of the subsidy period. [20916]

Mr. Watts: The answers are as follows:

(a) The price for each sale reflects the value to the purchaser of the assets and liabilities of the company.

(b) The gross proceeds for each of the former BR freight companies were as follows:

Rail Express Systems Ltd.: £24.2 million;

Loadhaul Ltd., Mainline Freight Ltd. and Transrail Freight Ltd.: £225.15 million;

Freightliner (1995) Ltd.: £5.39 million.

(c) and (d) None of those sales involves subsidy. Freightliner is receiving track access grant of up to £75 million over five years.

The sale of Railfreight Distribution has yet to be completed.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21200]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, Official Report, columns 613–14. Additional information could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was his Department's expenditure on roads in each of the past five years. [21347]

Mr. Watts: The information is as follows:

1991–92: 2,635

1992–93: 2,859

1993–94: 3,099

1994–95: 2,933

1995–96: 2,703.

A34

Sir Patrick Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve the A34 in Great Wyrley in the South Staffordshire constituency; and if he will make a statement. [21189]

Mr. Watts: The Highways Agency will start construction on the first phase of the A34 Great Wyrley traffic calming scheme in 1997–98.

M6

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his plans for improving the M6 between junctions 11 and 16; and if he will make a statement. [21232]

Mr. Watts: We now intend to widen the M6 motorway between junctions 11 and 16 to dual four lanes by adding one lane to each side.

Seventy per cent. less land will be needed, greatly reducing the impact of adjacent land and the local environment. A high standard of environmental measures will also be provide, including noise mounds and landscaping. Many properties close to the motorway will benefit from reductions in noise and 10 properties will be spared from demolition. Along with these benefits, we have also saved over 40 per cent. of the cost of the original scheme.

To minimise congestion and diversion during construction and future maintenance, we have devised an innovative method of providing continuous hard shoulders at bridges. This will allow three lanes in each direction to be maintained for 90 per cent. of the time during the works. Most existing bridges will be retained, reducing disruption during construction to local communities.

Widening will help to keep traffic moving and will encourage use of the motorway instead of less suitable local roads.

The previous draft orders are being withdrawn.

London Taxi Fares and Fees

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about London taxi fares and fees. [21463]

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has made an order increasing London taxi fares by 4 per cent. with effect from Saturday 26 April. The new tariff will be:

Initial minimum charge: £1.40—for the first 483 m (528.4 yd) or 108 seconds.

Then 20p for each additional 241.5 m (264.2 yd) or 54 seconds until the fare exceeds £9.00 fare represents a journey of about 6 miles.

Once the fare exceeds £9.20p for each 161 m (176.1 yd) or 36 seconds.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has decided that there will be no change in the Public Carriage Office's fees for a London taxi driver's licence—£87 for a three-year licence—or in the annual fee for licensing a London taxi—£78.

A249 Iwade to Queensborough Improvement

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his letter of 14 March to the hon. Member for Faversham, when he confirmed the publication of the draft compulsory purchase order for the A249 Iwade to Queensborough improvement scheme; what is the hoped for start date for the construction of this project; and how this date will be affected if the procedures are foreshortened by the absence of objections. [21153]

Mr. Watts: I have instructed the Highways Agency to give this scheme high priority.

The draft compulsory purchase order has been published today, 20 March. The future progress of the scheme depends upon the satisfactory completion of the remaining statutory procedures, including a public inquiry should one prove necessary. If a public inquiry is required the earliest possible start of works would be in the year 2000. If no objection were received and a public inquiry then became unnecessary, the timescale might reduce by several months.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ireland (Diplomatic Status)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Irish participants (a) from the Anglo-Irish secretariat at Maryfield and (b) involved in the talks at Castle buildings have been granted diplomatic status; and what level of immunity from arrest and criminal charges this gives. [21004]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: None in either category. The officials in question have not therefore acquired any level of immunity from arrest and criminal charges as a result of diplomatic status.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will hold discussions with his counterparts in Russia, Belarus and Ukraine to ascertain if returned asylum seekers facing a charge of desertion from the Army can be tried in a country other than that to which they are returned; [21319]

(2) if he will hold discussions with his counterparts in Russia, Belarus and Ukraine to ascertain if returned asylum seekers facing a charge of desertion from the Army are entitled to the benefit of civilian legal advice; [21321]

(3) if he will hold discussions with his counterparts in Russia, Belarus and Ukraine to ascertain if returned asylum seekers facing a charge of desertion from the Army would be tried in open court; [21320]

(4) if he will hold discussions with his counterparts in Russia, Belarus and Ukraine to obtain their opinions on claims of the forcible abduction of asylum-seekers from Germany while awaiting the opportunity to provide intelligence to NATO officers; [21322]

(5) if he will hold discussions with his counterparts in Russia, Belarus and Ukraine on the penalties potentially faced by asylum seekers deported by a member of NATO who face charges of desertion from the Army after their return to those countries. [21318]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have no plans at present to hold discussions with the Russian, Belarusian or Ukranian Foreign Ministers on these matters.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will hold discussions with his German counterpart on the obligations to asylum seekers who face maltreatment on return to their country of origin and who have provided intelligence information to the benefit of the United Kingdom as a member of NATO; [21317]

(2) if he will hold discussions with his German counterpart on the deferral of deportation orders against asylum seekers in Germany who face deportation to Russia, Belarus or Ukraine until it can be established whether any of those asylum seekers were given indications of asylum in the course of interrogation by intelligence officers reporting to NATO or members thereof. [21316]

Mr. David Davis: Our understanding is that the German authorities have yet to take a decision on the status of the former Soviet Army officers but are considering the issue sympathetically. The British embassy in Bonn has drawn the public interest in this subject to the attention of the German Government. We continue to follow the matter closely. The practice of successive Governments has been not to comment on intelligence matters.

Russian Prisons

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the conditions prevailing in Russian prisons. [21327]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have made no separate assessment of the conditions, but follow closely the work of the Russian presidential commission on human rights, the Council of Europe, and non-governmental organisations, in this area.

On 25 February, Vladimir Kartahkin, head of the presidential commission on human rights launched a report on conditions in Russia's prisons, which found "grave violations . . . and inhuman conditions". On 3 March, the Prosecutor General, Yuri Skuratov, warned of a "social explosion" unless urgent measures were taken. He highlighted overcrowding and the rising incidence of illness, especially tuberculosis,in prisons and remand centres.

These assessments are supported by independent human rights NGOs such as Human Rights Watch/Helsinki.

A programme for reforming the penal system has been adopted, but the lack of funds is a continual brake on progress.

Foreign Students

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many foreign students have benefited from English language training funded by the British Council in each of the last 10 years; and how much has been spent on such training in each of these years. [21216]

Mr. Hanley: The British Council spends a large proportion of its grant-in-aid in supporting teacher training and other projects which aim to improve the quality of English teaching in state education systems overseas. In 1995–96 this amounted to £17,500,000 or 16 per cent. of grant-in-aid. Figures for expenditure in other years are not readily available; neither are numbers for individuals, although in east and central Europe alone approximately 30,000 teachers benefited in the year 1995–96.

The Council does not teach English in this country. It does administer English language training in the UK for foreign students funded by the Overseas Development Administration's technical co-operation training programme, the FCO's Chevening scholarships programme, multilateral aid agencies and the council's own grant-in-aid. Overall figures for the last three years are as follows:

395 students: £1,998,000.

1995–96

471 students: £2,459,000.

1994–95

520 students: £3,114,000.

These figures include fellowships funded by the Council from its government grant-in-aid as follows:

1996–97

17 students: £63,600.

1995–96

34 students: £161,000.

1994–95

54 students: £247,000.

Figures for previous years are not readily available.

During the past three years the British Council has also delivered English courses to 330,000 students in its language teaching centres overseas, which are all self-funding. The total number of students attending these courses over the last 10 years has been 960,000. This has been at no charge to the taxpayer.

St. Helena

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason the Government of St. Helena has refused to renew the immigration permit of the Swedish national, Mr. Mikael Olsson. [21051]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) on 17 March 1997, column 394.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 394, what are the rules which govern the length of stay permitted to a visitor on St. Helena; and what guidance has been issued to the immigration officer on the application of these rules, with particular reference to extensions. [21190]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The Immigration Ordinance 1972 controls immigration into St. Helena. The immigration officer is guided by the St. Helena Government's immigration policy, which came into force on 1 July 1993, and permits that genuine visitors other than those who own homes in St. Helena or arrive there by yacht.

> "will be granted a permit to enter and remain on the Island for a period not exceeding three months. The period may be extended for further periods not exceeding three months up to a total of one year."

Bahrain

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 11 March, Official Report, column 151 if he will make a further request for British embassy consular access to Mr. Yasser A. Al-Sayegh; and if he will make a statement. [21070]

Dr. Liam Fox: Our embassy in Bahrain will not be making a further request for consular access. The Bahraini authorities have stated that they consider Mr. Al-Sayegh to be a Bahraini national. He has family living in Bahrain.

China

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the value of British exports to China in each of the last five years. [21211]

Mr. Hanley: The value of British merchandise exports to China in each of the last five years was:

1996: £738.5 million

1995: £824.4 million

1994: £844.9 million

1993: £739.5 million

1992: £429.9 million.

Mrs. Tasmeen Ahmed

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects a decision will be taken on the application by Mrs. Tasmeen Ahmed, Ref. IMM D7103, to the United Kingdom post in Islamabad to join her husband in the United Kingdom; if all required documents have been received by the post; and if he will make a statement. [21074]

Dr. Liam Fox: I have asked our High Commission in Islamabad to provide me with a detailed account of the position. Thereafter I will send the honourable Member a substantive reply as soon as possible.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21203]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, c. 613–14. Any additional information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Visas

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will grant visas to Miss Enoucha Mohamed Salem and Mr. Salah Moustapha, representatives from the Saharawi Youth Union, Ujsarso, for the period from 21 March to 1 April. [21120]

Dr. Liam Fox: Miss Salem and Mr. Moustapha attempted to submit entry clearance applications to our entry clearance section in Algiers. However, it offers a very limited service, because of the local conditions. Miss Salem and Mr. Moustapha have therefore been advised to apply in Tunis, the entry clearance post designated to handle Algerian applications. No decision can be taken until they or their application have been accepted and reviewed.

Russia

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the proportion of Russian (a) soldiers and (b) officers fleeing the Russian armed forces who are threatened with imprisonment in Russia. [21326]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have no reliable information on which to base a sound estimate.

Peto Institute

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the agreement between the United Kingdom and Hungarian Governments concerning the extension and refurbishment of the Peto Institute in Budapest. [21570]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Under an agreement in 1991 with the Hungarian Government, the Government made a contribution of £1.75 million towards the cost of building a new international Peto Institute in Budapest to be brought into operation by 1996. It has not proved possible to use this money for the purpose originally intended. The Government have instead now agreed a proposal from the Hungarians that these funds—approximately £2 million including interest accrued—should be applied to extend and refurbish an existing institute building in return for substantial benefits for UK citizens. These benefits include guaranteed numbers of places for British children receiving conductive education at the institute and for British students receiving professional training; reductions in fees for British children; and access on a cost basis to a guaranteed proportion of new family and student accommodation. The institute will continue to assist with the development of conductive education in the UK. A new intergovernmental agreement incorporating these benefits and appropriate safeguards for the implementation of the project will be signed later this month by the British ambassador in Budapest and a representative of the Hungarian Government.

Estonia

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the negotiations between Estonia and Russia on the delimitation of their border and on the implications for Estonia's aspirations for integration into the European Union. [21571]

Mr. Rifkind: I welcome recent progress in the Estonia/Russia border negotiations; I hope that the positive steps taken by the Estonian Government will lead to early agreement. If for reasons outside Estonia's control there are further delays, I see no reason why they should obstruct Estonia's progress towards membership of the European Union. I raised this with Mr. Primakov when I saw him on 28 February.

Hong Kong

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to publish the 1996 annual report on Hong Kong. [21572]

Mr. Hanley: The report was published today and a copy has been placed in the Libraries of the House. The report includes a foreword written by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary. I commend it to the House.

Arms Embargoes

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the arms embargoes currently implemented by the United Kingdom and their scope; and if he will make a statement. [21573]

Mr. David Davis: The United Kingdom currently enforces 17 arms embargoes. Under the United Nations charter, we have a legally binding obligation to enforce arms embargoes imposed by the Security Council under article 41 of the charter. Other embargoes are imposed on a national basis or following agreement within the European Union or the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe, formerly the CSCE.

Under UK law, binding UN embargoes are implemented by prohibiting the export of goods and technology on the military list which forms part III to schedule 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended by the Export of Goods (Control) (Amendment No. 2) Order 1996. In addition, the supply of such items from the UK or supply abroad by UK-registered companies and nationals is prohibited by Orders in Council under the United Nations Act 1946. From time to time, the contents of the military list may change, for example, to reflect technological advances or continuing international efforts to counter the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. Orders in Council extend such embargoes to the Crown dependencies and the dependent territories. A licence is required for each export or supply from the UK or abroad by a UK-registered company or national.

National embargoes and those agreed in the EU and the OSCE prohibit only the export of goods covered by the embargo. With the exception of the embargoes on China and Iran, the UK interprets the scope of all such embargoes to cover goods and technology on the military list as defined above.

Companies are free to submit applications to export goods to any embargoed destinations. The Department of Trade and Industry, as the licensing authority, normally refuses such applications where the goods come within the scope of the embargo. But in exceptional circumstances the DTI might decide, after consultation with advisory departments, to grant a licence to export such goods to an embargoed destination, for example for humanitarian purposes.

The UK has an end-use—or catch all—control under which any goods may be brought under control if there is knowledge or grounds for suspicion that they might be used for activities linked to the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction or missiles for their delivery. But other goods, which are not normally controlled, do not become subject to control solely because they are to be used by the military, whether or not the destination concerned is subject to an embargo.

There are currently six binding UN arms embargoes:

Angola[1], Iraq[2], Liberia[3], Libya[4], Rwanda[5] and Somalia[6].

There are currently seven EU embargoes:

Afghanistan[7], Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia[8], Burma[9], China[10], Nigeria[11], Sudan[12] and Zaire[13].

The UK currently implements two embargoes as a result of decisions by the OSCE:

Armenia[14] and Azerbaijan[15].

There are currently two national embargoes:

Argentina[16] and Iran[17].

I shall keep the House informed of current arms embargoes and their scope on a yearly basis. All new embargoes or any amendments to existing embargoes will be announced at the time. I shall also shortly be laying in the Library of the House a list of all UK policy commitments to control strategic exports, including embargoes. An update version will be laid in the Library annually—or more frequently if policy changes require a revision. This statement will also be used to inform British industry.

Footnotes:

[1]Implemented in the UK on 1 October 1993. Products covered by the scope of the embargo can be supplied to the Government of Angola under licence, as long as they are imported through certain named points of entry into Angola;

[2]Implemented in the UK on 9 August 1990 as part of comprehensive trade sanctions;

[3]Implemented in the UK on 22 July 1993;

[4]Implemented in the UK on 15 April 1992 as part of a range of sanctions (following an EU arms embargo imposed on 14 April 1986);

[5]Implemented in the UK on 24 June 1994. The embargo does not apply to the sale or supply of arms and related material if under licence to the Government of Rwanda. But it does cover the sale or supply of arms and material to persons in States neighbouring Rwanda (i.e. Burundi, Tanzania, Uganda and Zaire) if that sale or supply is for the purpose of the use of such arms or material with Rwanda;

[6]Implemented in the UK on 22 July 1993;

[7]Implemented in the UK on 17 December 1996;

[8]Implemented in the UK on 26 February 1996. This embargo does not extend to transfers of equipment needed for demining activities;

[9]Implemented in the UK on 29 July 1991;

[10]Implemented in the UK on 26 June 1989 (although a national embargo was announced on 6 June 1989). In the absence of agreement amongst EU partners on its scope, interpretation of the embargo was left to national discretion. As announced on 4 April 1995, the UK interprets this embargo to include:

> lethal weapons such as machine guns, large calibre weapons, bombs, torpedoes, rockets and missiles;
> specially designed components of the above, and ammunition;
> military aircraft and helicopters, vessels of war, armoured fighting vehicles and other such weapons platforms;
> any equipment which is likely to be used for internal repression.

[11]Implemented in the UK on 20 November 1995 (although a national embargo was announced on 11 November 1995);

[12]Implemented in the UK on 15 March 1994;

[13]Implemented in the UK on 7 April 1993;

[14]Implemented in the UK on 28 February 1992;

[15]Implemented in the UK on 28 February 1992;

[16]Implemented on 3 April 1982;

[17]Implemented on 1 March 1993. The scope of this embargo also covers items entered in Group O in Annex 1 of European Council Decision 94/942/CFSP on the export of dual-use goods, as amended. There are two exceptions to this embargo:

> goods essential for the safety of civil aircraft and air traffic control systems;
> radioactive material in the form of sources for medical equipment and deuterium labelled compounds for medical use.

Licences for any equipment (including the exceptions to the complete ban mentioned above) are not approved where there is knowledge or reason to suspect that it would go to a military end-user or be used for military purposes.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the Government have made of recent Franco-German proposals in the intergovernmental conference on defence. [21574]

Mr. David Davis: Her Majesty's Government are a strong advocate of improved practical co-operation on defence among European countries. The decisions of the Berlin North Atlantic Council in June 1996 to support the development of the European security and Defence identity within NATO provide a sound framework for such co-operation, permitting the creation of militarily coherent and effective forces capable of operating under the political control and strategic direction of the Western European Union using NATO assets and capabilities when appropriate. Her Majesty's Government remain opposed to proposals to change the situation set out in the Maastricht treaty whereby the Western European Union elaborates and implements decisions and actions of the Union which have defence implications, and to proposals to subordinate the Western European Union to the European Union and to introduce a commitment to the eventual merger of the Western European Union and the European Union. Her Majesty's Government are firmly committed to the principle that decisions with defence implications taken by the European Union shall be taken by unanimity. It is opposed to flexibility arrangements within the European Union which could lead to a group of countries taking on collective defence commitments within a European Union framework which would undermine collective defence within NATO. Proposals along these lines, such as those put forward by the French and Germans, would undermine the development of the European security and defence identity within NATO.

Asylum and Immigration Appeals

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department has taken in response to the recommendations made by Dame Elizabeth Anson in her reports as the independent monitor of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993. [21645]

Dr. Liam Fox: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs sets great store by Dame Elizabeth's report, and, following annual publication, circulates guidance to all entry clearance posts to ensure that her recommendations are implemented. All entry clearance staff are expected to read the report. My officials in the UK examine Dame Elizabeth's recommendations in detail, and change procedures where necessary.

The independent monitor rightly considers that improved training will contribute significantly to improvements in our entry clearance operations. Acting in response to her reports, we have significantly broadened the scope of our training of entry clearance staff. Training courses and guidance have been introduced to develop the skills of entry clearance managers, locally engaged entry clearance support staff and interpreters. In her 1996 report Dame Elizabeth expressed her satisfaction with the improvements we have made to the training of our entry clearance managers and officers.

We have also worked hard to meet the improved administrative standards set by the independent monitor. Increased access to IT is a continuing priority, and improvements we have made are already paying dividends. Administrative systems designed to speed up, and improve the quality of, the entry clearance process, such as the preliminary assessment system and automatic reviews of refusals, have been introduced and improved after recommendations in the independent monitor's report.

It is inevitable that some recommendations cannot be enacted immediately. This is true of those concerning applications by elderly relatives and couples seeking infertility treatment. However, work is in hand on both, as a result of which guidance to staff will be amended.

Dame Elizabeth wrote in her 1996 report:"I am satisfied that in the three years I have monitored the standards and performance of the system of granting and refusing temporary visas there has been a general improvement in the whole process of applying and being granted or refused a visa." I know that Dame Elizabeth also is satisfied that entry clearance staff are acting within the law, and in accordance with their obligations under the citizen's charter, in the discharge of their responsibilities. We take heart from these acknowledgments of our efforts, and will strive to meet the independent monitor's recommendations in the future.

United Nations

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of the United Nations; and what discussions he had during his recent visit to Washington. [21646]

Mr. Rifkind: The United Kingdom is fully committed to a strong and effective United Nations in pursuit of the objectives set out in the charter. The United Nations plays a vital role in helping maintain international peace and security, and in promoting democracy, human rights, international law and economic and social progress around the world. As we approach the 21st century, we shall want to use the United Nations increasingly to help to achieve that partnership for sustainable human development about which I addressed the general assembly last September. The new global challenges such as climate change, loss of biodiversity, and threats to the environment and to natural resources because of population pressures on present patterns of production and consumption, will require the international community to agree policies and to work out practical solutions through international co-operation. The United Nations has some unique advantages for this.

We welcome the commitment of the new United Nations Secretary General, Kofi Annan, in setting the United Nations on the path of reform, so that it can better measure up to these challenges. When he visited London last month the Prime Minister and I were impressed by his determination to give reform a high priority. We support him in his plans to secure tighter budgeting, greater management efficiency and the elimination of overlap between different UN bodies.

But to succeed the United Nations needs not only to reform, but to be able to rely on the financial resources which member states have voted to it. I raised with a number of US Congressmen during my visit to Washington on 9 and 10 March our concerns on this score. At the end of 1996 the United States owed the United Nations some US $1.3 billion, which is approximately two thirds of total arrears due. This backlog of unpaid obligatory financial contributions is severely disabling the United Nations from working properly and from carrying out the policies voted by the member states. It also means that countries contributing to UN peacekeeping operations such as India, Bangladesh and the United Kingdom, which is currently owed £40 million, do not get their debts paid. I made it clear in Washington that this failure to honour financial obligations under the UN charter does the cause of UN reform no good and causes resentment among friends and allies. I know that President Clinton is committed to solving this problem. We need a new and fairer system of UN financing based more closely on the principle of capacity to pay and on the assurances that all member states will in future pay in full, unconditionally and on time. Once the problem of arrears has been dealt with, the British Government hope that it will be possible speedily to complete the process of UN reform and thus to relaunch the United Nations on its urgent new agenda.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Defence Equipment (Export Licences)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a list of all export licences relating to defence equipment (a) granted and (b) refused in (i) 1991 and (ii) 1992. [19699]

Mr. Nelson: Statistics of export licence applications refused during 1992 were included in the annual report of my Department for 1993, copies of which were placed in the Library of the House. It is the intention that statistics of export licences relating to defence equipment issued during 1992 will also be placed in the Library of the House in due course. Information in respect of 1991 is not directly accessible in the same form and at present there are no plans to place that information in the Library of the House.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many tonnes of oxide spent nuclear fuel have been (a) sheared and dissolved and (b) reprocessed in the thermal oxide reprocessing plant since March 1994; what reports on the operational process at THORP are provided to his Department by British Nuclear Fuels; and what restrictions are placed on the disclosure of operational details of THORP at Sellafield. [20455]

Mr. Page: BNFL recently stated that since March 1994 approximately 680 tonnes of spent nuclear fuel has been successfully sheared and dissolved and that by the end of March this year it is expected that the same amount will have been reprocessed. The disclosure of operational details are a matter for BNFL subject to meeting the relevant regulatory requirements. My Department maintains regular contact with the company on a range of issues, including THORP.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the past 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19775]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The information requested is as follows:

1981–82: 7
1982–83: 3
1983–84: 7
1984–85: 7
1985–86: 6
1986–87: 3
1987–88: 4
1988–89: 4
1989–90: 2
1990–91: 4
1991–92: 2
1992–93: 3
1993–94: 4
1994–95: 2
1995–96: 2.

With one exception, in 1982–83, all the Bills received Royal Assent. Prior to the 1992–93 session the figures include Bills sponsored by the Department of Energy.

Patent Office European Patents Special Reserve Fund

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what funds are currently held by the Patent Office European patents special reserve fund; and if he will make a statement. [21134]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Patent Office 1995–96 annual report and accounts, laid before the House in July 1996, showed the European patents special reserve fund at 31 March 1996 to be £21.4 million. The Patent Office's 1996 corporate plan, placed in the Library of the House in April 1996 gives further details.

European Space Agency Conference

Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the ESA ministerial conference held in Paris on 4 March. [21425]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I attended the meeting at ministerial level of the European Space Agency Council in Paris on 4 March. Important decisions were taken which will reinforce ESA's contribution to the UK's industrial and scientific goals in space. Ministerial colleagues agreed on a new industrial policy and a new system for calculating scales of contribution for mandatory programmes. This should improve the agency's value for money and reinforce the competitiveness of European space industry.

The changes which have been agreed will end the traditional system of geographical return—juste retour—the system by which member states receive contracts in direct proportion to the levels of their ESA contributions. The level of juste retour has crept up from 80 per cent. when ESA was established to 96 per cent. in 1994–96 and was seriously undermining value for money in procurement and the agency's ability to improve the competitiveness of European space industry. The old system will be replaced with a mixed system of alternatives which offer lower guarantees for the mandatory and optional programmes and which would allow open competition in much preparatory and some technology activity. We also endorsed new measures to ensure fair allocation of activities among all industrial firms, including measures to safeguard the position of SMEs in bidding for ESA contracts. The new system, which will be introduced over the period 1997–99, signals a fundamental change in the agency's traditional practices towards a more competitive and open system of project procurement in which fixed expectation will play a less dominant role than they have in the past. I believe that UK companies are well placed to exploit fully this new system and increase their share of ESA business.

It was also agreed to introduce a new system of calculation for scales of contributions to mandatory programmes which has resulted in a saving to the UK of about £ million a year. A further formal ministerial meeting was envisaged 1998.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20897]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 19 March 1997]: The information requested by the hon. Member is shown in the table.

	Annual reports	Annual accounts	Minutes of meetings	Agendas of meetings	Register of members' interests

(S) = Statutory. (V) = Voluntary.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the executive non-department public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens' charter. [20934]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 19 March 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 26 February 1996, Official Report, column 316. The information given then is still current, with the amendment that details of the NAO's access to NDPBs are given in "Public Bodies 1996".

Business Grants (Devon)

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total value of grants given to businesses (a) in Devon and (b) in the South Hams, in each of the last five years. [21341]

Mr. Nelson: The total value of grants from my Department to businesses in Devon and in South Hams in each of the last five years is as follows:

£ millions

	Devon		South Hams
	Total grant offered	Total grant paid	Total grant offered	Total grant paid
1996–97 to date	5.267	5.961	1.605	0.749

Food Chain (Foresight Investigation)

Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on how food chain issues are being addressed by Foresight. [21559]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Several Foresight panels have interests in the food chain. In addition, a new Foresight group has been established to explore market and technology opportunities across the food chain. It will be chaired to David Sainsbury, chairman of J. Sainsbury plc. The new group includes industry leaders in food production, processing and retailing.

In broad terms, the group will be addressing issues which the food chain industries regard as critical to their future competitiveness. It will act in a cross-sectoral capacity, drawing together the interest of the wide range of Foresight panel sectors which impact on food chain businesses, such as food and drink , agriculture, retailing, manufacturing, and marine, for example.

The members of the Foresight food chain group are:

Member	Position	Company
David Sainsbury	Chairman	J Sainsbury
Mark Adams	Deputy Chairman	Geo Adams
Gordon Edge	Executive Chairman	Generics Ltd
Iain Ferguson	Chairman	Birds Eye Walls
James Godfrey	Farmer	—
Christopher Greig	Chairman	William Grant and Sons
Guy McCracken	Managing Director Food Division	Marks and Spencer
Sir David Naish	President	National Farmers Union
Gulam Noon	Chairman and Managing Director	Noon Products
John Shropshire	Managing Director	G's Marketing

Companies House

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set Companies House executive agency for 1997–98. [21659]

Mr. Lang: I have set Companies House the following targets for 1997–98:

- to make 95 per cent. of statutory documents available for public inspection within a maximum of five working days of receipt in Companies House;
- to achieve, on average, a monthly compliance rate for accounts submitted of 95 per cent.;
- to ensure that a minimum of 93 per cent. of fiche provided to customers are error free;
- to ensure that there is a minimum of 97 per cent. error free work in current processing;
- to answer 90 per cent. of incoming telephone calls within 20 seconds;
- to reduce the real unit costs of registration activity by 3 per cent. compared to the outturn in 1996–97; and
- to achieve, taking one year with another, a 6 per cent. average annual rate of return based on the operating surplus expressed as a percentage of average net assets.

In addition, I expect the chief executive of the agency to continue to reply within 10 working days to all letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of Companies House performance in answering the telephone inquiry service within the first six rings; and what impact privatisation of the telephone inquiry service in July 1996 had on the achievement of the target. [21335]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Companies House central enquiry unit and postal search operations were contracted out in July 1996 and new telephone equipment was installed in October 1996. This has led to the number of calls presented to operators increasing by 80 per cent. The contractors are now answering over 13,000 calls per week, 30 per cent. more than before the contract was awarded. Companies House is taking steps to ensure the contractor employs sufficient resources to answer all calls within the target of 90 per cent. of calls within 20 seconds or six rings.

The performance against the telephone answering target, as for other targets, will be assessed at year end and reported in the annual report and accounts for Companies House for 1996–97.

Fur Sales

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the number of retail businesses involved in selling fur garments in each of the last five years. [21243]

Mr. Page: This information is not available.

English Regional Development Organisations

Mr. Luff: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has yet considered the business plans of the English regional development organisations; and what level of financial support he proposes to offer for 1997–98. [21558]

Mr. Greg Knight: I have studied the current performance and future plans of the existing eight English regional development organisations. I am pleased to say that they continue to make a significant contribution to the work of my Department's Invest in Britain Bureau, and to the overall success of the United Kingdom in attracting inward investment and in particular to their region's performance. I have also had detailed proposals for the establishment of new regional development organisations in the east and south-east of England. Taking all this into account I have today offered a total of £10,47 million in grants for the inward investment promotion activities of the existing regional development organisations for 1997–98 and to establish the two new ones in the east and south-east who are being offered grants of £505,000 each.

This represents an 18 per cent. increase in total RDO grants to enable the UK to remain competitive in promoting its locational advantages in the face of increasing competition for mobile inward investment projects. I have allocated the grant aid as follows:

RDO	1997–98 grant (£000)
Northern Development Company (NDC)	1,665
INWARD Ltd. (in the North West)	1,393

RDO	1997–98 grant (£000)
Yorkshire and Humberside Development Agency (YHDA)	1,415
West Midlands Development Agency (WMDA)	1,314
East Midlands Development Company Ltd. (EMDC)	984
Devon and Cornwall Development International (DCDI)	954
London First Centre	1,015
West of England Development Agency (WEDA)	600
East of England Investment Agency	505
South East of England Regional Investment Office	505

Grant is offered on an annual basis according to past performance, ability to absorb additional funding effectively, and for an agreed programme of future activities, with proper regard to value for money. It is Government policy to encourage direct inward investment to the UK because it contributes significantly to economic growth. Inward investment brings benefits both to the country as a whole and more specifically to the assisted areas. The creation of new regional development organisations in the east and south-east of England completes the coverage of the UK map with such organisations and will greatly assist our efforts to attract inward investment.

Radio Spectrum

Mr. Luff: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for introducing pricing to promote efficient use of the radio spectrum [21517]

Mr. Lang: The White Paper, "Spectrum Management into the 21st Century", Cm 3252, announced that national and regional services would be candidates for selective auctions; and that auctions could be used to promote the release of analogue broadcasting spectrum, subject to satisfactory safeguards for existing broadcasters. It also outlined administrative pricing proposals focused on areas and services affected by spectrum congestion. In responses to the White Paper, there was broad support for this package of measures.

The success of the radio industry depends on timely provision of its raw material, radio spectrum. This finite resource is becoming increasingly congested. We intend to proceed, as soon as parliamentary time is available, with legislation to introduce a package of measures to sustain future growth by encouraging its more efficient use.

Inward Investment (English Language Training)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effects of English language training for inward investment to the United Kingdom. [21218]

Mr. Greg Knight: None. However studies have shown that the English language is an important factor for many overseas companies when considering an investment location in Europe.

Insolvency Service

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set the Insolvency Service for 1997–98. [21657]

Mr. Lang: Against the Insolvency Service's planning assumption that compulsory insolvencies will total 27,500 in the year to 31 March 1998, I have set it the target of completing the same number with no more than 9 per cent. of uncompleted cases being more than 36 months old. I have also set it the target of reducing the unit cost of bankruptcy and compulsory liquidation case administration in 1997–98 by 3 per cent. The service's investigative resources have been maintained at current levels and I would therefore expect it to continue to take proceedings for the disqualification of unfit directors and to report on cases of criminal misconduct the levels achieved in the year 31 March 1997.

In addition, I have set the service the following quality of service targets for 1997–98:

- to report to creditors on assets and liabilities within eight weeks in at least 90 per cent. of call cases; and within 12 weeks in 98 per cent. of all cases;
- to hold the initial meeting of creditors within 12 weeks in 90 per cent. of all cases and within four months in 98 per cent. of all cases;
- to submit reports within 10 months in at least 90 per cent. of bankruptcy cases and 80 per cent. of company liquidation cases where there is evidence of criminality;
- to submit disqualification reports within 15 months in at least 80 per cent. of cases where there is evidence of unfit conduct by directors; and
- to check and action at least 95 per cent. of Insolvency Services account payment requisitions within five days or by the due date.

In addition, I expect the service to action 95 per cent. of invoices for payment within 30 days of receipt and the agency chief executive to reply within 10 working days to all letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply.

Patent Office

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set the Patent Office executive agency for 1997–98. [21663]

Mr. Lang: I have set the Patent Office the following targets:

Efficiency

- To increase output in relation to total staff numbers by 2 per cent.
- To increase output in relation to total staff costs by 2 per cent.
- To increase output in relation to current expenditure by 2 per cent.

Quality

- To issue 90 per cent. of patent search reports within 12 weeks of receiving a request.
- To issue 90 per cent. of patent examination reports within 18 months of publication.
- To confirm payment of patent renewal fees within six working days of receipt.
- To issue 90 per cent. of initial design search and examination reports within 12 weeks.
- To confirm payment of design renewal fees within six working days of receipt.
- To issue 90 per cent. of trade mark examination reports within two months of data capture in the Patent Office.
- To advertise within seven months of examination trade mark applications which attract no substantive objection at examination stage.

To register within four months of advertisement 97 per cent. of advertised marks which are not formally opposed.

In addition, the agency will maintain its target to pay bills within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or of a valid invoice, whichever is the later, and I expect the chief executive of the Patent Office to continue to reply within 10 working days to all letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply.

Radiocommunications Agency

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set his Department's Radiocommunications Agency for 1997–98. [21658]

Mr. Lang: I have set the Radiocommunications Agency the following quality of service targets for 1997–98 in respect of its licensing work and enforcement activities. These are in addition to achieving an overall efficiency improvement of 4 per cent. over 1996–97 and continuing to recover the full costs of its activities from customers.

Licensing

Category A: Licences that involve no frequency assignment, site clearance or international co-ordination; 100 per cent. of applications and amendments to be processed and despatched within five working days.

Category B: Licences that involve frequency assignment but no site clearance or international co-ordination; 90 per cent. of applications and amendments to be processed and despatched within 15 working days; remainder to be processed and despatched within 25 working days or an explanation for any delay provided to the applicant.

Category C: Licences that require frequency assignment and site clearance and/or international co-ordination; 90 per cent. of applications and amendments to be processed and despatched within 40 working days; remainder to be processed and despatched within 60 working days or an explanation of the delay provided to the applicant.

Category D: Renewals of all licences in category A to be processed and despatched within five working days; renewals of licences in categories B and C to be processed and despatched within 10 working days.

Enforcement

100 per cent. of safety of life services reports of interference to be investigated within 24 hours.

98 per cent. of business customers reports of interference to be investigated within five working days, the remainder within a further 10 days.

98 per cent. of domestic customers reports of interference to be investigated within 1 month, the remainder within a further month.

I also expect the agency's enquiry point to respond to 92 per cent. of calls within 30 seconds, and 95 per cent. of all invoices to be paid within 30 days, or within the timescale agreed with suppliers and the remainder to be dealt with within a further 30 days. In addition, the chief executive will continue to reply within 10 working days to all letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply and to all written complaints addressed to him about the agency's services.

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the agency review of the Radiocommunications Agency has been completed; and if he will make a statement. [21661]

Mr. Lang: A report on the prior options review of the Radiocommunications Agency has been completed. Copies of this document, which completes the agency review process, have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Employment Tribunals Service

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made towards establishing the Employment Tribunals Service as an executive agency; and if he will make a statement. [21662]

Mr. Lang: The Government announced on 9 May last year their decision to establish the Employment Tribunals Service as an executive agency. The agency will be launched on 1 April 1997. I am confident that agency status will extend to the tribunals administration the benefits of improved efficiency and quality of service that we have seen in other DTI agencies. Copies of the ETS framework document have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

I have set the following targets for the ETS for 1997–98:

Industrial tribunals

To bring to a first hearing 85 per cent. of single cases within 26 weeks of receipt of application.

To reduce the disparity in performance between offices in relation to the above target so that all offices achieve at least 65 per cent.

To issue decisions within one week of signature by the chairman in 90 per cent. of cases.

To reduce the administrative cost of a completed case by 3 per cent. in real terms.

At least 80 per cent. of tribunal cases and 85 per cent. of tribunal judiciary to express satisfaction, in surveys, with the service offered by the agency.

Employment appeals tribunal

Seventy-five per cent. of appeals registered for full hearing to be ready for listing within six months of receipt.

Seventy-five per cent. of appeals registered for preliminary hearing to be ready for listing within six weeks of receipt.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission Cases

Dr. Howells: To ask the President the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library the instructions to his officials on the procedure to be followed during the handling of Monopolies and Mergers Commission cases. [211280]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I am arranging for a copy of the guidance to officials on procedures for handling merger cases to be placed in the Library in the House.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21197]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Fabricant) on 18 July 1996, Official Report, columns 613–14.

Financial Services Industry Employees

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the number of people employed in the financial services industry who have registered against them county court judgments, bankruptcy and Insolvency Act 1986 proceedings. [21309]

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department does not maintain information in the form requested.

National Weights and Measures Laboratory

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set his Department's National Weights and Measures Laboratory for 1997–98. [21660]

Mr. Lang: I have set the National Weights and Measures Laboratory the following targets for 1997–98:

to ensure that external fee-earning activities remain self-financing;

to meet the net vote target;

to continue work to reduce the real cost of a programme hour by 4 per cent. over the period 1997–2000; to complete 85 per cent. of European type approvals within 10 weeks; to complete 95 per cent. of all calibration jobs—including preparation of certificates—within 18 working days of acceptance of the work; and to meet 60 per cent. of the milestones included in the work programme agreed with my Department's Consumer Affairs and Competition Policy Directorate.

In addition, I expect the chief executive of NWML to reply within 10 days to all letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply.

TREASURY

Valuation Office

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what targets will be set for the Valuation Office executive agency for the year 1997–98. [21566]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have set the following key targets for the Valuation Office in 1997–98:

Quality of Service to provide a substantive reply to 100 per cent. of correspondence within 20 working days of receipt to achieve further improvements against the agency's indicators for:

timeliness—by 1 per cent. to 98 per cent.

valuation quality—by 1 per cent. to 86 per cent.

Operational

to clear 330,000 appeals in aggregate against the 1990 and the 1995 rating lists, including clearance by 31 December 1997 of all those appeals lodged prior to 31 March 1996 which can be settled by agreement to clear 97,000 appeals against the council tax valuation lists: with the aim, in co-operation with valuation tribunals, of clearing all those received after 1 April 1997 within six months of receipt to undertake 57,000 cases for the Inland Revenue for capital gains tax and inheritance tax purposes, clearing 90 per cent. of valuation cases within 42 days and 87 per cent. of negotiation cases within six months of receipt

Financial and Cost Efficiency

to ensure the agency's net operating cost is at least fully covered by receipts to break even from year to year within each business segment, after charging for the full cost of chargeable services including notional interest of 6 per cent. on the average working capital to achieve efficiency savings of 6.6 per cent. of the agency's gross expenditure

Further details are set out in the agency's forward plan, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House on publication.

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting, publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19390]

Mrs. Angela Knight: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Basic Pension Plus

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the five per cent. national insurance contribution rebate which individuals will receive under the Government's basic pension plus proposal will be disregarded for income tax purposes. [20436]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The effect of the change for the 5 per cent. NIC rebate would be that the tax relief which is currently given where NIC rebates go into a personal pension would cease, matching the withdrawal of relief on contributions which an individual makes to a pension scheme; but the pensions in payment would be tax-free.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment the European Commission and the European Monetary Institute have made of the millennium compliance of those computer systems which will be involved in the introduction of the single currency; and if he will make a statement. [20535]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I am not aware of any specific assessment carried out by the European Commission or the European Monetary Institute of the millennium compliance of those computer systems which will be involved in the introduction of the single currency.

The European Commission is involved in discussions about the practical implications of economic and monetary union with a wide range of organisations, including those in the information technology sector. The Bank of England, which is represented in the European Monetary Institute, publishes a quarterly report entitled "Practical Issues Arising from the Introduction of the Euro". The latest edition, published in December 1996, incorporates a checklist of IT implications which includes reference to the millennium problem.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a breakdown of the figure of £3,108 million for non-identified miscellaneous expenditure set out in table 7.7 of the Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis 1996–97, Cm 3201. [20819]

Mr. Waldegrave: The figures requested are given in the following table:

Miscellaneous non-identified expenditure from PESA 1996–97, Cm 3201

	£ million
Economic and financial administration (including Bank of England)	3,139
Net Contributions to the European Community	1,267
Parliament and Privy Council	267
Other central services	162
Allowance for shortfall	-460
Total	5,151

This total differs from that published in Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses 1996–97 Cm 3201 as the net UK contribution to the EC was erroneously split between overseas services and miscellaneous expenditure. The correct figure for overseas services was £3,593 million, not £5,636 million.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number of people who are economically inactive and wanting to work aged (a) over 40, (b) over 50 and (c) over 55 years, by region. [20341]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Stephen Timms, dated 26 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on inactive people aged 40 and over who would like a job, broken down by age and region.

Estimates available for the Labour Force Survey are shown in the attached table.

Economically inactive people aged 40 and over who would like a job by age and region—not seasonally adjusted

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were registered as unemployed in (a) May 1979 and (b) currently; and what was the method of calculation of the figures in each case. [21223]

Mrs. Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 20 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on how many people were registered as unemployed in (a) May 1979 and (b) currently; and what was the method of calculation of the figures in each case.

The consistent series of seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment figures, based on the current coverage of the count, show that the number of people in the United Kingdom claiming unemployment-related benefits (Unemployment Benefit, Job Seeker's Allowance, Income Support or National Insurance Credits) was 1,086,800 in May 1979 and 1,746,300 in February 1997.

The seasonally adjusted series is maintained to be consistent with the current coverage of the count and takes into account all relevant changes which, unless adjusted for, would distort comparisons over time. It thereby allows meaningful comparisons with the past.

National Lottery

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the outturn figures for the proceeds paid (a) into and (b) out of the national lottery distribution fund that are included as general Government revenue and general Government expenditure for the financial years (i) 1994–95 and (ii) 1995–96; and what are the estimated figures for 1996–97. [20556]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The table provides outturn figures for payments into and out of the national lottery distribution fund in financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96. The Budget forecast is given for 1996–97.

National lottery distribution fund—income and expenditure

(all figures £ million)

Year	Income	Expenditure
1994–95	299	5
1995–96	1,515	165
1996–97	1,541	600

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Brian David Jenkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response he has made to representations from the CBI regarding the economic disadvantages to the United Kingdom of the United Kingdom not entering into European monetary union. [19468]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 19 March 1997]: The Confederation of British Industry makes representations to me about a wide range of issues, including the potential advantages and disadvantages of the UK's possible participation in economic and monetary union. The Government and Parliament have a choice, thanks to protocol No 11 to the EC treaty, on whether the United Kingdom should participate in the single currency. The CBI's own surveys suggest that business leaders in the UK support the need to have this choice. The Government are committed to full involvement in negotiations on EMU, to protect the commercial and other interests of the United Kingdom whether or not we participate.

Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the oral answer to the hon. Member for Milton Keynes South West, (Mr. Legg) of 12 March, Official Report, column 353, under which provisions of the treaty on European Union on the EC would launch the third stage of EMU on a date after 1 January 1999. [20504]

Mr. Clarke [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The timetable for establishing the first stage of EMU is set out in article 109j of the treaty. The European Council has said at Dublin that this will begin on 1 January 1999.

Personal Pensions (Misselling)

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of those who were missold personal pensions have died before receiving compensation. [21011]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 19 March 1997]: That information is not available.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those companies involved in misselling personal pensions who compensated all those missold personal pensions. [21012]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 19 March 1997]: It is not possible to compile such a list at this stage since reviews of cases continue.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects that the process to compensate those missold personal pensions will be complete. [21013]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 19 March 1997]: The financial services regulators are working closely with firms responsible for sales of personal pensions to speed up the progress of reviews for those who have been missold personal pensions. The Government have made it absolutely clear to the pensions industry that rapid progress this year is imperative. Targets will be set once the PIA has concluded its top-level meetings with firms by the end of this month.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 96 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21213]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, (columns 613–14).

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Olner) of 25 February, Official Report, column 208, if he will estimate the savings which would accrue in the current year from reduced expenditure on tax relief paid on contributions made to appropriate personal pensions if (a) all and (b) half of those earning under £10,000 per annum who are currently opted out of SERPS into APPs were to rejoin SERPS until retirement. [21076]

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 25 February to the hon. Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Olner), column 135.

Earnings

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many and what percentage of employees had total earnings below the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions; and what proportion of these were part-time workers, in (i) 1970, (ii) 1980, (iii) 1990 and (iv) the most recent available year; [21060]

(2) if he will update the information in the answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) of 17 July 1996, Official Report, column 526, estimating the average hourly earnings of part-time workers working fewer than 16 hours a week; and if he will provide figures for those working fewer than eight hours a week; [21071]

(3) if he will update the information in the answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) of 2 July 1996, Official Report, column 418, estimating the average weekly hours of work of men and women with total earnings below the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions; [21069]

(4) if he will update the information in the answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) of 17 July 1996, Official Report, column 526, estimating the average hourly earnings of men and women with total earnings below the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions. [21072]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 20 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent questions (21060, 21069, 21071, 21072) on employees earning under the national insurance lower earnings limit.

The latest figures available are from the Summer 1996 (June-August) Labour Force Survey.

In summer 1996, 2.73 million or 12.3 per cent. of employees had total earnings below the national insurance lower earnings limit in Great Britain; 93.4 per cent. of these were part-time. Labour Force Survey data on earnings for 1970, 1980 and 1990 is not available.

Average hourly earnings of female part-time workers working less than 16 hours a week were £6.20 per hour. Average hourly earnings of female part-time workers working less than 8 hours a week were £5.78 per hour. Due to small sample sizes no figures are available for male part-time workers.

The average weekly hours of work for men with earnings below the national insurance lower earnings limit were 18.3 hours in 1996. This compares with an average of 12.1 hours for women.

Average hourly earnings of men with total earnings below the national insurance lower earnings limit were £2.17 in 1996. This is lower than the average for women which was £3.37.

Jobs (Plymouth and Torbay)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the total number of jobs created in (a) the Plymouth and (b) the Torbay travel-to-work areas in each of the past five years. [21344]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 20 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the number of jobs created in the Plymouth and Torbay travel-to-work areas over the last five years.

The available information is for the levels of employees at 1991, 1993 and 1995. This is provided in the table below.

Employees: at September (thousands)

Travel-to-work area	1991	1993	1995
Plymouth	117.5	113.4	116.0
Torbay	39.6	39.5	43.7

Illegitimate Births

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rate of illegitimate births in the latest year for which figures are available in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland. [21281]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mrs. Ann Winterton, dated 20 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question asking for the percentage of live births outside marriage in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland during the latest year for which data are available.

The figures requested are shown in the table below.

Percentage of live births outside marriage 1995

Area	Percentage
England and Wales	33.9
Scotland	33.7
Northern Ireland	23.1

These figures are published in the annual reference volume "Birth Statistics" Series FM1, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Correspondence

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the letters of 17 November, 22 December and 26 January from the hon. Member regarding Vanlee Transport, Glasgow. [17403]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 24 February 1997]: I did so on 19 February.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide figures for his Departments' PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692-93; and if he will list his latest estimates of annual totals for PFI projects, on the same basis as those given in table 5.5 on the Red Book. [20396]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The following tables show the information requested:

Defence Personnel (Taxation)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the annual revenue obtained by the Treasury through taxation paid by military and civilian personnel employed by the Ministry of Defence, broken down into (a) taxation on income associated with their employment and (b) tax revenue arising from VAT and other sales taxes. [20742]

Mr. Soames: I have been asked to reply.

The amount of income tax paid by military and civilian employees, or by my Department on their behalf within the terms of PAYE settlement agreements, was some £1.3 billion in the financial year 1995–96, the latest year for which complete information is available. The amount of VAT and other sales taxes paid by MOD employees is dependent on individual domestic transactions and is thus not available.

HEALTH

NHS Trusts (Chief Executives)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many chief executives of hospital trusts were women in each year since 1991. [18708]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not available centrally.

Networks

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many separate local area networks and wide area networks are currently in operation within the NHS. [19420]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not held centrally.

Medicines Control Agency

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total income of the Medicines Control Agency in each of the last three years broken down by each major source indicating separately (a) the direct and (b) the indirect contributions from pharmaceutical companies. [19688]

Mr. Malone: The total income of the Medicines Control Agency in the last three years was as follows:

£ million

	Total	Fee income	Miscellaneous income
1995–96	22.4	22.0	0.4
1994–95	25.6	25.4	0.2
1993–94	24.2	23.8	0.4

The fee income was all from pharmaceutical companies and was received directly. Miscellaneous income includes some payments from pharmaceutical companies for the purchase of publications, provision of information, or attendance at seminars; it is not practicable to isolate the precise amounts.

Eating Disorders

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS centres there are for the treatment of eating disorders. [20542]

Mr. Burns: The information requested is not collected centrally. A Royal College of Psychiatrists survey in 1992 identified 21 national health service specialist centres for treating eating disorders in Great Britain.

Blister Packs

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of hospital admissions were due to ailments caused by children ingesting pharmaceutical products which they extracted from blister packs in the last year for which figures are available. [20543]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not available centrally.

Tonsil and Adenoid Removal

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children aged under 16 years in each health authority area were discharged from hospital after removal of tonsils and/or adenoids in the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will indicate the discharge rate per 10,000 children aged under 16 years in each health authority area. [20864]

Mr. Horam: The latest available information on the number of operations on patients under 16 for the removal of tonsils and adenoids, and the rate per 10,000 population, is shown in the table. Information on the number of children discharged from hospital is not available centrally.

Number of operations for the removal of tonsils and adenoids performed on patients aged 0–15 years, and rate per 10,000 population aged 0–15 years, by the health authority in which the patient is resident

Notes:

These statistics are generated by analysing the contents of a complex database. Over time, small numbers of inaccuracies present in the records are discovered and action is taken to correct them. As a result of this action, figures can slightly vary at times and consequently can be considered as "estimates".

Data in this table are grossed for both coverage and unknown/invalid clinical data.

Hospital Episode Statistics.

Discharged Patients (Emergency Readmission)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of patients discharged from a medical specialty in each NHS trust in each of the last three years were subsequently readmitted as an emergency admission to that or another NHS trust within 28 days of discharge (a) as a crude percentage and (b) standardised for age and sex. [20862]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children aged under 16 years were discharged from each NHS trust over the last three years following elective removal of tonsils and/or adenoids; and what proportion of the children treated by each trust were readmitted as emergencies between one and 28 days after discharge. [20854]

Mr. Horam: Standard information on hospital admissions and discharges by diagnosis and operative procedure is available in the "Hospital Episodes Statistics" publications, copies of which are available in the Library. The additional information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Fractured Neck of Femur Patients

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were admitted with fractured neck of femur; what percentage survived beyond 30 days of admission for this condition; and what percentage standardised for age and sex survived beyond 30 days of admission for this condition in each acute NHS trust in each of the last three years. [20867]

Mr. Horam: Standard information on hospital admissions by diagnosis is available in the "Hospital Episodes Statistics" publications, copies of which are available in the Library. As to the additional information requested, mortality in hospital after admission for fractured neck of femur is listed in a set of 14 clinical indicators we are preparing to pilot throughout the national health service. It will not be possible to link hospital admissions with deaths in the community after discharge from hospital for the foreseeable future.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were admitted from home as emergencies with a principal diagnosis of fractured neck of femur; what percentage of these patients were discharged home within 56 days; and what percentage standardised for age and sex were discharged home within 56 days in each acute NHS trust in each of the last three years. [20868]

Mr. Horam: Standard information on hospital admissions by diagnosis is available in the "Hospital Episodes Statistics" publications, copies of which are in the Library. As to the additional information requested, discharge home after admission for fractured neck of femur is listed in a set of 14 clinical indicators we are preparing to pilot throughout the National Health Service.

Dilation and Curettage

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many elective admissions for a D and C operation there were; and what percentage of all elective admissions to gynaecology these operations comprised, in each NHS trust in each of the last three years. [20855]

Mr. Horam: The latest available information has been placed in the Library.

First Births

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many first births there were at each NHS trust in each of the last three years; and what percentage of these births each year were by caesarean section. [20856]

Mr. Horam: The information available has been placed in the Library.

Diabetic Ketoacidosis Patients

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many emergency inpatient admissions with a main condition of diabetic ketoacidosis there were; and what was the admission rate per 100,000 standardised for age and sex from each health authority area in England in each of the last three years. [20865]

Mr. Horam: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Stroke Patients

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were admitted as emergencies from home with a principal diagnosis of stroke over the last three years to each NHS trust; and what proportion of these patients were discharged home within 56 days (a) as a crude percentage and (b) as a percentage standardised for age and sex. [20859]

Mr. Horam: Standard information on hospital admissions by diagnosis is available in the "Hospital Episodes Statistics" publications, copies of which are available in the Library. Length of hospital stay of stroke patients, and discharge home are listed in a set of 14 clinical indicators we are preparing to pilot throughout the national health service as part of a commitment given in the White Paper marking the fifth anniversary of the citizens charter.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were admitted as emergencies with a principal diagnosis of stroke as defined by international classification or disease codes 430–34 and 436–38 in the last three years for each NHS trust; and what proportion of these patients (a) survived after 30 days and (b) survived after 30 days after standardisation for age and sex. [20858]

Mr. Horam: Standard information on hospitals admissions by diagnosis is available in the "Hospital Episodes Statistics" publications, copies of which are available in the Library. As to the additional information requested, this calls for the linking of hospital admissions with deaths in the community, something that will not be possible in the foreseeable future.

Neonatal Units

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of babies were admitted to a neonatal unit for a period of (a) 48 hours or less and (b) more than 48 hours in each NHS trust in each of the last three years. [20863]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not collected centrally in the form requested. Data of this kind have been reviewed by the Clinical Standards Advisory Group, which last reported in 1995. Copies of its report "Neonatal Intensive Care: Access to and Availability of Specialist Services" have been placed in the Library.

Acute Psychiatric Care

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the number of discharges from acute psychiatric care, (b) the number of such patients dying within one year of discharge, (c) the crude death rate within one year per 1,000 person years at risk for such patients and (d) the same death rate standardised for (i) age and sex and (ii) age, sex and diagnosis for each NHS trust for each of the last five years. [20857]

Mr. Burns: The information requested is not available centrally.

Cardiac Patients

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were admitted as emergencies with a principal diagnosis of acute myocardial infarction; what percentage of these patients survived 30 days after admission; and what proportion standardised for age and sex survived 30 days after admission in each NHS trust in each of the last three years. [20869]

Mr. Horam: Standard information on hospital admissions by diagnosis is available in the "Hospital Episodes Statistics" publications, copies of which are available in the Library. The additional information required is not available at present in the form requested. However, we are preparing to pilot a set of indicators within the national health service, one of which is in-hospital mortality for acute myocardial infarction. It will not be possible to link hospital admissions with deaths in the community after discharge from hospital for the foreseeable future.

Tinnitus Research

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding his Department is providing for research into tinnitus in the present financial year. [20754]

Mr. Horam: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. The MRC is always willing to consider high-quality research proposals.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors led (a) Lambeth, (b) Southwark, (c) Lewisham and (d) Cambridge and Huntingdon health authorities not to purchase beta interferon. [20727]

Mr. Horam: Health authorities are responsible, through their purchasing and allocation decisions and the advice and support they give to clinicians, for achieving the best possible health outcomes for their populations within the resources available. We understand that Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham, and Cambridge and Huntingdon health authorities determined their local policies for the purchase of beta-interferon 1b on the basis of assessments of the clinical efficacy and cost-effectiveness of the treatment, and of local health needs, priorities and resources.

Transurethral Prostatectomy Patients

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients aged 55 to 84 years were admitted to each NHS trust over the last three years to undergo transurethral prostatectomy; and what percentage of these patients were readmitted within one year for a further prostatectomy (a) as a crude rate and (b) standardised for age. [20861]

Mr. Horam: Standard information on hospital admissions by diagnosis and operative procedure is available in the "Hospital Episodes Statistics" publications, copies of which are available in the Library. Reoperation after prostate surgery is one of a set of 14 clinical indicators which we are preparing to pilot throughout the national health service as part of a commitment given in the White Paper, which marked the fifth anniversary of the citizens charter.

In-patient Asthma Episodes

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-patient asthma episodes of four days or more among children aged under 16 years per 1,000 children aged under 16 years there were for each health authority area in England in each of the last three years. [20866]

Mr. Horam: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of people with relapsing/remitting MS in the area covered by the Cambridge and Huntingdon health authority. [20729]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mrs. Margaret Scott, chairman of Cambridge and Huntingdon health authority, for an estimate of the local position.

Commercial Food Premises (Rat Infestations)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many rat infestations in commercial food premises have been recorded in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [20927]

Mr. Horam: This information is not held centrally. However, the results of a 1993 survey, the most recent since the mid to late 1970s, showed that there had been a fall in the levels of both mouse and rat infestations in business premises with food-related uses. These results were published in a Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food news release on 6 June 1995.

Tobacco Products

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements he has put in place to control and monitor additives in tobacco products; and if he will make a statement. [21262]

Mr. Horam: A new 10 year voluntary agreement between the Tobacco Manufacturers Association, the Imported Tobacco Products Advisory Council and the Department of Health has been successfully negotiated and will come into force shortly. The new agreement covers the additives which may now be included in tobacco products and arrangements for the approval by the Department of Health of new additives in the future. Manufacturers have undertaken to sign a certificate that their products conform to the terms of the agreement one year from the date it comes into effect. Current arrangements for monitoring the constituents of tobacco products and their smoke by the Laboratory of the Government Chemist remain in place. Copies of the text of the agreement have been placed in the Library.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella Vaccine

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) of 12 March, Official Report, column 263, if he will list for each of the nine measles, mumps and rubella vaccines for which the product licence has been cancelled, the date on which the product licence was granted; whether the licensing of the vaccine was on the advice of the Committee on Safety of Medicines; on what date each cancellation took place; what safety concerns had been identified for each vaccine by the Medicines Control Agency; and under whose direction the licence was withdrawn. [21303]

Mr. Malone: With reference to the dates of granting of the nine measles, mumps, and rubella vaccines I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 12 March, at column 263. Information regarding the cancellation of product licences is commercially confidential. The recommendation of the Committee on Safety of Medicines are confidential.

I refer the hon. Member to the replies given on 6 November 1995, Official Report columns 607–11, which discuss the replacement of the Urabe strain of MMR vaccine with the current strain.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what dates the Medicines Control Agency first raised safety concerns regarding mumps, measles and rubella vaccines containing Urabe strain of mumps vaccine with the manufacturers of Pluserix-MMR and Immravac; and if he will make a statement. [21164]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given on 6 November 1995 at columns 607–11 which discuss the replacement of the Urabe strain of MMR vaccine with the current strain. Discussions between the Licensing Authority and marketing authorisation holder are confidential.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment of the safety of mumps, measles and rubella vaccine was made by the Joint Committee on Vaccination prior to its 1988 recommendation for a vaccination programme; when the Committee on Safety of Medicines considered that assessment; and if he will make a statement; [21168]

(2) on what date the Joint Committee on Vaccination advised the introduction of a vaccination programme using combined mumps, measles and rubella vaccines; if he will list the members of the committee on the date on which the recommendation was made; if he will publish the committee's advice; which Ministers instructed that the committee's advice should be implemented; and if he will make a statement; [21267]

(3) what factors led his Department to announce on 1 September 1988 that a vaccination programme using combined mumps, measles and rubella vaccines would commence in October 1988; and if he will make a statement. [21167]

Mr. Horam: The joint committee on vaccination and immunisation decided at its meeting of 7 November 1986 to recommend to Ministers that a combined measles, mumps and rubella vaccine be introduced into the United Kingdom childhood immunisation programme as a replacement for single antigen measles vaccine. This recommendation was made following consideration of the experience of several other countries which had successfully used MMR vaccine for a number of years.

The JCVI recommended that MMR vaccine be introduced to: provide protection against measles, mumps and rubella; stimulate an increase in the uptake of measles vaccine; and augment the schoolgirl rubella immunisation programme with the aim of eliminating congenital rubella syndrome. The elimination of measles and congenital rubella syndrome were targets set by the WHO European region in its "Health for all by the year 2000" programme.

Before the introduction of MMR vaccine, the JCVI gave careful consideration to available information from Finland, Sweden and the USA on the safety, efficacy and efficiency of the vaccine and from trials conducted by the Public Health Laboratory Service communicable disease surveillance centre in about 10,000 immunised United Kingdom children. It is not the responsibility of the Committee on the Safety of Medicines to consider assessments made by the JCVI.

The Government's agreement in principle to this change was announced by Baroness Trumpington on 7 April 1987 and the change was confirmed in an announcement by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House on 17 December 1987. Work on the implementation of the recommendation was guided by a working party established by the Department under the chairmanship of Sir John Badenoch, chairman of the JCVI.

The recommendations of the JCVI, as endorsed by Ministers, are made available in the publication "Immunisation Against Infectious Disease" copies of which are in the Library of the House. A list of the recommendations and statements concerning immunisation against measles, mumps and rubella is included in the answer to the question from the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey at column 265.

The membership of the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation at April 1988 was as follows: Chairman: Sir John Badenoch. Members: Professor J. E. Banatvala; Dr. M. F. H. Bush; Professor A. G. M. Campbell; Dr. K. M. Citron; Professor J. G. Collee; Professor A. M. Geddes; Dr. D. G. Grahame Smith; Professor P. Grob; Dr. P. F. Grundy; Professor D. Hull; Dr. I. Jones; Professor J. K. Knowelden; Professor H. P. Lambert; Professor R. J. Levinsky; Dr. A. J. McFarlane; Professor D. L. Miller; Dr. J. Noble; Professor C. Peckham; Mrs. D. Roden; Dr. D. Reid; Dr. G. Schild; Dr. J. Selkon; Dr. J. W. G. Smith; Professor R. W. Smithells.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) of 12 March, Official Report, column 263, if the Pluserix MMR vaccine was recommended for approval by the Committee on Safety of Medicines; and if he will make a statement. [21302]

Mr. Malone: Marketing authorisations are granted by the Licensing Authority. When appropriate, the advice of the Committee on Safety of Medicines is sought. However, the recommendations of the committee are confidential.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the dates on which the Committee on Safety of Medicines and its sub-committees have considered the safety of measles and rubella vaccines since 1 January 1992; and if he will make a statement. [21166]

Mr. Malone: The safety of measles and rubella vaccines was considered by either the Committee on Safety of Medicines or its sub-committee on the following dates: 23 September 1992, 2 May 1995, 3 October 1995, 26 October 1995 and 31 October 1995.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessments of the safety of (a) mumps, measles and rubella vaccines and (b) measles and rubella vaccines have been made by the joint committee on vaccination since 1 January 1988; if he will publish those assessments; and if he will make a statement. [21171]

Mr. Horam: The joint committee on vaccination and immunisation regularly receives information on reported adverse events, including yellow card reports from the Medicines Control Agency, as well as published papers on safety and other expert advice. When considering the place of any vaccine in the UK immunisation programme very careful consideration is given to the likely risks and benefits of each vaccine. JCVI's recommendations for the United Kingdom programme reflect is assessment of this. The introduction of MMR vaccine in 1988, the measles/rubella campaign in the winter of 1994–95, and the introduction of a second dose of MMR in 1996 were all recommended after looking at the safety of the vaccines concerned. Since January 1988, the committee has considered the matter of MMR vaccine, or its component vaccines, at each of the 18 meetings it has held.

The recommendations of the committee, as endorsed by Ministers, are made available in the publication "Immunisation Against Infectious Disease", copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a product licence was granted to Immravax; when the product was withdrawn; on whose authority; and if he will make a statement. [21169]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 12 March 1997 at column 263. Marketing authorisations are granted by the Licensing Authority. Information regarding the withdrawal of a product is commercially confidential.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the products which had a product licence on 2 September 1988 for the prevention of mumps, measles and rubella, and the dates of the granting of those product licences; and if he will make a statement. [21268]

Mr. Malone: The available information listing the vaccines for the prevention of mumps, measles and rubella on 2 September 1988 is as follows:

Product name	Date of grant
Pluserix MMR vaccine	17 June 1988
M-M-R-II	17 August 1972

Hospital Trusts (Contracts)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trusts failed to meet the deadline to agree contracts with their purchasers; and how many he expects to go to arbitration. [21081]

Mr. Horam: Information on the number of trusts which fail to meet the deadline for agreeing contracts is not collected centrally because their services may be bought by a large number of purchasers, including health authorities and general practitioner fundholders. It is too early in the contracting round to be able to assess the number of contracts which will go to arbitration, but the numbers are likely to be small.

Crohn's Disease

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) incidence and (b) prevalence of Crohn's disease, broken down into age bands, for each of the last 10 years for which data are available; and if he will make a statement. [21270]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the numbers of yellow card reports regarding Crohn's disease in childhood associated with the use of measles vaccine for each of the last five years for which figures are available; what assessment the Medicines Control Agency has made of such data; and if he will make a statement; [21269]

(2) what assessment the Medicines Control Agency and the Committee on Safety of Medicines have made of the association between the use of measles vaccines and the incidence of Crohn's disease; and if he will make a statement. [21165]

Mr. Malone: From 1 January 1992 to 31 December 1996, three reports from the United Kingdom of Crohn's disease as a suspected adverse reaction to vaccines containing the measles component were sent to the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

A report of a suspected adverse drug reaction does not necessarily mean that it was caused by the vaccine.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave on 17 January 1996 at columns 593–94. Together with the Department, the Medicines Control Agency has reviewed all the available evidence and considers that a convincing link between immunisation and Crohn's disease has not been demonstrated.

NHS (Electricity Supply)

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the savings to the NHS in fuel costs from the liberalisation of electricity supply. [21162]

Mr. Horam: It is not possible to distinguish the effect of the liberalisation of electricity supply from other factors affecting fuel costs in the national health service.

Duo-Japanese Vaccine

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the availability of the duo-Japanese vaccine on the national health service. [21351]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health has no knowledge of duo-Japanese vaccine.

Glaucoma

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the incidence of glaucoma in ethnic minorities relative to the rest of the population; and if he will make a statement. [21352]

Mr. Horam: Studies have indicated that people of African extraction are four times more at risk of Glaucoma than Caucasians. Everyone at special risk of developing the condition, because they are aged over 40 and have a close relative with glaucoma, is automatically entitled to a free national health service sight test.

Medical Records (Libel)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards exist under the Access to Medical Records Act 1990 to prevent a patient being libelled by a member of the medical profession; and what redress there is for patients able to demonstrate that a libel has been committed in their medical record. [21353]

Mr. Horam: If a patient who has been given access to his or her record under the Access to Health Records Act 1990 feels that inaccurate information is contained in that record there is a legal right to have the information corrected. If the patient and the record holder do not agree that a record is inaccurate the Act requires that a note of the alleged inaccuracy be made on the record.

Patients who remain dissatisfied can make a complaint under the NHS complaints procedure or an application to the courts.

These rights are in addition to those rights under the general law, including the law of libel.

Royal London Hospital

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the differences between the proposals for the new Royal London hospital project announced on (a) 4 April 1995 and (b) 16 April 1996. [21354]

Mr. Malone: I am not aware of any proposals announced on 16 April 1996.

Fluoride

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines his Department issues on the maximum safe daily dosage of fluoride. [21356]

Mr. Malone: No guidelines have been issued. The Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy's report on health and social subjects 41 (sixth impression), which was first published by the Department of Health in 1991, gives details of the safe intake of fluoride for infants, children and adults. Copies of the fluoride chapter in the COMA publication will be placed in the Library.

Edgware General Hospital

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will initiate early discussions with Barnet district health authority and the Wellhouse Trust, to co-ordinate and monitor the provision of comprehensive new casualty facilities at Edgware general hospital, along the lines agreed in his discussions with the hon. Members for Hendon, North (Sir J. Gorst) and Harrow, East. [21395]

Mr. Horam: The health authority have agreed arrangements to assess the service being provided, along the lines indicated in the letter my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote on 20 January 1997.

Disabled People

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken by his Department to ensure that all health authorities meet the mobility needs of disabled people living in NHS care following the removal of the mobility component from the disability living allowance for long-stay NHS patients. [21465]

Mr. Burns: The national health service has been and continues to be responsible for meeting the mobility needs of everybody living in its care as part of its day-to-day work. The more effective targeting of the disability living allowance has not affected this responsibility.

Accident and Emergency Services (Essex)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will rank in order of (a) travel time and (b) road miles the six nearest accident and emergency hospitals available to emergency ambulances when taking patients from incidents in (i) Purfleet, Essex, (ii) Aveley, Essex, (iii) Grays, Essex, (iv) Tilbury, Essex and (v) South Ockendon. [21531]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. David Micklem, chairman of South Essex health authority, for details.

Stillbirths and Infant Deaths

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were for each of the past five years, the total costs to his Department if (i) the confidential inquiry into stillbirths and deaths in infancy and (ii) the core and project funding for the national perinatal epidemiology unit. [21332]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is as follows:

£ million

	CESDI	National perinatal epidemiology unit
1992–93 (outturn)	n/a	0.683
1993–94 (outturn)	1.761	0.738
1994–95 (outturn)	2.080	0.759
1995–96 (outturn)	2.068	0.706
1996–97 (provision)	2.039	0.700

Expenditure for 1992–93 is not separately available in respect of CESDI.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, columns 352–53, if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the evaluation of the confidential inquiry into stillbirths and deaths in infancy which was commissioned from the South East Institute of Public Health. [21278]

Mr. Horam: Copies of the report "Evaluation of the Initial Implementation of the Confidential Enquiry of Stillbirth and Death in Infancy" will be placed in the Library shortly.

Departmental Expenditure (South-West)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of his Department's expenditure in (a) Devon, (b) South Hams and (c) Torbay in each of the past five years. [21342]

Mr. Horam: The table sets out total expenditure from 1991–92 to 1995–96:

Total expenditure	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
Devon FHSA	126,788	145,551	169,379	193,747	199,622
Exeter DHA	115,624	120,932	—	—	—
North Devon DHA	46,777	51,216	—	—	—
Plymouth DHA	109,753	115,952	—	—	—
Torbay DHA	90,992	98,125	—	—	—
Exeter and North Devon DHA	—	—	172,695	182,155	186,673
Plymouth and Torbay DHA	—	—	224,672	233,778	241,552

Departmental Annual Report

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he plans to publish his Department's annual report and expenditure plans for 1997–98 to 1999–2000; [21333]

(2) if he will publish a table updating the figures in table 3 of his Department's 1996 annual report, Cm 3212. [21339]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health departmental report was published today. It will include a table which updates the figures in table 3 of Cm 3212.

Heart Attack Victims

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the proposal for motor cycle ambulances to provide an initial rapid response to heart attack victims in urban areas. [21030]

Mr. Horam: Ambulance services are increasingly making use of motor cycles to get paramedics more quickly to the scene of incidents. When ambulance services have adopted call prioritisation systems the arrival of a paramedic on a motor cycle within the target time will count towards the patients charter standard.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to provide paramedics with clot busting drugs for heart attack victims. [21031]

Mr. Horam: There are risks connected with the administration of these drugs and there are no plans at present to provide them to paramedics. However, the position is kept under review.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure a rapid response by ambulance services to heart attack victims. [21033]

Mr. Horam: On 1 April four ambulance services will be implementing call prioritisation systems which will enable them to assess calls so that the most serious cases get the quickest response. Other ambulance services will adopt these systems on or after 1 October 1997 at a date agreed with their purchasers.

It is estimated that in the longer term some 3,000 additional lives a year could be saved by these procedures.

A new patients charter standard has been set that all ambulance services will be expected to reach 75 per cent. of immediately life-threatening calls within eight minutes by the year 2001 with further progress thereafter.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the proportion of heart attack victims who reach hospital or receive adequate medical attention in each health region. [21034]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available in the form requested. The review of ambulance performance standards published last year, which is available in the Library, suggested that survival rates could be improved and we are taking measures to ensure that this is the case.

Defibrillators

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions has he had with the Home Secretary regarding the provision of defibrillators in police service vehicles. [21038]

Mr. Horam: There have been discussion at official, but not ministerial level. This is a matter for local discussion by chief police officers and ambulance services, and a scheme is under operation in the City of London.

Salmonellosis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1)what assessment he has made of trends in the number of human cases of salmonella typhimurium (DT) 104; and if he will make a statement; [21106]

(2) how many cases of salmonellosis have been recorded in humans in each of the last five years; how many and what percentage were recorded as the salmonella typhimurium (DT) 104 strain; and if he will make a statement. [21105]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is given in the table:

Year	Total salmonellas	S. typhimurium DT 104	S. typhimurium DT 104 as a percentage of total salmonellas
1992	31,355	789	3
1993	30,650	1,509	5
1994	30,411	2,848	9
1995	29,717	3,698	12
1996[1]	30,272	4,006	13

The Government's independent advisory committee on the microbiological safety of food's working group on microbial antibiotic resistance in relation to food safety, which was set up last year and the epidemiology of foodborne infections group, which is chaired by the Department of Health, are giving careful consideration to this organism. Copies of the terms of reference to these groups have been placed in the Library. In addition the Department of Health is funding a study into "factors affecting the survival and heat resistance of Salmonella typhimurium DT104".

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21204]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid Staffordshire (Mr. Fabricant) on 18 July 1996 at columns 613–14.

NHS Pension Scheme

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes to the funding arrangements (a) for health authorities in England and (b) for Buckinghamshire health authority he has made as a result of his decision that general practitioner practice staff should be eligible for membership of the NHS pension scheme; and if he will make a statement. [21337]

Mr. Malone: An additional £65 million in general medical services cash-limited funds has been allocated to health authorities in 1997–98 to enable them to develop primary care through existing mechanisms and to take advantage of the additional flexibilities and initiatives in the White Paper "Delivering the Future". This includes the proposal to open up the NHS pension scheme to GP practice staff. All health authorities have received a minimum of 2 per cent. growth moneys.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 13 March, Official Report, column 339, how many expressions of interest in the NHS pension scheme derived from (a) general practitioners and (b) their staff. [21357]

Mr. Malone: In England, 1,116 practices and 6,564 practice staff responded to the staff interest survey carried out in 1994. Of those responding, over 80 per cent. of general practitioner practices indicated that they would allow all their staff to join the NHS pension scheme and 77 per cent. of staff indicated an interest in joining.

A. Simplex Allergy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department issues to the medical profession in diagnosing and treating A. simplex allergy; and if he will make a statement. [21233]

Mr. Horam: The diagnosis and treatment of allergies are matters for the medical profession. There are no reports of this type of allergy in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the link between delays in gutting fish and the increase of A. simplex allergy; and if he will make a statement. [21228]

Mr. Horam: Current practices in the United Kingdom fishing industry mean that the parasite A. simplex is unlikely to be present in fish purchased in this country.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have contracted A. simplex allergy from contaminated fish in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [21234]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department issues to those at risk from A. simplex allergy; and if he will make a statement. [21229]

Mr. Horam: We are not aware of any reports of this type of allergy in the United Kingdom. Current practices in the UK fishing industry mean that the parasite A. simplex is unlikely to be present in fish purchased in this country.

Consultants (Suspensions)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many NHS consultants had a period of suspension during (i) 1994–95 and (ii) 1995–96; and what were the total amounts payable to them during each of those years; [21119]

(2) how many consultants are currently suspended with full pay by the NHS; and what is the total annual salary of those under suspension. [21118]

Mr. Malone: Information on the number of national health service consultants suspended is only held centrally for those cases lasting more than six months and was not collected before 31 March 1995. For the period 31 March 1995 to 31 December 1996 there were eight reported cases, all of which have been resolved. There are currently no reported cases of consultants under suspension lasting more than six months. Information on the total salary costs of consultants under suspension is not available centrally.

Antipsychotic Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the link between tardive dyskinesia in mental health patients and the use of antipsychotic drugs; and if he will make a statement. [21227]

Mr. Burns: The links between tardive dyskinesia and the use of antipsychotic drugs in mental health patients are very well researched and well known. The information has been widely available for many years.

Heart Attack (First Aid)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps is he taking to promote public education in respect of the recommended first aid measures against the onset of a heart attack. [21039]

Mr. Horam: We have recently produced large quantities of public education materials for use by ambulance services around the country on recognising the early signs of a heart attack and how to perform cardio-pulmonary resuscitation. There are other regional and local campaigns in the same field.

Factor 8

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations (a) he and (b) the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Orpington (Mr. Horam), have received from the Haemophilia Society in regard to (i) the availability of recombinant factor 8 for children with haemophilia and (ii) the risks for children not receiving recombinant factor 8; what reply he has sent; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement. [21112]

Mr. Horam: Earlier this month the chairman of the Haemophilia Society, Rev. Alan Tanner, wrote both to me and to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health about a number of issues relating to recombinant factor 8. I shall be replying shortly.

Cancer Treatments (Clatterbridge Hospital)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have received cancer treatment at Clatterbridge hospital, Wirral, in each of the last five years. [21219]

Mr. Horam: The information requested may be found in the publication "Ordinary and day case admissions for England, Financial Year 1995–96", copies of which are available in the Library.

Worcester District General Hospital

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to work towards the signing of the contract for the new Worcester district general hospital before the dissolution of Parliament. [21186]

Mr. Horam: All national health service trusts with private finance initiative schemes, such as for the new Worcester district general hospital, should continue to prepare their full business cases and will be fully supported in this by officials at the NHS executive and Her Majesty's Treasury. However, following the announcement of the general election Ministers and officials can no longer take decisions with financial implications for a future Administration. This means that Ministers will not be able to approve the full business case for the PFI scheme for the new Worcester district general hospital if it is submitted for approval before the general election.

Contraceptives (Minors)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement indicating those provisions in his departments circular, "Health Services Management Family Planning Services for Young People", which govern the situation in which contraceptives may be prescribed for minors (a) without parental consent and (b) without first discussing the situation with the child's usual general practitioner; and if he will identify the steps which are taken by his Department to ensure that these provisions are met by those providing contraceptive services. [21283]

Mr. Horam: The appendix to the circular sets out in paragraph 3 the criteria to be satisfied in providing contraceptive advice and/or treatment to young people under 16 without parental knowledge or consent. Paragraph 4 states that the doctor must use his clinical judgment to decide if these criteria are satisfied. Paragraph 4 also states that a doctor who is not the young person's GP would be advised, with the young person's agreement, to discuss his action with the GP involved.

To ensure that these guidelines are fully understood, the British Medical Association in partnership with other medical and voluntary organisations has produced advice for health professionals on this issue. This guidance makes it clear that a young person must be strongly encouraged to involve his or her parents and their reasons for not wishing to do so should be fully explored.

Mrs. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of girls aged under 16 who were prescribed contraceptives in the latest year for which figures are available; what estimate he has made of the number of those girls to whom such prescriptions were given without parental knowledge; and if he will make a statement. [21282]

Mr. Horam: Details are not held centrally of the number of young women under 16 prescribed contraceptives, or if they were advised or treated without their parents' knowledge or consent as specified in the Department's 1986 guidelines.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will update the table placed in the Library on 29 March 1996, Official Report, column 780, on the practice fund management allowance expenditure by each health authority to include expenditure estimates and revised totals for 1996–97. [16651]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 19 February 1997]: The information requested for 1995–96 and 1996–97 has been placed in the Library. I regret that there was an error in the labelling on the table placed in the Library on 29 March 1996 and a revised version of this table has also been provided.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the average (a) management and (b) computer costs for a general practitioner fundholding practice in each health authority in England in each of the past five years. [17470]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 24 February 1997]: The available data have been placed in the Library.

For 1995–96 and 1996–97, the tables identify allocations to health authorities for practice fund management allowance and computing allocations, and separately identify preparatory year and full fundholders so that a meaningful average can be calculated.

For 1993–94 and 1994–95, the tables identify the total PFMA expenditure by full and preparatory year fundholders, but divided by full fundholders only.

The figures for 1995–96 and 1996–97 include both computer purchase costs, shown separately, and computer maintenance costs, included within general PFMA. Both these components are excluded from the 1993–94 and 1994–95 figures, so the figures are not comparable over time.

Data by Family Health Services Authority are not centrally available for 1992–93.

NHS Employees

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the Hospital and Community health services nurses who are (a) qualified, (b) unqualified, (c) midwives, (d) learner staff and (e) Project 2000 students, as whole-time equivalents, employed (i) in each region and (ii) overall in each year since 1991. [18773]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 10 March 1997]: The information requested will be placed in the Library.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 6 March, Official Report, column 740, if he will provide figures for his Department's PFI projects in the same form as used by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, in his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington of 6 March, Official Report, columns 692–93. [20389]

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects contracts to be signed for the construction of the new Worcester district general hospital. [20805]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 17 March 1997]: This information is not available in the form requested.

The figures at table 5.5 in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" are an estimate built up from detailed figures for each of the schemes with a capital cost of £10 million and above, testing for PFI as at November 1996, together with an aggregate estimate for smaller schemes. Both sets of figures were then adjusted at an aggregate level to arrive at an estimate of the likely spend in each year. The trusts with schemes with a capital cost of £10 million and above are listed:

Residential Care

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current public expenditure cost of supporting retired people in residential care; and what estimate he has made of these costs in (a) 2020 and (b) 2040. [20489]

Mr. Burns [holding answer 17 March 1997]: In 1994–95, the latest year for which this information is available, identified public expenditure on residential care for the elderly included £0.9 billion of local authority expenditure, net of income received, including fees and charges to clients, and £0.5 billion of Department of Social Security preserved rights income support. Information on residential allowance does not separately identify residential and nursing care. For residential and nursing care taken together, total net public expenditure on elderly by local authorities (net) and by DSS by means of preserved rights income support and residential allowance, amounted to about £2.7 billion in 1994–95. Future costs of long-term care discussed in the Health Committee report "Long Term Care: Future Provision and Funding", chapter IV, paragraphs 99 to 121, a copy of which is available in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Punishment Shootings

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the total cost to public funds arising from so-called punishment shootings in each of the last five years and the current year to date; if he will break down the costs in terms of (a) police costs, (b) medical costs, (c) compensation paid to victims and (d) ongoing cots to the social security budget; and of the latter in how many cases there are likely to be long-term payments. [9219]

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Road Signs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the percentage of road signs which need replacement or repair on the United Kingdom primary route network. [8418]

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. and learned Gentleman as soon as possible.

Paramilitary Violence

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people have died as a result of violence committed by (a) republican and (b) loyalist paramilitaries in Belfast, West since April 1992; [16471]

(2) how many punishment beatings have been attributed to (a) republican and (b) loyalist paramilitary groups in Belfast, West since April 1992; [16469]

(3) how many acts of terrorism have been attributed to (a) republican and (b) loyalist paramilitaries since April 1992. [16470]

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Anglo-Irish Secretariat

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what names have been put forward by the Irish side of the Anglo-Irish Secretariat for the proposed Parades Commission. [17702]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I shall write to the hon. and learned Gentleman as soon as possible.

Properties (Rateable Values)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list for each council area, (i) the old and the new rateable value of commercial premises, (ii) the rateable value of domestic properties and (iii) the rateable value of other properties; and what was the (a) percentage increase in and (b) sums raised in respect of each category for each area (x) in 1995–96, (y) in 1996–97 and (z) projected for 1997–98 by means of (1) the regional rate and (2) local rates; [18514]

(2) if he will list the sums in respect of rate relief (a) paid in 1995–96, (b) paid in 1996–97 and (c) projected to be paid in 1997–98 in each council area; and in each case what percentage this is of the total sum raised by each council. [18515]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 4 March 1997]: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Computer Theft

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many items of computer equipment were seized or confiscated by the Royal Ulster Constabulary in November and December 1996; how many of these items were seized from (a) community centres, (b) commercial properties and (c) domestic residences; and how many individuals are or have been subject to criminal prosecutions as a result of evidence so obtained. [19943]

Sir John Wheeler: As part of an on-going investigation, a number of items of computer equipment were seized from various locations during November and December 1996. Some items are still retained.

A DPP file is pending and it would therefore not be appropriate to disclose further details at this stage.

Martin McGartland

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the sums paid out of public funds to Martin McGartland since 1991; by which agencies; and under what powers they were paid. [20749]

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. and learned Gentleman as soon as possible.

Magheramorne Quarry, Lorne

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the report of Commissioner Mossop on the public inquiry into the proposed landfill site at Magheramorne quarry, Lorne, Co. Antrim was presented to the Planning Appeals Commission and Department of Environment (NI). [21001]

Mr. Moss: I am advised by the chief commissioner of the PAC that the report of Commissioner Mossop was completed on 25 October 1996 and that the Commission reached a corporate decision on 2 December 1996. The report was received by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland on 17 December 1966.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of state for Northern Ireland when a copy of Commissioner Mossop's report on the public inquiry into the application for a landfill waste disposal site at Magheramorne quarry, Larne, will be placed in the Library. [21305]

Mr. Moss: It is not normal practice to place planning appeals commission reports in the Library, but on this occasion I will arrange to do so immediately following the Department's determination of the application.

Public Appointments

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to give equal access to hon. Members in relation to the public appointment process as is given to the Irish Government; and if he will make a statement. [21005]

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. and learned Gentleman as soon as possible.

Groomsport Primary School

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the investigation into the fire at Groomsport primary school in 1996 indicating when (a) the site will be cleared and (b) rebuilding will commence. [21007]

Mr. Ancram: The Forensic Science Agency's final report on the fire is awaited by the South-Eastern education and library board which is responsible in the first instance for any reinstatement of damaged accommodation at the school. The board is currently considering some capital works to address the school's needs, but this will be subject to the availability of resources.

Public Sector Pension Schemes

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the actual and accumulated deficits and surpluses over the last five years of the five largest public sector pension schemes in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [21008]

Sir John Wheeler: Of the five largest public sector pension schemes in Northern Ireland, the teachers superannuation scheme, the principal civil service pension scheme (NI), the health and personal social services scheme (NI) and the RUC pension scheme are notionally funded/non-funded and therefore, the question of deficits and surpluses does not arise.

For the Northern Ireland local government officers superannuation scheme the net money available for investment, that is, actual surplus for each of the last five years, is listed.

Year	Net money available for investment £ (million)
1991–92	48,758
1992–93	45,921
1993–94	34,066
1994–95	39,616
1995–96	45,993

It is not possible to provide a meaningful figure for accumulated surpluses over the past five years. However, the actuarial valuation of the fund at 31 March 1992 was £214 million and at 31 March 1995 was £304 million.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) number and (b) percentage of disability living allowance claim decisions were (i) reviewed and (ii) appealed against in the last year for which figures are available; and what percentage and number achieved variations of awards in their favour. [21009]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a response to be given.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 19 March 1997:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking for statistics on Disability Living Allowance decisions that were reviewed and appealed against in the last year for which figures are available.

The attached sheet sets out the most up to date information available for a complete year which, in this instance, covers the period from 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996.

Disability living allowance statistical information 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996

1. Total number of claims received: 48,633

2.

	Amount Reviews
Number of reviews received	22,256
Number of reviews decided	21,261
Number of reviews allowed	7,849
Success rate	37 per cent.
Appeals
Number of appeals received	2,491
Number of appeals cleared	3,142
Number of appeals allowed	1,320
Success rate	42 per cent.

It should be noted that the number of appeals and reviews received during the period 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996 do not necessarily relate to the number of claims received during the same period—i.e. some appeals and review applications were made on previous year claims.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings,

(d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [20898]

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open Government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens' Charter. [20937]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 19 March 1997]: The remit of the Parliamentary Commissioner does not extend to executive non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland. The Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland investigates complaints of alleged injustice as a consequence of maladministration by Northern Ireland Departments, including their agencies, while the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints investigates similar complaints against local and public bodies. The current list of executive non-departmental public bodies which are subject to the jurisdiction of the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints is as follows:

Agricultural Research Institute of Northern Ireland
Arts Council of Northern Ireland
Council for Catholic Maintained Schools
Education and Library Boards
Enterprise Ulster
Equal Opportunities Commission for Northern Ireland
Fair Employment Commission for Northern Ireland
Fire Authority for Northern Ireland
Fisheries Conservatory Board for Northern Ireland

Trustees of the Ulster Folk and Transport Museum

Trustees of the Ulster Museum

Ulster Sheltered Employment Limited

Youth Council for Northern Ireland.

There are no executive non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland which are subject to scrutiny by the Audit Commission.

The following executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Northern Ireland Office are subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office.

Police Authority for Northern Ireland

Probation Board for Northern Ireland

Independent Commissioner for Police Complaints

Training School Management Board Rathgael and Whiteabbey.

The responsibility of the National Audit Office does not extend to the six Northern Ireland Departments which have their own similarly appointed body—the Northern Ireland Audit Office.

The following executive non-departmental public bodies are subject to scrutiny by the NIAO.

Agricultural Research Institute of Northern Ireland

Agricultural Wages Board for Northern Ireland

Arts Council of Northern Ireland

Belfast Education and Library Board

There are no statutory provisions for open government. However, those executive non-departmental public bodies under the jurisdiction of the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints are subject to the code of practice on access to Government information.

All executive non-departmental public bodies listed in the publication "Public Bodies 1996" are subject to performance indicators and the provisions under the citizen's charter. A copy of "Public Bodies 1996" has been placed in the Library.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further steps he proposes to take to raise the examination achievement level of boys attending secondary schools. [21304]

Mr. Ancram: I have set in place a number of initiatives to tackle low achievement in all Northern Ireland schools, including the raising schools' standards initiative, the "Making a Good Start" initiative, which provides additional classroom assistance in year 1, and targeting social need, which targets resources through local management of schools formulae. These will impact on low achievement wherever it occurs, including on boys' achievements.

Fox and Mink Farms

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) fox and (b) mink farms there are in Northern Ireland by county. [21314]

Mr. Ancram: None.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons a licence is required for a fox farm in Northern Ireland. [21242]

Mr. Ancram: A licence is required to set up the conditions for the importation and keeping of arctic foxes in terms of preventing their escape.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of state for Northern Ireland what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21199]

Sir John Wheeler: The percentage of bills paid within 30 days or contract payment terms is not available for the financial year 1995–96; also in 1996 revised sampling criteria were introduced following HMT direction. However, the percentage for the calendar year 1995 was 96.1 per cent. for the seven Northern Ireland Departments.

Bypasses

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what studies he has carried out of the consequences of bypasses of towns and villages in Northern Ireland with particular reference to the economic impact and changes in the quality of the environment. [21394]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for this subject has been delegated to the Roads Service under its chief executive, Mr. W. J. McCoubrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from G. P. Fraser to Mr. William Ross, dated 19 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked the Chief Executive to reply to your recently tabled PQ about studies carried out on the consequences arising from the provision of by-passes and towns and villages and in his absence I am replying on his behalf.

All major by-pass proposals are subjected to a rigorous cost benefit analysis and environmental impact assessment before they are added to the major roadworks programme. The cost benefit analysis takes account of many factors including cost, traffic volumes, journey time savings, road safety, economic benefits and the benefits or otherwise for other parts of the road network, while the environmental impact assessment considers the affect of the scheme on the surrounding environment and the likely reduction in levels of traffic pollution arising from reduced congestion.

Whilst traffic studies are carried out after completion of projects to check the accuracy of the appraisal projections, the Department has not carried out particular studies in Northern Ireland to measure wider economic or environmental changes to by-passed towns or villages.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Land Registers of Northern Ireland

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Land Registers of Northern Ireland in 1997–98. [21649]

Mr. Moss: For 1997–98, the following performance targets have been set for LRNI:

Output

1. To process 16.8 Land Registry registrations per member of staff per month.
2. To process 262.5 Registry of Deeds registrations per member of staff per month.
3. To process 48 Statutory Charges Registry registrations per member of staff per month.
4. To process 90.75 application units per member of staff per month.

Efficiency

5. To process regular Land Registry dealings in an average of 20 days.
6. To process regular Register of Deeds dealings in an average of three days.
7. To process regular Statutory Charges Registry dealings in an average of 15 days.
8. To process pre-completion land information applications in an average of eight days.
9. To achieve a unit cost of £46.24 for registrations.
10. To achieve a unit cost of £5.64 for land information services.
11. To achieve a combined weighted unit cost target of £26,68.

Financial

12. To cover Agency Costs out of fee income.
13. To increase overall productivity by at least 3 per cent.

Quality

14. To achieve a customer complaint ratio of more than 1.5 per cent.
15. To achieve a registration accuracy rate of at least 98.5 per cent.

Accessor for Military Complaints

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make an announcement about the post of independent assessor for military complaints procedures which falls vacant on 31 March. [21650]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am happy to announce that Mr. Jim McDonald has accepted appointment to the post of independent assessor for military complaints procedures and he will take up the position on 1 April 1997.

I am grateful to him for accepting the appointment and am confident that he will provide a valuable contribution in what I consider to be an essential element in maintaining public confidence in the Army's complaints procedures.

I wish to express my appreciation and thanks to his predecessor, Mr. David Hewitt, for all his efforts and to fully acknowledge the contribution which he has made in the important area of Army complaints procedures.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Custodial Costs (Young People)

12. Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current annual cost of keeping a young person in (a) secure accommodation and (b) youth custody. [19793]

Miss Widdecombe: The cost of providing secure accommodation for young persons is a matter for individual local authorities. The Prison Service is responsible for meeting the costs incurred by local authorities in detaining juveniles sentenced under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933. The average annual cost of such detention is currently £126,022.

In 1995–96, the average cost per place in young offender institutions was £17,507 in closed establishments and £16,741 in open establishments.

Speed Cameras

13. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of motorists who are escaping prosecution for speeding because the police do not have the resources to maintain the existing speed cameras; and what measures he plans to take to remedy this situation. [19794]

Mr. Maclean: I do not consider that any estimate of that kind could be useful or meaningful. The Government have provided substantial and increased resources to the police service and it is for chief officers to decide how to order their priorities.

Police Recruitment

14. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Government's target of (a) 5,000 extra police officers nationwide and (b) 1,000 extra police officers in London will be reached. [19795]

Mr. Howard: The additional £180 million being allocated over three years from April 1996 is sufficient to allow the police service in England and Wales, including the Metropolitan police, to recruit 5,000 constables by March 1999. Chief constables have estimated that the first 1,000 extra officers will be recruited in the present financial year.

16. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of extra police officers to be appointed in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) the South Wales police authority in 1997–98. [19797]

Mr. Maclean: It is for individual chief constables and police authorities to determine the number of officers in each force, having regard to the resources available to them. The additional £40 million we have allocated for extra officers in 1997–98 is sufficient to recruit 1,888 more police constables in England, and 112 in Wales, including 47 in the South Wales constabulary.

Pastoral Discussions (Confidentiality)

15. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what wording he plans to include in the draft code of practice consequent upon the passing of the Police Bill [Lords] that will ensure confidential protection of pastoral discussions between ministers of religion and members of their flock. [19796]

Mr. Howard: Authorisation of surveillance which intrudes on "confidential personal information" will require prior approval by a commissioner except in urgent cases. In addition, the police and customs have given an undertaking not to mount intrusive surveillance operations in circumstances covered by the seal of confession.

Crime Statistics

17. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the percentage rise in reported crime since 1979. [19798]

Mr. Maclean: No central record exists of the number of crimes reported to the police, although for the period in question, the average annual increase in recorded crime was 4 per cent.

Prison Officers (Drugs)

18. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are taken to ensure that prison officers do not bring drugs into prisons; and if he will make a statement. [19799]

Miss Widdecombe: A range of measures are taken to stop staff from smuggling drugs into prison. These include: searching of staff, the use of sniffer dogs and setting up intelligence systems. In addition, any staff who are caught with drugs and pursued through the Prison Service code of discipline, and, if necessary, the courts.

Prison Service Education Budget

19. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present education budget for the Prison Service in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [19800]

Miss Widdecombe: There is no central education budget: decisions on the size of education budgets are taken by individual governors. Governors' budgets for education this year totalled £35,297,815.

Prison Population

20. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the size of the prison population. [19801]

Miss Widdecombe: The prison population on 19 March was 59,529.

International Terrorism

21. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new measures he is supporting to combat international terrorism. [19802]

Mr. Howard: The Government continue to support measures, at home and in international fora, which will enable international terrorism to be countered more effectively. It is a matter of considerable regret that my hon. Friend's Bill, which would extend the law relating to conspiracy or incitement here to commit terrorist and other offences abroad, has not yet made the progress which the Government hoped it would.

As I stated in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, South and Maldon (Mr. Whittingdale) on 20 February, Official Report, column 756, the Government intend to bring forward in due course proposals to strengthen existing controls on terrorist, including international terrorist, finances. In the European Union and the Group of Seven industrialised countries plus Russia, the United Kingdom has initiated the development of "centres of excellence" directories to enhance counter-terrorist co-operation.

In the United Nations, we promoted the adoption last December of a new declaration on measures to eliminate international terrorism, and we are playing a constructive role in the preparation of a draft international convention for the suppression of terrorist bombings.

Deportation (Scotland)

22. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions have taken place with the Scottish Prison Service about the detention of persons awaiting deportation. [19803]

Mr. Kirkhope: Discussions took place with the Scottish Prison Service last summer about the detention of persons awaiting deportation. These discussions found that due to the relatively low numbers of persons held in Scottish prisons under sole immigration powers, there were no grounds on which to consider a custom built facility solely for Immigration Act detainees.

Prison Overcrowding

23. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's latest estimate of overcrowding in prisons in England and Wales. [19804]

Miss Widdecombe: As at 19 March the total in-use certified normal accommodation of the Prison Service estate is 54,578. The population as at 19 March is 59,529 and the operational capacity is 60,563.

Prisons (Ministerial Visits)

24. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons the Minister responsible for prisons has visited; and what assessment she has made about the management of those prisons. [19805]

Miss Widdecombe: Since becoming Prisons Minister I have visited all 129 Prison Service establishments in England and Wales.

During my visits, I have seen much to give me cause for encouragement. Against the backdrop of a rising prison population, the Prison Service has maintained an excellent security record, achieved a reduction in assaults and successfully implemented reforms to release on temporary licence, a national system of incentives and earned privileges, and mandatory drugs testing. I congratulate all concerned.

Young Offenders

25. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking in respect of young offenders; and if he will make a statement. [19806]

Mr. Maclean: We have proposed in the Crime (Sentences) Bill that curfew orders with electronic monitoring should be extended to 10 to 15 year-olds, and that the courts be given greater discretion to allow the identification of convicted juveniles. We will be introducing a new secure training order for 12 to 14-year-old persistent offenders. The Green Paper "Preventing Children Offending", which was published earlier this month, sets out our proposals for action to help children before they become offenders; and action to reinforce parents' responsibility for their children's behaviour.

Immigration

26. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has made of the effect on immigration levels of the abolition of the primary purpose rule and the admission of immediate members of the same family already resident in the United Kingdom. [19807]

Mr. Kirkhope: If the primary purpose rule were to be abolished it is estimated that currently between 1,200 and 2,200 applicants would be eligible for admission each year. It is not possible to estimate the effect of easier admission for the immediate family members of persons settled in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women, being (i) Pakistani (ii) Indian, (iii) Australian, (iv) Canadian and (v) Filipino citizens, have sought to enter the United Kingdom as spouses or financés, and have been successful on (1) application and (2) appeal in the most recent year for which figures are available. [21334]

Mr. Kirkhope: The latest available information on grants of entry clearance and on successful appeals against an initial refusal of entry clearance in India and Pakistan is given in table A. Corresponding information for the other countries is not available centrally. For those countries, information by nationally on those granted leave to enter the United Kingdom as spouses or fiancé(e)s is given in table B.

Table A: Grants of entry clearance on application, and successful appeals against a refusal of entry clearance, for spouses or financé(e)s, in India and Pakistan, 1995

Metropolitan Police

27. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis concerning police manpower in south-west London. [19808]

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend and I regularly meet the commissioner to discuss issues concerning the policing of London.

Asylum Seekers

28. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been waiting more than five years for a decision on their status; and what plans he has to recruit extra staff to deal with the backlog of cases. [19809]

Mr. Kirkhope: About 4,460 applications for asylum made before 1992 are currently awaiting a decision. New arrangements for tackling the backlog of asylum applications made before the Asylum and Immigration Act 1993 are to be introduced in April, with the aim of producing a higher rate of decisions within the staff resources already allocated to this block of work. Generally, the number of asylum caseworkers has increased more than sevenfold since 1988 and the number of undecided asylum applications has fallen from 69,763 in January 1996 to 54,490 at the end of January 1997.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers there were from (a) Poland, (b) the Czech Republic, (c) Hungary, (d) Romania and (e) Malta during each of the past four years. [21052]

Mr. Kirkhope: The requested information is given in the table.

Prison Accommodation

29. Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in supplying extra accommodation in Her Majesty's prisons. [19810]

Miss Widdecombe: The Prison Service is taking a number of steps to cope with the rising prison population, including opening new prisons, building new houseblocks and speeding up the refurbishment of existing accommodation. This will result in an additional 6,000 places over the next 18 months, increasing to 8,500 new places by March 2000.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the currently vacant cellular accommodation in prison establishments which is (a) pending refurbishment, (b) currently being refurbished and (c) deemed unfit for rehabilitation. [20692]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about vacant cellular accommodation.

The attached table provides the information you requested about accommodation which is out of use. There is no cellular accommodation deemed unfit for rehabilitation.

Prison Staff

30. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to monitor the adequacy of prison staffing levels. [19811]

Miss Widdecombe: The adequacy of prison staffing levels is monitored regularly by Prison Service operational line managers.

Privately Operated Prisons

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the circumstances under which payments, other than the usual monthly contractual payments, are made to privately operated prisons; [18716]

(2) If he will list the payments which the Prison Service (a) has made and (b) plans to make to each privately operated prisons, other than the usual monthly contractual payments and the reasons for these payments. [18717]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about extra-contractual payments to the operators of privately managed prisons.

Excluding the regular monthly payments required by contract (which vary from prison to prison), additional sums paid in the last year have included:

- discharge grants
- some probation costs
- improvements to remedy latent defects in the fabric of the prisons (where prison buildings were provided by the Prison Service)
- capital costs introduced throughout the Prison Service (such as electrical work in cells and to accommodate overcrowding)
- changes in the service requirements, such as extra court escort commitments
- additional operational requirements, such as mutual aid between prisons

These payments are negotiated on a commercial-in-confidence basis.

These costs, where relevant, have been taken fully into account in the two studies comparing the costs of contracted out prisons with directly managed prisons (by Coopers and Lybrand for 1994–95 and the Home Office Economic Unit for 1995–96). It is not possible to predict when such payments may be necessary in future.

Blakenhurst Prison

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of replacing the locks at HM prison Blakenhurst; and what factors prompted their replacement. [21000]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the replacement of locks at Blakenhurst prison.

The decision was taken to re-lock the prison on the basis of intelligence received that the security of the prison may have been compromised. The full cost of the relocking is the subject of negotiations between the Prison Service and the contractor.

Addicts Index

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the addicts index. [21046]

Mr. Sackville: We propose to bring the addicts index to a close on 31 March. A statutory instrument will shortly be laid before Parliament to revoke the existing provisions which require doctors to notify the Chief Medical Officer at the Home Office of details of patients they believe to be addicted to certain narcotic drugs. This year's notification statistics, due to be published in July, will therefore be the last in the series.

Reliance for information on the nature of drug misuse will henceforward rest mainly on the Department of Health's regional drug misuse databases and the Scottish drug misuse database. The DMDs are a superior source of information in a number of significant respects:

- they cover all drugs misused, not just the narcotics;
- they cover non-medical as well as doctor sources;
- the anonymity is attractive both to misusers and those treating them;
- the voluntary nature of the system promotes compliance.

The value of the statistical product of the DMDs is already proven and the system, which has been operating since 1992, is well established. The closure of the addicts index will assist in concentrating efforts on further strategic development of the DMDs; work is already being taken forward in this area. Doctors and others concerned in the treatment and support of drug addicts will also continue to be encouraged to report contacts to the DMDs.

It is recognised that doctors need to manage addict patients with particular care; this includes guarding against attempts to obtain dual prescriptions. There are guidelines on clinical management of drug misusers, published by the Department of Health, to assist doctors treating such patients. The guidance emphasises the need for a proper clinical assessment of drug dependence, including special measures such as urine analysis.

The Department of Health have in hand a revision of the guidelines which will further assist in the management of these patients.

Problems associated with diversion on to the illicit market will continue to be dealt with by the drugs inspectorate which will closely monitor prescribing of controlled drugs to drug addicts.

Doctors who use the index will shortly be individually informed of the closure. The relevant professional and interested bodies will also be notified.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of whether the new procedures for examining and checking category A inmates and their family visitors will allow him to grant more open visits; [20369]

(2) when his Department received recommendations on modifying the requirements for closed visits for families of category A inmates in prison; and what assessment he has made of the advantages of implementing the recommendations. [20368]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard tilt to Mr. Peter Bottomley, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about closed visits.

A policy of mandatory closed visits for all exceptional risk category A prisoners held in special secure units (SSUs) was introduced in June 1995. No new procedures for the searching of prisoners and their visitors have been introduced since that time.

In 1996, the Prison Service asked Sir Donald Acheson to examine what effect the regime in the SSUs at Belmarsh, Full Sutton and Whitemoor might have on the health of prisoners. The report was presented in June 1996 and included the recommendation that prisoners should have access to open visits with members of their immediate family. A copy of the report was recently placed in the Library.

Sir Donald Acheson's recommendation was considered in the light of the need to maintain the highest levels of security in SSUs and took into account humanitarian concerns. The recommendation was qualified by the assertion that it should be possible for the Prison Service to devise a system of open visits which prevented the passage of unauthorised items. The Prison Service concluded that closed visits are the only guaranteed means of preventing the passage of such items and therefore has not accepted the recommendation.

Holloway Prison

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average proportion of the population at Her Majesty's prison Holloway (a) unconvicted awaiting trial and (b) convicted awaiting sentencing, in the most recent year for which figures are available. [20700]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the proportions of untried, and convicted unsentenced prisoners at Holloway prison.

No detailed daily records are kept, and it is therefore impossible to provide an accurate average figure. However, a biannual population monitoring exercise is conducted, and the average of the last three of these (30th June 1995, 31 January 1996 and 30 June 1996) are listed in the attached table.

Per cent.

	Untried	Convicted unsentenced
30 June 1995	30.7	12.8
31 January 1996	27.9	12.3
30 June 1996	32.5	12.2
Average	30.4	12.5

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average amount of time spent in custody by those convicted prisoners on remand awaiting sentencing at HMP Holloway who eventually received non-custodial sentences, in the most recent year for which figures are available. [20704]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the average time spent in custody at Holloway prison by convicted prisoners on remand awaiting sentencing who subsequently received non-custodial sentences.

This information is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average amount of time spent in custody by those unconvicted prisoners on remand at HMP Holloway while awaiting trial who (a) were acquitted and (b) had their charges dropped in the most recent year for which figures are available; [20702]

(2) what proportion of unconvicted prisoners on remand at HMP Holloway while awaiting trial (a) were acquitted and (b) had their charges dropped, in the most recent year for which figures are available; [20701]

(3) what proportion of convicted prisoners on remand awaiting sentencing at HMP Holloway received non-custodial sentences, in the most recent year for which figures are available. [20703]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about convicted and unconvicted prisoners on remand in Holloway prison.

The requested information is unavailable and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, columns 403-04, concerning strip searching of prisoners detained at HMP Holloway, when strip searching was introduced on the routine basis described in the reply; since that date, how many items of contraband have been discovered on (a) pregnant women, (b) remand prisoners and (c) convicted prisoners; and if he will make a statement. [21290]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Max Madden, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about strip searching of prisoners at Holloway prison.

Strip searching of prisoners is part of our normal security procedures as set out in the Security Manual, a copy of which is in the Library. These procedures have been in use for many years at Holloway.

The detailed breakdown of figures you asked for are not available. I will write to you later giving those figures which are available.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of asylum seekers in February (a) 1996 and (b) 1997. [21271]

Mr. Kirkhope: A total of 2,850 applications for asylum in the United Kingdom were lodged in February 1996. The number in February 1997 was 1,985.

Prisons (Staffing Levels)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence) of 18 February, Official Report, column 531, on prison staff ratios between 1970 and 1996, if he will estimate how much of the change in the ratio is due to (a) the changes to prison officers' overtime arrangements and (b) to other factors, indicating such other factors. [20708]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Chris Mullin, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question seeking further information about Prison Service staff:prisoner ratios.

As the Director General indicated in his reply to Sir Ivan Lawrence in February, the fall in the staff:prisoner ratio reflects the change in prison officer working practices and the reduction in their hours worked. I regret that it is not possible to estimate how much of the change in the ratio is due to any single factor.

Hampshire Constabulary

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the establishment of the Basingstoke division of the Hampshire constabulary in 1979; and what it is in the present year. [20689]

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the chief constable that comparable figures for the Basingstoke division are available only from 1984. In 1984 there were 128 police officers in Basingstoke compared with 158 at March 1997, an increase of 23 per cent.

In the whole of the Hampshire constabulary there were 2,955 police officers in May 1979 compared with 3,362 in September 1996, an increase of 407 or 14 per cent.

Crimes (Hemsworth)

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many violent crimes were committed in the Hemsworth constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 1996; [20723]

(2) how many (a) thefts, (b) burglaries and (c) aggravated burglaries were committed in the Hemsworth constituency in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1996. [20724]

Mr. Maclean: The recorded crime statistics collected centrally are available only by police force area.

Departmental Outturn Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the outturn expenditure of his Department during the current financial year; how much of these costs he expended in (a) Wales and (b) England; and how many staff are employed by his Department in (i) Wales and (ii) England. [20747]

Mr. Howard: The estimated outturn expenditure for 1996–97 is £6,625,588,000, of which it is estimated that £243,215,000 will be spent in Wales and £6,367,108,000 in England. The Home Office employs 1,189 people in Wales and 50,696 people in England.

War Crimes Unit

Sir Cyril Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the Metropolitan police spent on the war crimes unit in the last financial year; how much they plan to spend in the present financial year, and what is the proposed figure for the next financial year. [20813]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is given in the table.

1995–96	877,000
1996–97[1]	650,000
1997–98[1]	664,000

[1] Estimated costs.

Prison Escapes

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to reduce the number of prison escapes from all establishment types; and if he will make a statement. [20731]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Irvine Patnick, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about prison escapes.

The number of escapes, expressed as a proportion of the prison population, is the first of the Prison Service's key performance indicators. The attached table shows that the rate of escapes is now less than one quarter of the level in 1992–93, the last year before the Prison Service became an executive agency.

The Service has taken a number of steps over this time to reduce escapes and has drawn on recommendations from a number of reports including more recently the Woodcock and Learmont reports written following the escapes of category A prisoners in 1994 and 1995. Measures taken include:

- undertaking regular and rigorous security audits
- use of new technology, such as closed circuit television, x-ray machines, metal detectors
- more intensive searching programmes for prisoners, visitors and the accommodation they occupy
- improvements to perimeter security
- improved security awareness and training

Our main priority for the future will be to continue to make every effort to prevent escapes by the most dangerous prisoners and we shall also continue to set rigorous targets for an overall decrease in escapes.

	Escapes		Escapes excluding those previously the responsibility of police[1]
	Rate (per cent. of population)	Number	Rate (per cent. of population)	Number
1992–93	0.79	347	0.79	347
1993–94	0.65	296	0.60	273
1994–95	0.44	217	0.41	202
1995–96	0.24	122	0.17	88
1996–97	0.24	123	0.10[2]	52

Foxes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number and percentage of foxes (a) which perished in the last year and (b) which were killed by a fox hunt. [20814]

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not available.

Prisoners (Previous Covictions)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people currently in United Kingdom prisons have served a previous prison sentence for a different offence; and if he will make a statement. [21276]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many people currently in United Kingdom prisons have served a previous prison sentence for a different offence.

The information requested on current prisoners is not available centrally. The most recent, readily available, information relates to a sample of sentenced prisons in England and Wales at 30 June 1993.

It is estimated that 48 per cent of this sample had served a prison sentence for a previous "standard list" offence (this includes all indictable offences and some of the more serious summary offences). This figure is based on matching information on prisoners in the sample to records on the Home Office Offenders Index. Further details of the sample and the matching process are given on pages 607 of "Prison Statistics, England and Wales, 1993" (Cm 2893), a copy of which is in the Library.

Crime (Young People)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of recorded crimes were carried out in the United Kingdom by people under the age of (a) 25, (b) 21, (c) 18 and (d) 16 years in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [21272]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available centrally for England and Wales. However, the readily available information for persons found guilty at all courts or cautioned for indictable offences is contained in table 5.26 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1995", copies of which are available in the Library. Information for Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for the respective Secretaries of State.

Roisin McAliskey

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the arrangements for the forthcoming confinement of Roisin McAliskey within the Holloway prison arrangements. [20982]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Hugh Taylor to Mr. Hugh Dykes, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the arrangements for Roisin McAliskey's confinement.

Ms McAliskey will be taken to an outside hospital for the birth of her child. She will not be subject to any form of physical restraint (whether by handcuffs or escort chain) when she leaves Holloway prison in order to be admitted to hospital, nor whilst she is at the hospital. This includes the period when she is giving birth. She has asked for two birthing partners to be present, and this has been approved.

Ms McAliskey will be allowed to keep her baby with her following the birth. Her application to be accepted into Holloway's mother and baby unit was approved on 13 March.

Burglary (London)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the trend in burglaries in Greater London since the start of Operation Bumblebee; [21047]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of Operation Eagle Eye. [21048]

Mr. Maclean: The commissioner's Operation Bumblebee initiative against burglary was launched across London on 1 June 1993. The main aims of the initiative are to reduce the incidence of burglary, convict offenders and to shift the fear of crime from the victim to the burglar. Since June 1993, there has been a fall of 12 per cent. in the number of reported burglaries in the Metropolitan police district and the clear-up rate has increased from 12 per cent. to 21 per cent.

Operation Eagle Eye, launched in the summer of 1995, targets street crime, one of the crimes that Londoners fear most. Operation Eagle Eye uses the tools of surveillance and intelligence-led policing to target known and suspected offenders in key hotspot areas. The initiative, which is being introduced and monitored in selected divisions, has been effective in stemming the rise in the level of street crime. Between 1992 and 1995, street crime in the Metropolitan police district was rising at an average annual compound rate of over 13 per cent. In 1996, the increase was only 5 per cent. The clear-up rate for street crime has nearly doubled between 1994 and 1996.

There is no doubt that innovative policing methods such as Operations Bumblebee and Eagle Eye have made a real impact on crime levels in the capital.

Women Prisoners (Escapes)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each year since 1992, the number of women who (a) escaped from a prison, (b) escaped from an escort to or from prison, (c) attempted to escape from a prison, (d) attempted to escape from an escort to or from prison, (e) absconded from a prison, (f) escaped from custody while in a hospital undergoing medical treatment and (g) attempted to escape from custody while in a hospital undergoing medical treatment; and how many of (f) and (g) were (i) pregnant and (ii) in labour. [16867]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking if he will list for each year since 1992, the number of women who (a) escaped from a prison, (b) escaped from an escort to or from prison, (c) attempted to escape from a prison, (d) attempted to escape from an escort to or from prison, (e) absconded from a prison, (f) escaped from custody while in a hospital undergoing medical treatment and (g) attempted to escape from custody while in a hospital undergoing medical treatment; and how many of (f) and (g) were (i) pregnant and (ii) in labour.

The information is contained in the attached table with the exception of answer to (f) (i), (ii) and (g) (i), (ii). This information is not held centrally.

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
(a) (b) (c) (d) Escapes and attempted escapes by female prisoners from establishments and escort
Establishment	6	1	5	0	0
Escort	9	8	6	2	0
Establishment attempt	0	0	2	0	6
Escort attempt	4	2	6	1	1
(e) Absconds by female prisoners (including absconds from outside hospital)
Absconds	84	99	144	103	91
(f) (g) Escapes and attempted escapes from hospital by female prisoners
Hospital escape	8	5	0	0	0

1. Escape figures exclude recaptures within 15 minutes where no further offence has been committed.
2. Attempt figures include those recaptured within 15 minutes where no further offence has been committed.
3. All years are financial years—figures for 1996–97 show the position to the end of January 1997.
4. Escort escape and attempted escape figures include Court Escort Service escapes which would have been the responsibility of the police in previous years.
5. Improved arrangements for gathering data on absconds were introduced in Septemberr 1995 and a review of past records has altered earlier statistics by eradicating inaccuracies.

Prison (Travellers)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people, classified as travellers, are held in prisons in Great Britain. [21258]

(2) how many people classified as travellers are currently being held at Feltham remand centre. [21251]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions asking, how many people, classified as travellers, are held in prisons in Great Britain and at Feltham remand centre.

The information requested is not available centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Prison Transfers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of prison transfers in Great Britain in the last 12 months. [21256]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the cost of prison transfers in Great Britain in the last 12 months.

Information is not held centrally on the cost of transfers to and from prisons in England and Wales, other than the costs of contracted-out escort services which amounted to £47 million in 1995–96.

Information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for their Secretaries of State.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been transferred from prisons in Great Britain to Northern Ireland since 1 November 1995. [21257]

Miss Widdecombe: Since 1 November 1995, 21 prisoners have been transferred, either on a permanent basis or for a temporary period, from prisons in England and Wales to prisons in Northern Ireland. Transfers from Scotland to other jurisdictions are a matter for the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prison transfers by United Kingdom region in the last three years. [21255]

Miss Widdecombe: The number of prisoners transferred, on either a permanent or a temporary basis, between England and Wales and other United Kingdom jurisdictions in the last three years, are given in the tables.

Prisoner transfers from England and Wales to other United Kingdom jurisdictions

	1994	1995	1996
Scotland	25	35	17
Northern Ireland	21	16	15
Jersey	8	7	7
Guernsey	1	1	1
Isle of Man	0	1	3

Prisoner transfers to England and Wales from other United Kingdom jurisdictions

	1994	1995	1996
Scotland	55	46	28
Northern Ireland	2	3	2
Jersey	6	24	21
Guernsey	2	5	8
Isle of Man	1	6	2

Information on transfers not involving England and Wales is not held centrally and is a matter for the relevant United Kingdom jurisdiction.

Prisoners (Regional Origin)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a breakdown by regional origin of prisoners held in prisons in Great Britain. [21252]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt, to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for a breakdown by regional origin of prisoners held in prisons in Great Britain.

No information is available centrally regarding the principle address of those committed to custody in England and Wales. The available information on where prisoners originate from is for the court first committing to custody. Such information, for the whole of the current prison population, could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Information for Scotland is a matter for the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners currently being held in prisons in Great Britain originate from Northern Ireland. [21254]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many prisoners currently being held in prisons in Great Britain originate from Northern Ireland.

No information is available centrally regarding the principal address of those committed to custody in England and Wales. The available information on where prisoners originate from is for the court first committing to custody. Provisional information shows that one person was recorded centrally as being received into a prison in England and Wales who had been first committed into custody by a court in Northern Ireland in 1996.

Information for Scotland is a matter for the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Irish nationals are currently held in prisons in Great Britain. [21253]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many Irish nationals are currently in prisons in Great Britain.

Provisional figures for 28 February 1997 (the latest date for which figures are available) indicate that there were 673 persons in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales claiming to be of Irish nationality. Figures for prisoners in Great Britain (ie: England, Wales and Scotland) are not held centrally.

Information for Scotland is a matter for the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Paul Hill

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when final compensation will be paid to Paul Hill. [21260]

Mr. Kirkhope: As no final claim for compensation has yet been received from Paul Hill, it is too early to speculate about any matters associated with payment of compensation.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the costs of the Government's defence in the case of Paul Hill. [21259]

Mr. Kirkhope: At the hearing in the High Court on 19 February 1997 between the chief constable of the Surrey Constabulary—judgement creditor—Paul Michael Hill—judgement debtor—and the Home Office—defendant—costs were reserved. In the light of this, no assessment for costs in this case has yet been made by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Defibrillators (Police and Fire Service)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost of ensuring all police cars and fire engines carry defibrillators. [21035]

Mr. Maclean: Using latest available figures, the estimated cost of equipping all police vehicles and fire service operational pump appliances with defibrillators is £69 million and £6.3 million respectively.

Animal Experiments (Primates)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many licence applications for experiments on non-human primates have been turned down on the grounds that the adverse effects endured by primates prior to arrival in the United Kingdom are too severe to be outweighed by the benefit of the research. [21249]

Mr. Sackville: None.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account is taken under section 5(4) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 of the length of journey time by the Home Office inspectorate in determining whether to grant a project licence for experiments on non-human primates. [21248]

Mr. Sackville: The transport arrangements, including travel times, are taken into account when assessing the suitability of overseas sources to supply non-human primates for research use.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on maximum time allowable for journeys of non-human primates to United Kingdom laboratories; and if he will make a statement. [21250]

Mr. Sackville: The Home Office does not specify maximum journey times. The welfare of animals in transit is regulated by the exporting countries, the International Airline Transport Association, the European Union and by regulations of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in this country.

Devon and Cornwall Constabulary

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the expenditure on the Devon and Cornwall constabulary in each of the past five years. [21343]

Mr. Maclean: The information is set out in the table:

Devon and Cornwall expenditure

	£ million
1992–93	128,271
1993–94	136,654
1994–95	139,381
1995–96	146,556
1996–97 (estimate)	153,502

Prison Barge

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his letter of 12 March, in respect of the purpose-built prison barge, if Crown immunity will apply to the operation of the barge; and if he will make a statement. [21231]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the application of Crown immunity to the purpose-built prison barge.

The floating prison will not be classed as an offshore facility. The Health and Safety at Work Act (1974) and all relevant health and safety regulations will apply to the floating prison in the same way as other prisons, and Health and Safety Executive inspectors and environmental health officers will have a right of access.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21205]

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, Official Report, columns 613–14. The additional information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Al-Fayed Brothers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the recent statement by the hon. Member for Bexhill and Battle (Mr. Wardle) on the applications for British citizenship by Mohammed and Ali Al-Fayed; and if he will make a statement. [21179]

Mr. Kirkhope: We do not appear to have received any representations as a result of any recent statement made by the hon. Member for Bexhill and Battle (Mr. Wardle).

Polling Stations (Accessibility)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what monitoring his Department has undertaken of changes in access to polling stations for disabled people over the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [21182]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, North (Ms Joan Walley) Official Report column 131.

Pensions Misselling

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on police investigations into the mis-selling of pensions; and how many people and what sums are estimated to be involved. [21146]

Mr. Maclean: I have been informed by the Metropolitan police that one specific allegation has been reported to its fraud department in relation to the mis-selling of pensions. The matter is currently under assessment. There is no investigation at this stage.

Ballot Papers (Braille Templates)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to consult organisations representing blind and partially sighted people over the possibility of introducing braille templates in which to insert ballot papers and if he will make a statement. [21462]

Mr. Sackville: Officials have been in correspondence with the Royal National Institute for the Blind and are meeting representatives of that organisation next week.

Buckley Hall Prison

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the 1996 board of visitors report from HMP Buckley Hall, if he will place a copy in the Library; and if he will make it his policy that all reports from boards of visitors are put in the public domain. [21470]

Miss Widdecombe: The 1996 annual report of the board of visitors at Her Majesty's prison Buckley Hall was received on 16 December 1996 and I responded on behalf of my right hon. and learned Friend on 28 February 1997. The board's reports are not public documents and are not placed in the Library as a matter of course. They are made to the Secretary of State who permits the board to publish if it so wishes and boards are encouraged to do so.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many assaults there have been on (a) prisoners and (b) staff at HMP Buckley Hall since 29 October 1996; [21472]

(2) if he will list the incidents reported to the Prison Service in relation to HMP Buckley Hall since 29 October 1996. [21471]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 20 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about incidents at Buckley Hall prison.

The number of incidents reported to the Prison Service since 29th October 1996 to 19 March 1997 are as follows:

	Number
Assault	3
Concerted Indiscipline	1
Drugs	17
Fire	1
Recapture/Surrender	2
Tool Loss	4
Temporary Release Failure	1
Total	29

The breakdown of assaults from this date is 2 on inmates and 1 on a member of staff.

Religious Preachers

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many religious preachers were given clearance to live and work in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Leeds and (c) Bradford in each of the last 10 years. [21464]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information is available only on ministers of religion admitted to the whole of the United Kingdom since 1993 and is given in the table.

Admissions of ministers of religion[1] to the United Kingdom

	Numbers
1993	246
1994	558
1995	662
1996	493

[1] Including missionaries and members of religious orders, but excluding Mormon missionaries prior to October 1995.

Office of the Data Protection Registrar

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the outcome of the second stage of the quinquennial review of the Office of the Data Protection Registrar. [21561]

Mr. Sackville: The second stage of the review examined the office's internal organisation and performance. I have placed a copy of the report in the Library. It endorses the registrar's programme of changes to improve efficiency, and suggests some further management improvements. We are inviting the registrar to consider these and prepare an implementation plan. Account will be taken of any relevant changes arising from implementation of the European Community data protection directive.

Criminal Justice Initiatives

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in implementing his programme of criminal justice initiatives announced at the 1993 Conservative party conference. [21563]

Mr. Howard: All 27 points have been taken forward. In the last three years, recorded crime has fallen by 10 per cent.

The 1994 Criminal Justice and Public Order Act:

reformed the right of silence (1). The number of suspects refusing to answer police questions has nearly halved; introduced faster court procedures for evicting squatters (2); introduced new powers for the police to stop trespassers disrupting lawful activities like country sports (3); introduced tougher new powers for the police to stop and search people suspected of terrorist activity (4); created a new offence of gathering information for terrorist purposes (5); created a new offence of possessing anything that gives reasonable suspicion of being connected to terrorist activities (6); gave the police the power to take DNA samples in connection with all recordable crimes (7). Our national DNA database, the first of its kind in the world, now has over 113,000 samples on it. To date 3,400 matches have been made; created a new crime of witness intimidation (8). In 1995, 500 people were charged with committing that offence and significantly more in 1996; abolished judges' warnings to juries in rape trials about the truthfulness of women (9); gave the police the power to arrest for breach of police bail (10); banned those on bail from serving on juries (11);

ended the presumption in favour of bail for anyone accused of offending while on bail (12); gave the police the power to attach conditions to bail (13); allows the courts to revoke bail if new information comes to light (14); introduced automatic custody for anyone convicted of rape, manslaughter or murder who is subsequently accused of the same category of crime (15); allowed new prisons to be designed, constructed, managed and financed by the private sector (16);

gave the Prison Service the power to test prisoners' urine for drugs compulsorily (17). Mandatory drug testing had been introduced throughout the Prison Service by March 1996; doubled the maximum sentence in young offender institutions for 15 to 17-year-olds to two years (18); gave the courts the powers to order 12 to 14-year-old persistent offenders into secure training centres. These powers will be triggered once that accommodation is available (19). The first contract has just been signed.

The Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 allowed retrials where juries have been nobbled or witnesses intimidated (20); and gave judges the power to prohibit the reporting of unsupported allegations made during a speech in mitigation (21).

The Criminal Appeal Act 1995 has enabled the Government to establish a criminal cases review commission to look at miscarriages of justice (22).

There are now 1,900 neighbourhood constables (23).

The Attorney General's right of appeal for unduly lenient sentenced was extended to all serious violent and sexual offences in March 1994 (24).

In March 1995, new national standards were published to toughen up community sentences (25).

In March 1994, new guidelines on cautioning were issued (26).

In 1993, all 16 recommendations by an internal inquiry to cut police paperwork were accepted (27).

Young Offenders

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for contractually managed prisons to hold sentenced young offenders. [21620]

Miss Widdecombe: The Prison Service intends to hold sentenced young offenders in the new prisons which will be built and managed through the private finance initiative at Bridgend and Fazakerley after these open during the coming financial year. This will give the service greater flexibility in its use of the contractually managed estate and help to meet its requirement for additional young offender places. My right hon. and learned Friend will today lay a statutory instrument before the House which makes the necessary consequential changes to the young offender institution rules.

Prisons (Drug Testing)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the present position the availability of information from the Prison Service mandatory drug testing programme. [21670]

Miss Widdecombe: As part of the programme of mandatory drug testing in prison establishments the Prison Service collects a range of statistical information, including information about the percentage of prisoners who test positive for drugs in the tests which are carried out at random. Since April 1996 the number of random tests that prove positive, expressed as a percentage of the total number of random tests carried out, has been one of the Prison Service's key performance indicators.

As a result of internal checking, a number of errors have been found in the information held centrally. The main problems are thought to relate to the recording of results of confirmation tests—carried out where a prisoner pleads not guilty at adjudication in response to an initial positive result—and to cases where an initial positive result should subsequently have been discounted because the prisoner concerned was on a course of prescribed medication.

The Prison Service has commissioned the national addiction centre to carry out an independent validation of a sample of the available statistical information on mandatory drug testing covering the period April 1996 to June 1996. This involves a detailed scrutiny of the information held in prison establishments and comparison with the information held centrally. The validation exercise, should provide a measure of the extent of the errors, the possible implications for performance against the key indicator and, more generally, of the reliability of data on mandatory drug testing held by the Prison Service. There is no reason to suppose, from the work completed so far, that the statistical information for the period from April 1996 is other than broadly accurate.

Once the exercise is complete, the Prison Service expects to be in a position to provide reliable information on performance against the key indicator for the period April 1996. However, until such information is available, all previously published figures relating to the percentage of prisoners who test positive for drugs should be regarded as provisional.

In addition, no firm conclusions, including conclusions on any apparent trends on the use of drugs in prison, should be drawn from data relating to the first phase of the mandatory drugs testing programme—February 1995 to March 1996—since not all establishments were involved and some differences in testing protocols were in place. We are not yet in a position to say whether the use of cannabis has declined since mandatory drug testing was introduced. It remains the case that there is no clear evidence of switching from cannabis to opiates or vice versa.

This answer should be taken as correcting any inadvertently misleading statements which may have been made in relation to mandatory drug testing statistics.

Curfew Orders

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to continue the trials of curfew orders with electronic monitoring after March 1997. [21671]

Mr. Howard: I have decided to continue the existing trials in Berkshire, Manchester and Norfolk until March 1998.

Dogs (Tail Docking)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulations govern the tail docking of dogs; and if he will make a statement. [20957]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The Veterinary Surgeons Act 1966 was amended in 1991 to remove the right of non-veterinarians to dock dogs' tails. Since July 1993, it has been an offence for a person other than a veterinary surgeon to dock a dog's tail for any reason.

DEFENCE

Security Vetting

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about defence agency status for personnel security vetting within his Department. [21674]

Mr. Soames: On 1 April 1997, the three single service vetting units and part of the Directorate of Headquarters Security will be brought together to form the Defence Vetting Agency. The aim of the agency is to provide an acceptable level of assurance as to the integrity of personnel in the armed forces, the MOD and defence industry who are given authorised access to sensitive Government information or valuable assets. In addition, the agency will undertake vetting work for other Government Departments on a repayment basis.

The DVA will have a staff of about 350, all civilians, located mainly in Portsmouth, Woolwich, Wiltshire and central London. The assistant under-secretary of state, security and support, will be the owner of the DVA on behalf of the Secretary of State. The owner will set the strategic direction of the DVA and the policy and standards to be followed.

The DVA chief executive, a member of the senior civil service appointed by open competition, will be responsible for the day-to-day management of the agency. The chief executive has been set the following key targets:

Quality

1. By internal validation, to show at least 95 per cent. compliance with quality standards and procedures.

2. By 31 March 1998, to have developed and agreed the means of externally validating the quality of the agency outputs, and determined and set targets for subsequent improvement.

Quantity

3. To meet all in-year requests for vetting, within the quantities represented in the defence vetting programme.

Timeliness

4. To complete 85 per cent. of security checks and counter terrorist checks within the six-week time scale set out in departmental instructions.

5. To complete 95 per cent. of requests for developed vetting clearances within the six month time scale set out in departmental instructions.

Service delivery

6. To meet 95 per cent. of target dates for developed vetting clearances agreed with customers.

Efficiency

7. To demonstrate a 3 per cent. improvement in efficiency on operating costs in financial year 1997–98.

Management

8. To implement the customer group concept as a basis for future financial and management planning, within financial year 1997–98.

9. To implement an initial agency management information system by 1 October 1997.

Investors in people

10. In financial year 1997–98, to commit formally to the Investors in People programme and to complete the necessary in-year preliminary activities to ensure accreditation by May 1999.

Planning for the future

11. By 31 March 1998, to have designed the future vetting processes of the agency, and to have in place the costed plans to reorganise and collocate to implement the re-engineered processes.

I have arranged for copies of the agency's framework document and corporate plan to be placed in the Library of both Houses.

Trident

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current estimate of the cost of acquiring the Trident strategic weapon system, and if he will make a statement. [21672]

Mr. Portillo: The current estimate of the total acquisition cost of the Trident programme, with all expenditure, including payments already made, brought up to current prices and the exchange rate assumed in the latest long-term costing of the defence programme, is £12,570 million. If payments already made are expressed at the prices and exchange rates actually incurred, with future spend at current economic conditions, the estimate is now £9,955 million. Expenditure on Trident acquisition to 30 September 1996 represented some 86 per cent. of the latter estimate.

The revised estimate of £12,570 million represents a real cost reduction of £29 million since last year. The figures show a cash increase of £417 million, but inflation since last year adds £377 million and exchange rate charges add £69 million. The new total therefore reflects increased efficiency in delivering the programme. The programme also continues to show an overall reduction in real terms on its original 1982 estimate. This reduction, including the savings resulting from the decision to process missiles at the United States facility at Kings Bay, Georgia now stands at over £3.6 billion.

The proportion of the estimate for work undertaken in the United Kingdom is around 70 per cent.

I am pleased to confirm that HMS Vigilant, the third of the four planned Vanguard class submarines, was commissioned on time toward the end of last year and is now engaged in work-up trials. Progress with the fourth submarine, vengeance, also remains satisfactory. I am, as in previous years, sending to the Chairmen of the Public Accounts Committee and of the Select Committee on Defence a more detailed report on the programme. I am also placing a copy of this report in the Library of the House.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the report of the Office for Public Management on ethnic minority employment initiatives in his Department; and if he will make a statement. [21673]

Mr. Soames: I have today placed a copy of the Office for Public Management report in the Library of the House. The report covers a six-month review of both service and MOD civilian recruitment practices and makes a number of recommendations which have now been considered within my Department.

We accept the broad thrust of the report. While there are different messages for the armed forces and the MOD civil service in what the consultants found, there is much common ground, primarily concerning the development of goals in which ethnic diversity is a central theme. It is clear that, while some advances have been made, more can and should be undertaken, if the Department is to see an increase in the numbers of ethnic minority personnel employed in both the armed forces and the civil service in MOD.

My Department is committed to reflecting more closely the ethnic balance of the United Kingdom. This is an issue which must be met positively and which requires unambiguous leadership from those at the top of the armed forces and the civil service to ensure that, in the armed forces and MOD, all can work and realise their full potential without fear of racial prejudice, discrimination or harassment. All personnel have responsibilities for ensuring that greater efforts are made to remove any unacceptable attitudes and must, individually, play their part in ensuring that the Department and the services are seen by all as organisations in which racial equality is fully embraced.

RAF Training Group Defence Agency

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the change of the boundary of the RAF Training Group Defence Agency. [21675]

Mr. Soames: On 1 April 1997, the boundary of the Royal Air Force Training Group Defence Agency will be enlarged to incorporate all of Royal Air Force personnel and training command assets and functions at Royal Air Force Cranwell, together with the non-operational training policy function previously undertaken by the command's headquarters. The changes better focus the air officer commanding-in-chief's responsibilities for training policy, delivery of training, recruitment and selection.

The rebrigading of assets and functions under the chief executive of the Training Group Defence Agency will deliver more coherent management and improved use of resources across a wider range of activities than hitherto. The result of the changes is a single defence agency responsible for the recruitment and selection of all Royal Air Force personnel and the policy and delivery of all Royal Air Force non-operational training.

The chief executive of the agency has been set the following targets for financial year 1997–98:

Key Target 1—Quality

Achievement of customer satisfaction with the quality of graduate trainees as reflected in customer advisory committee reports to the air officer commanding-in-chief. Target for 1997–98—95 per cent.

Key Target 2—Efficiency

To deliver the savings that accrue from the efficiencies agreed in long-term costings 1997, together with full cost items. Target for 1997–98—£8.258 million.

Key Target 3a—Quantity of Output (Flying Training)

The percentage of trained aircrew delivered against RAF requirements. Target for 1997–98—96 per cent.

Key Target 3b—Quantity of Output (Ground Training)

The percentage of trained personnel delivered against RAF requirements. Target for 1997–98—97 per cent.

Key Target 4—Human Resources

To implement the investors in people initiative. Target for 1997–98 implement at RAF College Cranwell, No. 1 RS RAF Locking, TDSU RAF Halton.

Key Target 5—Development of Output Costings and Unit Cost Measures

To undertake a cost attribution exercise which will contribute to the development of full output costings and associated unit cost and efficiency measures for the agency by financial year 2000–01. Target for 1997–98—completion of cost attribution exercise.

Low Flying

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the analysis of low-flying activity in the United Kingdom has been completed; and if he will make a statement. [21676]

Mr. Soames: The analysis has been completed, from which it is clear that, although close attention has been paid to the need to balance military training demands against the avoidance of undue disturbance to the public, variations in the intensity of such activity across the country still exist. Although this is, in part, unavoidable because of operational and geographic factors such as the location of aircraft operating bases, aircraft range, avoidance areas, controlled airspace and weather conditions, we concluded that, even within these constraints, further efforts should be made to manage the activity as equitably as possible.

We therefore intend to improve the way in which the overall amount of low-flying activity is managed and the methods by which detailed statistics are recorded. This latter initiative will be a valuable tool in monitoring the effectiveness of the measures to try to redistribute this activity more equitably. In addition, the three services, individually and collectively, will pay greater attention to the areas that they choose in the UK for military exercises in an effort to spread the low-flying training aspects of them as evenly as practicable. Last summer, we announced measures to spread operational low-flying—that beneath 250 ft—more evenly between the three tactical training areas. Efforts will continue to reduce still further the amount of operational low-flying training. The scope for increasing the amount of low-flying training carried out overseas will be actively pursued. A statement on the distribution of military low flying in the UK low-flying systems will be published annually.

I have today placed in the Library of the House a paper giving a more detailed account of the analysis of the distribution of low-flying activity in the UKLFS. Further copies of the paper can be obtained from the following address:

Animal Welfare Advisory Committee

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers of 19 November 1996, Official Report, column 503, and 5 December 1996, Official Report, column 730, when the first report of the Animal Welfare Advisory Committee will be published. [21677]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Animal Welfare Advisory Committee has now delivered its first report and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Procurement Contracts

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which defence procurement contracts have been awarded to companies in Lancashire since 1992. [13273]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Data held centrally on the contracts database focus on accountability of financial matters and do not include details of titles or descriptions of individual contracts. Nor is an address held, although a "location of work" code is recorded. There is no location of work code that conveniently covers Lancashire and a search of records which could include Lancashire based companies revealed over 8,000 contracts. To give the information asked for would require each of these records to be researched, which would incur disproportionate costs.

Royal Yacht

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the European Commission concerning his proposal to have the replacement royal yacht built in a British shipyard; and if his proposal extends to all fixtures and fittings. [13657]

Mr. Arbuthnot: No discussions have been held with the European Commission. Security considerations will preclude the replacement royal yacht being designed or constructed outside of the United Kingdom. Fixtures and fittings could be procured from outside of the United Kingdom if this were consistent with security considerations and obtaining best value for money.

Royal Hospital, Halar

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what considerations he is taking into account in his review of laundry services at the Royal hospital, Haslar; and what is the timetable for the further steps in the decision-making process. [19092]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Secondary Care Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Smith to Mr. Peter Viggers dated 20 March 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the future of the laundry services at the Royal Hospital, Haslar as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Secondary Care Agency (DSCA).

You may recall from my earlier letter that the DSCA has been conducting a review to determine the best long-term means of providing laundry services at the Hospital. We have considered a range of factors, uppermost of which is service quality and cost. During that time we have consulted closely with the Trade Unions in accordance with established procedures. We have now completed a feasibility study and we hope to be able to make a formal announcement in the near future. In the meantime we have written separately to the local Trade Unions.

Personnel Statistics

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of (a) civilian and (b) military personnel employed by his Department for each year since 1979. [21028]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chief executive of Defence Analytical Services Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from P. Altobell to Mr. Frank Field, dated 20 March 1997.

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence regarding the number of (a) civilian and (b) military personnel employed by his Department for each year since 1979, as this falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of Defence Analytical Services Agency.

The figures are presented in the accompanying table. Please refer to the notes appended to the table.

I hope you will find this information helpful.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers of civilian personnel employed by his Department who were permanently attached to each of the British Army bases in the United Kingdom and engaged in their administration for each year since 1979; and if he will publish a breakdown for each base. [21029]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) Royal Navy and (b) Army bases and other establishments in Yorkshire and Humberside in April 1992, indicating for each the number of (i) service and (ii) civilian personnel employed (1) at that date and (2) currently; and if he will list the dates of all subsequent closures of those establishments. [21109]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not held centrally in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Such information as is available, based on 1 April 1996 data, is as follows:

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Ministers were first informed of the contents of the briefing note for researchers on "Pesticide Use in the Persian Gulf War" issued by Lieutenant John Graham of the medical services directorate. [19954]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 13 March 1997]: MOD Ministers were first made aware of the existence of the briefing note for researchers No. 3 entitled "Pesticide Use in the Persian Gulf War" on 26 September 1996.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Ministers were first informed of the evidence of Major Christopher Irven of the extent of the use of organophosphate pesticides during the Gulf war. [19956]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 13 March 1997]: I am not aware that my Department has received any evidence from Major Christopher Irven concerning the use of organophosphate pesticides during the Gulf war.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Ministers were first informed of the evidence of Major Christine Lloyd on the extent of use of organophosphate pesticides during the Gulf war. [19935]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 13 March 1997]: I am not aware that the Ministry of Defence has received any evidence from Major Christine Lloyd concerning the use of organophosphate pesticides during the Gulf war.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Ministers were first informed of the evidence of Staff Sergeant Anthony Worthington of the extent of use of organophosphate pesticides during the Gulf war. [19951]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 13 March 1997]: Ministers first became aware of the post-operational report dated March 1991, drawn up by Staff Sergeant Anthony Worthington, on 7 October 1996, following press reports on 6 October 1996.

Operation Granby

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the Royal Army Medical Corps specialist environmental team served in Operation Granby; and what assessment he has made of the general health of these personnel. [19094]

Mr. Soames: A total of 38 Royal Army Medical Corps environmental health personnel were deployed to the Gulf during operation Granby. No specific assessment has been made of their subsequent state of health. As with all Gulf veterans, if any of these environmental health personnel believe that they are ill as a result of their service in the Gulf, they are entitled to be examined by the MOD's medical assessment programme.

Departmental Documents (Vote Office)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many official documents published by his Department, including those published in co-operation with outside organisations, were not made available to hon. Members through the Vote Office in each of the last three years; and for what reasons the document "British Defence Doctrine" was not made available. [19111]

Mr. Soames: Details of all such documents are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. It is not therefore possible to give a number not placed in the Vote Office. Copies of "British Defence Doctrine" were placed in the Libraries of both Houses—including some additional copies—and separate copies were sent to those right hon. and hon. Members believed to have a particular interest in the document. A small number of copies was provided to the Vote Office in response to requests from individual hon. Members.

The normal minimum number of copies of documents provided to the Vote Office is 100. Our decision whether or not to place this number of any document in the Vote Office depends on a number of factors, including the relevance to parliamentary proceedings, the likely level of interest and thus potential waste, and previous practice in relation to similar documents.

Organophosphates

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) instances of disciplinary procedure have been initiated and (b) individuals have been informed that they may be subject to disciplinary action in (i) the civil service, (ii) defence or other agencies and (iii) the military as a result of the organophosphate pesticides investigation team report and further investigations. [19357]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 10 March 1997]: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 550, if he will place in the Library copies of the documents on organophosphates then requested. [19203]

Mr. Soames: No, for the reasons states in my answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 550.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Ministers were first informed of the contents of Health and Safety Executive guidance note MS17 on the biological monitoring of workers exposed to organophosphate pesticides. [19955]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 13 March 1997]: I am not aware of any occasion on which the contents of Health and Safety Executive guidance note MS17, on the biological monitoring of workers exposed to organophosphoros pesticides, have been specifically brought to the attention of Ministry of Defence Ministers.

British Defence Advisory Team

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which countries were visited by elements of the British defence advisory team in 1991. [20634]

Mr. Soames: During 1991, the United Arab Emirates was the only country visited by elements of the British defence advisory team.

Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency

Sir Julian Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to privatise the Army Base Storage and Redistribution Agency; and if he will make a statement. [20998]

Mr. Soames: There are no proposals at this present time to privatise ABSDA. However, as the hon. Member will be aware, ABSDA is required to make efficiencies and improve cost-effectiveness. To this end we have launched a programme of market testing under the Government's "Competing for Quality" initiative.

The CFQ programme embraces the activities of the three functional divisions of ABDSA which deal with vehicles and fuels, ammunition and stores. The programme is currently under way and its findings are as yet unknown but will be reported as soon as they are available.

Overseas Training and Advice (Costs)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to his Department in 1991 of providing overseas (a) short-term training teams, (b) advisory visits and (c) service personnel. [20999]

Mr. Soames: The costs of many of the short-term training teams and loan service personnel deployed overseas are met by the host countries or by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, while those of defence export advisory visits are met by UK companies on occasions when they specifically request military support. Records of costs are not maintained by calendar year. However, according to available records, in financial year 1991–92, the net cost to the Department of providing short-term training teams was £116,000 and of providing loan service personnel was £2.129 million. In 1991, detailed records of the cost of defence export advisory visits were not maintained. However, on the basis of the information available, costs to the Department are estimated to have been in the region of £146,080. All costs are at historic prices.

Ministerial Visits (Saudi Arabia)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the official visits to Saudi Arabia made by Ministers in his Department since May 1979, stating in each case the dates and purpose of the visit. [19560]

Mr. Soames: For the period April 1993 to February 1996, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement to the hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Hall) on 1 March 1996, Official Report, column 767. According to our records, the following visits have since been made to Saudi Arabia:

Secretary of State Defence (Mr. Portillo) March 1996.

Minister of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. Soames) April 1996.

Minister of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. Soames) October 1996.

The purpose of these visits was the promotion of our important bilateral relations.

Records of ministerial visits prior to April 1993 are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Defence Co-operation Accord (United Arab Emirates)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the defence co-operation accord signed in November 1996 with the Government of the United Arab Emirates. [20274]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The defence co-operation accord is confidential between the two Governments. I am therefore withholding the document under exemption 1b of the code of practice on access to government information. However, the scope of the accord was outlined in the Secretary of State for Defence's answer to the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) of 28 November 1996, Official Report, column 388.

Army Vehicle Depot, Ashchurch

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, (1) if the present number of civilian staff will continue to be employed at the Army vehicle depot at Ashchurch, through to April 1998; [21172]

(2) how many vehicles are currently at the Army vehicle depot at Ashchurch. [21170]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Foxton to Mr. Paul Murphy, dated 20 March 1997:

I am replying to the recent questions you tabled to the Secretary of State for Defence as this falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency (ABSDA). You asked if the present number of civilian staff will continue to be employed at the Army Vehicle Depot at Ashchurch, through to April 1998. You also asked how many vehicles are currently at the Depot.

At present 217 people are employed at the Base Vehicle Depot (BVD) Ashchurch. There will be retirements (both forecasted and unforecasted) and there may be small scale efficiency measures which reduce this figure somewhat but, according to the information I have to hand, the Ashchurch staffing level should remain at about its current level until April 1998.

Lastly, at 18 March 97, there are 6974 vehicles stored in BVD Ashchurch. I trust this has answered your questions satisfactorily.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will assess the extent of intelligence acquired by NATO from asylum seekers currently facing the threat of deportation from Germany to Russia, Belarus and Ukraine; and if he will discuss the value of that intelligence with his German counterpart. [21323]

Mr. Soames: My Department has no indication that any intelligence reports from asylum seekers were acquired by NATO.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will request that a search be made of NATO files to establish what promises of asylum were made to asylum seekers in Germany in the course of interrogations by intelligence officers reporting to NATO. [21315]

Mr. Soames: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the proportion of asylum seekers arriving in a NATO member state from (a) Eastern Europe and (b) elsewhere who are interrogated on behalf of NATO or one of its member states. [21325]

Mr. Soames: No such estimate has been made.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many asylum seekers now resident in Germany were interrogated for military information by officers of the British armed forces or officers of British military intelligence. [21324]

Mr. Soames: I am withholding this information under exemption 1 of the code of practice on access to government information, in relation to defence security and international relations.

Hercules Aircraft

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training exercises in Wiltshire involving Hercules aircraft have been cancelled or postponed this month; and for what reasons. [21032]

Mr. Soames: The tactical air landing element of Exercise Lanyard 3, scheduled to take place at Keevil, Wiltshire between 15 and 16 March, was cancelled as a key participating unit of 5 airborne brigade was placed on operational standby. Hercules aircraft from RAF Lyneham are, however, supporting the land element of the exercise with re-supply drops.

Warrant Officer Ray Bristow

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each of the vaccinations given to Warrant Officer Ray Bristow, of the Royal Army Medical Corps, during his service in the Gulf conflict in 1991. [21140]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Menwith Hill RAF Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the agreements which will cover the United States military occupation of Menwith Hill station after 30 May; and if he will make a statement. [21185]

Mr. Soames: RAF Menwith Hill continues to be made available for the use of US visiting forces on the same basis as other RAF sites in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what branches of the United States military will continue to occupy Menwith Hill station after 30 May. [21184]

Mr. Soames: Personnel from all four branches of the US armed services—Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps—will continue to be based at RAF Menwith Hill.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what terms the United States army occupation of Menwith Hill station has been terminated. [21220]

Mr. Soames: The US army presence at RAF Menwith Hill has not been terminated, nor are there any plans for it to withdraw from the station.

Careers Information Offices

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Army careers information office in Micklegate, York to close. [21111]

Mr. Soames: The Army careers information office at Micklegate, York was due to close in April 1996. However, the office, together with a number of others, was retained as part of an initiative to increase recruiting. There are currently no plans to close the York office.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations of each (a) Royal Navy and (b) Royal Air force careers information office functioning in Yorkshire and Humberside since 1990, indicating the dates on which they were opened and of subsequent closures. [21110]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is set out in the tables.

Royal Navy

Office	Date opened	Date closed
Hull	8 February 1967	Still open
Leeds	25 March 1958	1995 (Now opened as a tri-Service AFCO)
Sheffield	1964	Still open

Royal Air Force

Office	Date opened	Date closed
Bradford	2 January 1959	1 December 1995
Grimsby	Pre 1989 (date u/k)	3 March 1995
Huddersfield	23 March 1960	31 March 1995
Hull	8 February 1967	Still open
Leeds	31 March 1950	1995 (Now opened as a tri-Service AFCO)
Sheffield	26 December 1964	Still open
York	30 September 1971	8 May 1996

AFCO = Armed Forces Careers Office.

Navy and Air Force Manpower

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the shortfall at 1 March in the manpower strengths of (a) the Royal Navy and (b) the Royal Air Force. [21144]

Mr. Soames: The shortfall in manpower strength of the Royal Air Force on 1 March 1997 was 1,588 trained personnel. Manpower figures for the Royal Navy for 1 March are not yet available. As at 1 February 1997 the naval service, including Royal Marines, had shortages of 1,586 trained personnel.

NATO Enlargement

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of his study on the costs of NATO enlargement, "Lines to Draw On"; and if he will make a statement. [21349]

Mr. Soames: It is not clear to me to which particular document the hon. Member's question refers. The position on the study of the resource implications of NATO enlargement was set out in my answer to the hon. Member of 11 February, Official Report, columns 90–91.

Tri-service Resettlement Organisation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total amount paid to consultants for the tri-service resettlement organisation in the last two years; what firms have been employed to provide this consultancy advice; what is this year's budget for the tri-service resettlement organisation; how much of the organisation's New Oxford street headquarters is currently unoccupied; what is the annual rental cost for the New Oxford street site; and if he will make a statement. [21142]

Mr. Soames: Some £1.01 million—excluding VAT—has been paid for consultancy advice to the tri-service resettlement organisation in the last two financial years: £0.658 million to Marshall Tanous plc for corporate marketing advice and services aimed at generating awareness of service leavers' potential amongst employers; and £0.353 million to the PA Consulting Group for assistance with the competing for quality initiative to improve the long-term value for money of resettlement services. Figures relating to the TSRO's annual budget are restricted pending the outcome of negotiations in the current tendering exercise associated with the CFQ study. The TSRO HQ, located in St. George's court, New Oxford street, is a building occupied by a number of MOD units. The TSRO currently occupies all its allocated space. The building is in the process of vacation by the Department and the TSRO will shortly be moving to alternative accommodation at St. Giles court. The rental cost of St. George's court is commercial-in-confidence, but is at low historic lease levels.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21210]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, Official Report, columns 613–14.

Contracts (American Companies)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the total value and (b) the number of defence contracts placed with American companies in each of the last five years. [21143]

Mr. Arbuthnot: For the years 1994 and 1995, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 28 February 1996, Official Report, column 559. For the years 1992, 1993 and 1996, the total value and number of contracts placed where the work has been carried out in the USA is as follows:

	Number	Value (£)
1992	241	136,947,249
1993	211	89,071,488
1996	180	215,408,837

The figures for 1996 are not yet complete. Additions are made to the database for three months after the end of the year in question.

Retired Service Personnel

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to change the level of support available for the after care of people who have retired from the armed services. [21311]

Mr. Soames: Those people who have left the armed forces and their dependants are eligible to receive the full range of services provided by the social security system, the national health service and local authorities. In addition, following representation from the ex-service community, the Government are considering a proposal to establish an ex-service affairs unit.

Skyship 600

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current operational state of his Department's airship, Skyship 600; when this airship was first purchased; what was its original cost; for what reasons the airship ended operational use; and if he will make a statement. [21141]

Mr. Soames: The Department's Skyship 600 was purchased in June 1993 at a cost of approximately £2.6 million. An incident, which resulted in rupture of the envelope, occurred during a masting operation at the Defence Test and Evaluation Organisation site at Boscombe Down in May 1995 following a day's trial flying. The envelope has now been replaced and the airship recommenced trials flying in November 1996. It is planned to continue flying against the current programme until July 1997.

Air-to-air Missile

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning his Department's plans for the future medium range air-to-air missile. [21285]

Mr. Arbuthnot: No final decision has yet been reached but work is continuing to enable an announcement to be made on the way forward as soon as practicable.

Domestic Rabbits

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances domestic rabbits are used in Royal Marines training; and if he will make a statement. [21100]

Mr. Soames: The only use made of rabbits is that some 200 per annum, which are not domestic but bought from sources which breed them commercially for meat, are killed in the course of teaching necessary military survival techniques to personnel training at the commando training centre Royal Marines, Lympstone.

Loan Service Personnel

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list those countries where loan service personnel were deployed in 1991. [20174]

Mr. Soames: According to available records, in 1991, British loan service personnel were deployed in the following countries:

Antigua
Australia
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belize
Bermuda
Brunei
Colombia
Dominica
Fiji
Gambia
Ghana
Grenada
Hong Kong
Jordan
Kenya
Lesotho
Malaysia
Mauritius
Namibia
New Zealand
Nigeria
Oman
Qatar
Saudi Arabia
Singapore
St. Lucia
St. Vincent
Swaziland
Turks and Caicos Islands
United Arab Emirates
Zimbabwe.

The full records of exercises involving British service personnel in 1991 are not available. According to available records, British service personnel exercised in, or with, forces from the following countries and dependent territories in 1991.

Ascension Island
Australia
Bahamas
Bahrain
Belgium
Belize
Bermuda

Botswana
Brunei
Canada
Colombia
Cyprus
Denmark
Dominica
Falkland Islands
France
Germany
Gibraltar
Greece
Hawaii
Hong Kong
Italy
Jamaica
Jordan
Kenya
Kuwait
Luxembourg
Malaysia
Namibia
United Kingdom
Netherlands
Netherlands Antilles
New Zealand
Norway
Oman
Portugal
Saudi Arabia
Singapore
Spain
Sweden
Thailand
Trinidad and Tobago
turkey
UAE
United States.

In addition, UK forces exercised with the states of the regional security system and the West Indies guardship, as part of her routine deployment, would have exercised with many of the Caribbean countries and dependent territories.

Operational Information Systems

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the armed forces future operational information systems; and if he will make a statement. [21664]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Accurate and timely information is crucial to the success of the armed forces in a wide range of operations, from humanitarian aid missions to major conflict. The BOWMAN combat radio system will provide a significant increase in the capability of all three services to exchange operational information. The airborne stand-off radar system—ASTOR—will provide a substantial enhancement of capability by supplying commanders with near real-time surveillance information.

Competitive contracts for project definition of BOWMAN were placed in 1993 with two consortia, Crossbow, led by ITT UK Ltd., and Yeoman, led by Siemens Plessey Systems and Racal. PD work is now largely complete and equipment is being tested in field trials, which are due to end in April 1997. Following an evaluation of BOWMAN procurement options, we have decided to issue a request for proposals for initial production and support to Archer, a joint venture company which is being formed by the leaders of Crossbow and Yeoman. This approach will enable us to procure a highly capable system combining the most cost-effective elements of the Crossbow and Yeoman solutions. It will also offer the most timely way of meeting the BOWMAN requirement. Subject to receipt of an acceptable tender from the company and agreement of suitable contractual conditions, we would aim to let a contract by 1999, in order to meet the in-service date of 2002. It is expected that the contract will be worth in excess of £1 billion.

ASTOR will use highly capable new radar systems installed on fixed wing aircraft to provide both a wide area of coverage and a high degree of resolution. Following successful completion in August last year of a competitive project definition phase, proposals were received from consortia led by Lockheed Martin and Raytheon E-Systems, and including UK sub-contractors. Following a thorough assessment of these proposals and a detailed analysis of a number of other options, we have decided to invite the two consortia to submit best and final offers for the full development, production and in-service support of ASTOR. We aim to place a contract with the winning consortium in 1998. It is estimated that the contract will be worth in the region of £750 million.

ASTOR and BOWMAN will provide key enhancements to the capability of our armed forces and will provide UK industry with valuable, high technology work.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

A-levels (Derbyshire)

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total number of students in Derbyshire passing two or more A-levels for each year since 1979. [18212]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 27 February 1997]: The information is not readily available in the precise form requested. However, the following figures show the numbers of pupils who achieved two or more GCE A-levels in maintained schools in Derbyshire for each year since 1979. The figures for 1979 to 1991 relate to school leavers of any age in maintained schools and those from 1992 onwards related to pupils in maintained schools aged 17 at the start of the academic year.

Free School Meals

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will commission research into the relationship between the proportion of children in schools eligible for free school meals and the academic achievement of schools. [20486]

Mr. Robin Squire: No. There is sufficient analysis of pupil attainment categorised by proportionate eligibility for free school meals, as exemplified by the information published in Her Majesty's Chief Inspector's annual report for 1995–96.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens' charter. [20945]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 19 March 1997]: The information requested is shown in the following table.

[1] Whilst none of the Department's NDPBs is required to apply for a Charter Mark, the Department does encourage all executive NDPBs which provide a public service to operate according to Citizen's Charter principles.

[2] In previous responses to this question on 22 February 1996 and 25 April 1995, the Department stated that both NCVQ and IIP UK were subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration. The Commissioner's Office has taken the view, in particular cases in the past, that these bodies could be considered to be acting "on behalf of" the Department which is subject to investigation by the Commissioner and that therefore under section 5 of the 1967 Parliamentary Commissioner Act those actions were subject to investigation by the Commissioner. However, the formal mechanism for bringing bodies within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner is by Order in Council amending schedule 2 to the Act. No such order has been made in respect of NCVQ or IIP UK, so as bodies themselves, they are not formally subject to investigation by the Commissioner. The Government have, however, made a commitment formally to bring all executive NDPBs within the Ombudsman's jurisdiction, unless there are valid reasons, specific to the particular circumstances of the body, for excluding it.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and ifthis is in each case (i) under a statutory requirement, or (ii) voluntary. Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will, after consultation with the relevant local authority organisations, estimate the additional administrative costs to local education authorities arising from the scheme of vouchers for pre-school education. [21224]

Mr. Robin Squire: The nursery education voucher scheme has been designed to keep administration costs for local education authorities to a minimum. It is not anticipated, therefore, that such costs will be significant or that information relating to such costs will be collected.

Training and Enterprise Funding

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what public funds were provided to training and enterprise councils and chambers of commerce, training and enterprise in 1996–97. [21016]

Mr. Paice: The public funds made available to training and enterprise councils and chambers of commerce training and enterprise in England by my Department for 1996–97 amounted to £1.484 billion. The Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment also provide TECS/CCTEs with additional Government funding.

The responsibility for TECs/CCTEs in Wales lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people were on (a) YT/youth credits and (b) modern apprenticeships, (i) on average in the last year for which figures are available and (ii) at the last date for which figures are available. [21018]

Mr. Paice: On average in 1996, there were 225,000 on youth training youth credits in England and Wales in December 1996, there were 232,000 people on youth training youth credits.

On average in 1996, there were 41,000 on modern apprenticeships in England and Wales. In December 1996, there were 67,000 people on modern apprenticeships.

Youth Training

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many and what percentage of youth training trainees currently have employed status. [21019]

Mr. Paice: In December 1996, there were 232,000 on youth training in England and Wales, of which 57 per cent. had employed status.

Primary Schools

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to allow parents of primary school children increased opportunities to view their child's school work and progress. [21023]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government's reforms have ensured that parents are better informed about the performance of primary schools, most recently through the publication of performance tables, and about their own child's progress at primary school. All parents must receive a written report on their child at least once a year. This must describe the arrangements for discussing the report with the teachers concerned.

Education Spending, Barnet

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if she will make a statement on the increase in Barnet's education standard spending assessment in 1997–98; [21078]

(2) if she will make a statement on the (a) amount and (b) percentage of Barnet local education authority's education budget spent centrally; and what are the average national figures. [21080]

Mr. Robin Squire: Barnet's 1997–98 education standard spending assessment is £119.1 million which, after adjustments are made to take account of the nursery voucher scheme, represents a year on year increase of some £5.3 million or 4.6 per cent.

It is up to local authorities to set their education budgets within the resources at their disposal, and capping limits. Barnet's 1996–97 education budget was £126.5 million, which was 8.1 per cent. above its education SSA—£117 million. Nationally, local authorities set their 1996–97 education budgets at an average of 4.0 per cent.

above their education SSAs. Details of local authorities' final expenditure on education in the current year are not yet available.

Pupil Costs

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was education spending per pupil in (a) 1975 and (b) currently expressed in (i) cash terms and (ii) constant price terms. [21292]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table shows in both cash and real terms—1996–97 prices—the net institutional expenditure per pupil in LEA-maintained schools, in 1979–80 and 1995–96, the latest year for which data are available.

	Pre-primary/primary		Secondary		Combined
	Cash terms	Real terms	Cash terms	Real terms	Cash terms	Real terms

1995–96[1]	1,629	1,670	2,286	2,343	1,909	1,957

[1] These figures exclude grant-maintained schools.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the status of the report produced by the steering committee on the special educational needs initiative; what is her Department's policy in respect of each of the recommendations; and what action she (a) has taken to date and (b) proposes to take. [2117]

Mrs. Gillan: The SEN initiative is a consortium of local education authoritiess in England and Wales, established by the Society of Education Officers in order to facilitate a national study into the management of LEA budgets for pupils with special educational needs. The first phase report, prepared by Coopers and Lybrand in consultation with a wide range of interests, offers guidance to participating LEAs; the second phase, now under way, is focused on the management of SEN budgets at school level. The Department has contributed £5,000 in 1996 and 1997 towards the costs of the study, and is represented on the steering committee for the initiative. It is for LEAs to consider the implications of the report, but we welcome the way in which the initiative has highlighted important issues for LEAs seeking to maximise the effectiveness of the resources devoted to children with special educational needs.

National Learning Line

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) which organisations expressed an interest in tendering for the national learning line but were not invited to do so; [21286]

(2) which organisations were invited to tender for the national learning line. [21287]

Mr. Paice: The contract to run the national learning line is being competitively tendered. The commercial best practice adopted by the Government in such circumstances means that we cannot reveal details of the companies involved in the competition.

Expenditure, Devon

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the expenditure on (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) capital projects in Devon in each of the last five years. [21340]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table shows gross expenditure for LEA-maintained (a) pre-primary, primary and (b) secondary schools by Devon local education authority from 1991–92, to 1995–96; and capital expenditure by the LEA over the period 1991–92 to 1994–95, the latest year for which figures are available. All figures are in cash terms, and have not been adjusted for any change of function.

Hunting (Jobs)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will estimate the number of jobs dependent on (a) fox hunting, (d) deer hunting and (c) hare coursing. [21113]

Mr. Paice: The sectors involved are very small. For that reason we can make no reliable estimates of the number of jobs dependent on fox hunting, deer hunting and hare coursing. Government statistics do not promote such detailed information. However, the Department of the Environment is a member of the standing conference on countryside sports. A study produced for SCCS estimates around 60,000 full-time jobs are directly dependent on all countryside sports and a further 30,000 indirectly.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the post-tax surplus or deficit for each training and enterprise council for 1995–96. [21310]

Mr. Paice: The following table lists the post-tax surpluses or deficits incurred by training and enterprise councils in 1995–96. The figures are those shown in the audited statutory accounts lodged at Companies House.

TECs are allowed to generate surpluses and create reserves by subcontracting training at a lower unit price than that negotiated with the Department. Surpluses are used by TECs on activities in support of their corporate and business plan objectives which are agreed with Government. Examples of the use of these funds include the provision of additional opportunities within existing DfEE programmes; matching funding for single regeneration budget or European-funded projects; training, enterprise or economic development initiatives agreed with TECs' local communities; and topping up reserves where they are insufficient to meet cash flow and other fluctuations.

Secondary School Pupils

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for each English local education authority, the expenditure per secondary school pupil for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement. [21312]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table sets out for each LEA in England the net institutional expenditure per pupil in LEA maintained secondary schools for the years 1991–92 to 1995–96, the latest year for which data are available.

Musicians

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the relationship between the number of places for educating musicians in the United Kingdom and the job opportunities for musicians; and what plans she has to review the present position. [21115]

Mr. Forth: None. With the exception of a very small number of disciplines, the Government do not plan centrally the output of graduates. It is for individual universities and colleges to determine the allocation of places by subject in the light of demand from suitably qualified applicants, who in turn may be influenced by job opportunities.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he proposes to respond to the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee on the proposed changes to housing benefit regulations. [20954]

Mr. Lilley: I have received the Social Security Advisory Committee report. It recommended against proceeding without further research of the effects of existing measures on the housing market. In the event the Government do go ahead, the committee further recommended that the proposals should apply only to new claims and that certain accommodation for tenants who have been referred by the local authority or probation service should be exempt.

I have considered these recommendations carefully. I have decided not to accept them in the form in which they were presented, but to exempt from the single room rent determination severely disabled people who are entitled to severe disability premium and single claimants who have non-dependants residing with them.

I have today laid before Parliament the social security advisory committee's report and my response to it. I have also laid the regulations to give effect to the changes.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what projections his Department has made, and over what periods, of future levels of provision of accommodation matching the single room rent definition. [21130]

Mr. Roger Evans: The rental market is flexible and we believe it will respond to changes in demand arising from the application of the single room rent determinations. To encourage people who have spare rooms in their houses to let them out, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in the Budget, an increase to the current rent-a-room threshold of £3,250. From April, rental income of up to £4,250 will be exempt from tax.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the housing benefit costs in respect of the private rented sector in (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97. [21132]

Mr. Evans: The information is set out in the table:

Estimated rent allowance expenditure

	1995–96	'1996–97
Housing association tenants	1,600	2,100
Other private sector tenants	3,850	3,900

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the (a) financial and (b) other effects of (i) the Housing Benefit Regulations, S.I. 1996, No. 965, and (ii) the proposed housing benefit regulations restricting housing benefit for single people aged 25 to 59 years. [21129]

Mr. Evans: The information is set out in the table:

Pensioners

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the measures which have provided extra financial assistance to pensioners on low incomes since 1990. [18463]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information in relation to income support, housing benefit and council tax and community charge benefits, is as follows:

April 1991

The pensioner premium was increased above the normal uprating.

April 1992

The higher pensioner premium was increased above the normal uprating.

October 1992

All pensioner premiums were increased above the normal uprating.

April 1993

The rates of income support personal allowances were not adjusted to reflect the fact that the element previously included in recognition of the 20 per cent. contribution towards community charge liability was no longer needed due to the introduction of council tax.

April 1994

Compensation for VAT on fuel above average cost.

Customer Charters

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department and its executive agencies have spent drafting, publishing and circulating each of their customer charters and customer standard documents; and how many copies of each document have been issued. [19388]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

Benefits Agency

The Benefits Agency customer charter was last revised and published in December 1993. The cost of publication was £48,106; 250,000 copies were published and distributed to the agency's local offices. In addition, in 1996–97, 86 Benefit Agency units have published local charters at a total cost of £60,200. Each business unit received 2,000 copies of its own charter statement. There are no figures available on the number of national and local charters issued to the public, because their distribution is controlled by Benefits Agency local offices and the information could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Contributions Agency

The employers charter was last revised and published in January 1994; 1,200,000 copies were printed and distributed to employers at a cost of £67,000. A further 250,000 copies were printed, stored and sent to local offices for distribution to customers, at a cost of £10,557; 74,621 remain in stock.

The contributors charter was last revised and published in April 1995; 1,000,000 copies were printed for distribution with national insurance cards to 16-year-olds at a cost of £64,655; 250,000 copies were printed, stored and sent to local offices for distribution to customers, at a cost of £14,586; 13,355 remain in stock.

Child Support Agency

The Child Support Agency customer charter was last revised and published in November 1996. A total of 7,600 copies were printed and distributed at a cost of £9,539. There are none currently in stock.

War Pensions Agency

A total of 218,500 copies of the War Pensions Agency charter standard statement were printed at a cost of £14,949; 174,515 remain in stock.

War Pensions

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, columns 149–50, if the War Pensions Agency consulted (a) the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment and (b) his Department when it was drawing up the sections on claims arising out of experiments at Porton Down in the 1993 and 1995 versions of the "War Pensions Manual". [19115]

Mr. Heald: These are matters for Mr. Kevin Caldwell, chief executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from K. C. Caldwell to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 19 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if the War Pensions Agency consulted with the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment (CBDE), and our own Department, when drawing up the 1993 and 1995 instructions for claims arising out of experiments at Porton Down.

I can confirm that we did not consult with the CBDE prior to publishing our 1993 version of the War Pensions Manual. We also consulted the CBDE in revising the instructions in 1995.

The War Pension Agency consults DSS HQ Policy Branch as a matter of course when preparing instructions. Again, I can confirm that we consulted with them on the 1993 and 1995 versions.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of claimants for a war pension are currently referred by the War Pensions Agency to (a) an independent specialist and (b) a regional consultant; for what reasons claimants are referred to (a) or (b); and what rights claimants have to choose to whom they are referred. [19114]

Mr. Heald: These are matters for Mr. Kevin Caldwell, chief executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from K. C. Caldwell to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 19 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the percentage of claimants for a War Pension currently referred by the Agency to independent specialists and regional consultants, for what reason, and what rights claimants have to choose to whom they are referred.

During 1996, the Agency cleared 81,170 claims to War Pension. During the same period, 13,409 appeals were processed and cleared to the Pensions Appeal Tribunal. We requested 9,193 medical Consultant (Specialist) reports and 590 Regional Consultant Reports during 1996. As a percentage of all cases cleared by the Agency in 1996 this equates to Consultant (Specialist)—19.7% and Regional Consultant—0.6%.

Claimants are referred to Consultants (Specialists) primarily to establish for the Secretary of State the definitive diagnosis of any medical conditions underlying a claimed disablement. Regional Consultant opinion is sought where there is conflict of opinion between Consultants or where the case is medically exceptionally complicated. The Agency holds a list of the Regional Consultants that it uses on a nationwide basis, reflecting the major medical specialities.

In Individual cases, the appropriate Regional Consultant is chosen by the Agency Medical Advisor dealing with the claim. Agency requests for Consultant (Specialist) reports are directed to the appropriate Benefits Agency Disability Benefits Centre who arrange appointments on our behalf and use local knowledge to request a report from a suitable Consultant in the locality concerned.

The Secretary of State may award a War Disablement Pension only when a certificate to the effect that disablement is due to service has been provided to him by a medical office or board of medical officers appointed or recognised by him for that purpose. He must be given the opportunity to satisfy himself on that issue. Should, exceptionally, a claimant object to being seen by any individual Consultant/Regional Consultant, or alternatively have in mind a particular Consultant, the Secretary of State will consider representations from a claimant as to the appointment. However, the decision as to appointment is for the Secretary of State to make, and not the claimant.

Should a claimant have been seen and treated by a particular Consultant, then efforts will be made to obtain any relevant casenotes, or factual reports from the Consultant concerned.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people lost their (a) invalidity benefit and (b) incapacity benefit in the first year of incapacity benefit in Wales; and how many have lost benefit since; [19055]

(2) how many people have lost their (a) invalidity and (b) incapacity benefit in each benefit district in Wales since the introduction of the incapacity benefit; and what are the estimated savings which have accrued. [19056]

Mr. Burt: The administration of incapacity benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 19 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking how many people lost their (a) Invalidity Benefit (IVB) and (b) Incapacity Benefit (IB) in the first year of IB in Wales; and how many have lost benefit since and; how many people have lost their (a) IVB and (b) IB in each benefit district in Wales since the introduction of the IB; and what are the estimated savings which have accrued.

Information is not available in the format requested. Statistics are not kept separately for customer's formerly in receipt of IVB and customer's claiming IB. The available information is shown in the attached tables.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Care Allowance

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the exact budgetary provisions made for the extra child care allowance available for two of the public sector pilots in the parent plus scheme. [19833]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: On a provisional basis, £240,000 has been allocated from the parent plus budget to cover the cost of essential child care costs incurred during activities associated with the scheme. This amount is not cash limited and will be reviewed if necessary. There is no restriction on the number who claim it, or on the number of times an individual lone parent may claim. The total amount allocated has been apportioned based on the number of lone parents claiming income support in the two areas concerned: £95,700 has been allocated to north Worcestershire and £144,700 to Warwickshire.

Child Support Agency

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the progress to date of the Child Support Agency in obtaining child support payments from absent parents who were not previously paying maintenance. [19555]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant CB. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. David Nicholson, dated 19 March 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the progress of the Child Support Agency in obtaining child support payments.

During 1995/96 the Agency was involved in the payment of over £301 million in maintenance arising from child support assessments. This included about £137 million arranged to be paid direct between parents, and over £164 million collected by the Agency. The amount collected was more than double that of 1994/95 (£76 million).

During the current financial year, the total collected and arranged was over £322 million as at 31st January. Achieving the target set by the Secretary of State of £380 million—£400 million will entail an increase of 27%–33% on the collected/arranged figure required last year, but the Agency is on course to succeed in meeting this challenge.

The Agency has also become increasingly successful in tracing absent parents. In 1995/96, over 55,000 specialist traces were successfully undertaken by the Agency, the vast majority of which referred to absent parents whose whereabouts were doubtful. In January, 7,361 were successful (the highest ever recorded), bringing the total so far this year to 53,047.

The Agency has continued to put an increased emphasis on the enforcement of maintenance payments. In 1995/96 53,000 deduction from earnings orders (DEOs) were issued, an increase of 65% on the 1994/95 figure. During the current financial year 47,814 DEOs have been issued as at 31st January.

The Agency is increasingly obtaining liability orders through the courts, mainly against non-compliant self employed absent parents. The number of liability orders applied for in this financial year as at the end of January was 1,702, an increase of 58% compared with the same period last year.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the number of outstanding cases in north Staffordshire currently being processed by the Dudley Child Support Agency office; what is the current waiting time for outstanding cases; and if he will make a statement. [20186]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant CB. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Joan Walley, dated 19 March 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about cases being actioned by the Dudley Child Support Agency Centre (CSAC)

At the end of February, the Agency was dealing with a total of 418,369 cases in which action had not been fully completed; the Dudley CSAC has responsibility for 65,467 of these cases. Information is not available, however, on the number of these cases which originated from North Staffordshire. this could be obtained only by a special clerical exercise, the cost of which would be disproportionate.

The Agency measures its performance in relation to waiting times against its Secretary of State target to clear 60% of new maintenance assessments within 26 weeks, and for no more than 10% of cases to be outstanding for more than 52 weeks at 31 March 1997. As of 28 February 1997, 53% of maintenance assessments had been cleared within 26 weeks, and 13% were outstanding for more than 52 weeks.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. McAllion : To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under what circumstances the CSA is permitted to pass on confidential information gained from claimants or absent parents to another person or body. [20161]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant CB. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. John McAllion, dated 19 March 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about confidential information within the Child Support Agency.

This Agency only discloses confidential information to third parties in the following circumstances; with the consent of the person involved, to comply with a court order, or under legislative provision to meet statutory requirements.

In specific circumstances, the Child Support Act (1991) and associated Regulations, allows the Secretary of State and/or a Child Support Officer to disclose any information held for the purposes of the Act. For example, information may be disclosed to a Court, a Tribunal, an appropriate Authority in connection with Housing Benefit or Council Tax or to another party to the assessment where such information enables that party to understand how decisions, in relation to a maintenance assessment, were reached.

The Agency is registered with the Office of the Data Protection Registrar, in accordance with the Data Protection Act (1984). Disclosure of personal information held by the Agency will only be made in accordance with our registration except where specific exemptions apply. For example, disclosure to the Police can be made where it is for the purpose of prevention or detection of serious crime or in an emergency where disclosure is required to prevent injury or damage to anyone's health.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time taken to process an application for child support up to the point where the absent parent is informed of his or her liability to pay; and what is the average amount of arrears owed by the absent parent at this point. [20163]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant CB. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. John McAllion, dated 19 March 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about applications for child support to the Child Support Agency, but I am afraid I cannot give you precise information in the format you have requested.

The first part of your question asks for the average time taken to process an application up to the point where the absent parent is notified of their liability to pay. The Agency does not collect general information on average processing times, but measures performance against its Secretary of State target to clear 60% of new maintenance applications within 26 weeks. At the end of February, 53% of new maintenance applications were being cleared within 26 weeks, and 13% of all applications were over 52 weeks old.

The second part of your question relates to the average amount of arrears which accrue between an application being made and the point at which the absent parent is informed of liability; this is called the initial payment period. Information is not collected by the Agency's financial management system and debt management system on the average amount of arrears which accrue, during this period. There is no business need to do so, and as several major factors are involved a rough average figure at this stage would have little meaning. For example, an absent parent may have responded promptly to our enquiry form and thus qualified to defer the effective date of the claim for 8 weeks. They may also have been making voluntary payments to the parent with care during this period, and when these are reported and verified, the amount of arrears is reduced accordingly. Finally, either or both parents may ask for the assessment to be reviewed at this stage, which can lead to an adjustment in the original amount.

The Agency has, however, addressed the issue of debt accumulating in the interim pay period by establishing early contact with the absent parent to arrange voluntary payment of maintenance and has also introduced a facility to defer the effective date of a claim if an absent parent quickly returns his or her maintenance enquiry form. Encouraging the absent parent to co operate with the Agency shortens the time between application and assessment, thus minimising the build up of arrears.

These policies have proved to be effective as, since April 1996. the Agency has recorded over £24m in voluntary payments made during the initial payment period in cases subsequently using the collection service.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of child support appeals (a) being processed, (b) outstanding for more than 26 weeks and (c) determined in favour of (i) the Child Support Agency and (ii) the client at the end of each month since April 1994. [21473]

Mr. Mitchell: This is a matter for the Independent Tribunal Service.

Benefits Agency Appellants

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Benefits Agency appellants have been refused oral hearings at an appeal tribunal (a) nationally, (b) in the West Pennine district and (c) in the Oldham district since the right to automatic oral hearings was restricted in October 1996. [20116]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for the Independent Tribunal Service.

Family Credit (Fife)

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families were in receipt of family credit in the Fife Benefits Agency office area in each quarter since February 1995. [19942]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of family credit is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Ms Rachel Squire, dated 19 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many families were in receipt of Family Credit (FC) in the Fife Benefits Agency office area in each quarter since February 1995.

The information is not available in the format requested. It may be helpful if I explain that FC is administered centrally by the Family Credit Unit. Statistics are produced on a national basis and provide the number of families in receipt of FC within a particular Benefits Agency (BA) office area at a given date. Such details are not produced on a regular monthly or quarterly basis. The information available only serves as a "snap-shot" of the position at that date and does not provide details of the number of families in receipt of FC over a given period.

There are 4 benefit offices within the Fife District, these are Cowdenbeath, Dunfermline, Kirkcaldy and Leven. FC statistics relating to each of these offices produced since February 1995 have been provided in the attached annex.

I hope you find this information useful.

Annex: The number of families in receipt of family credit within the Fife benefits agency office area, at the date indicated, are as follows:

Social Security and Medical Appeals Tribunals

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what operational problems in the analytical services division of the Independent Tribunal Service prevented figures being given for social security and medical appeals tribunals in 1995. [19296]

Mr. Roger Evans: The Department's analytical services division is responsible for producing and publishing statistical information regarding social security and medical appeal tribunals. It obtains data relating to social security appeals from the Independent Tribunal Service's computer systems. Due to problems with the computer system serving the Independent Tribunal Service's north-west region, data for the final quarter of 1995 were not available for inclusion in the annual publication "Social Security Statistics 1996". Figures for the final quarter are contained in the "Quarterly Social Security Appeal Tribunal Statistics December 1995", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Data relating to medical appeal tribunals were not affected by the computer problem. However, owing to competing work priorities, the data for the final quarter of 1995 had not been fully processed by analytical services division when "Social Security Statistics 1996" was due for publication. Figures for the final quarter of 1995 are contained in "Quarterly Medical Appeal Tribunal Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Personal Pensions

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will calculate the total reduction in future expenditure on the state earnings-related pension scheme, at net present value, arising from membership of appropriate personal pensions, assuming the social discount rate used by his Department. [19949]

Mr. Heald: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) on 24 February, Official Report, column 90.

Attendance Allowance (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people living in the London borough of Wandsworth are waiting for a decision to be made regarding their claim for attendance allowance. [20180]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 19 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about how many people living in the London Borough of Wandsworth are waiting for a decision to be made regarding their claim for Attendance Allowance (AA).

The information is not available in the format requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Statistics are not kept for the number of people waiting for a decision to be made on a claim for AA or for individual regions. I am however able to provide the Secretary of State targets for clearing AA New Claims and the year to date clearance rates for Sutton Disability Benefit Centre (DBC) which covers the Benefits Agency Districts shown in the attached annex.

The information is set out in the table below:-

1996–97 Secretary of State targets	Sutton DBC 1 April 1996 to 28 February 1997
68 per cent. in 30 days	79.70 per cent. in 30 days
85 per cent. in 53 days	95.49 per cent. in 53 days

Figures are provisional and subject to change. I hope you find this reply helpful.

Reduced Benefits Directions

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a breakdown, by ethnic origin, of parents with care against whom reduced benefits directions were issued in 1994–95. [21022]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available.

National Insurance

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of (i) men and (ii) women of working age in each year since 1978–79 had a national insurance contribution record for the year with contributions equivalent to less than 25 times the lower earnings limit; and what proportion of these (a) had a similar contribution record for two or more years running and (b) were in receipt of contribution credits in each year. [21027]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the tables:

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what liability is placed on (i) training providers and (ii) employers providing work placements for young people with non-employed status on youth credits/youth training for national insurance payments for young people aged (a) 16 to 17 years and (b) 18 years and over.[21020]

Mr. Heald: Neither training providers nor employers providing work placements have any national insurance contribution liability in respect of any young people with non-employed status on youth training.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of Stae for Social Security what credits in respect of national insurance contributions awarded to young people aged 18 years and over who are on youth credits/youth training with non-employed status. [21021]

Mr. Heald: Young people aged 18 years and over may be awarded a class 1 national insurance credit for each week in which they attend an approved training course, provided that they had reached age 18 before the beginning of the tax year in which the period of training occurs and that the course, as its outset, is not expected to continue for more than 12 months. If their contribution record for the tax year in which they reached age 18 and for subsequent tax years does not enable them to satisfy the contribution conditions for entitlement to jobseeker's allowance and incapacity benefit, they may also be awarded special credits for those years.

Class 3 credits for pension purposes are available to all young people for the contribution year in which they reach age 18 and the two preceding years.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what would be the level in 1997–98 of the national insurance lower earnings limit and contribution ceiling if they had been uprated in line with earnings since 1979; [21092]

(2) if he will estimate the cumulative effect on Government revenues since 1979 of the change in indexation from earnings to prices of (a) the national insurance lower earnings limit and (b) the national insurance contribution ceiling for employees and employers; and if he will provide figures for the net revenues. [21073]

Mr. Heald: The lower and upper limits for class 1 national insurance contributions are linked to the level of the basic retirement pension. If the basic retirement pension had been uprated since 1980 in line with the higher of earnings or prices, the lower and upper earnings limits for 1997–98 would be £86 and £645 respectively. The estimated full-year effects of limits set at these levels for 1997–98 are shown in the table. Information for earlier years is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the information in his answer to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) of 2 July 1996, Official Report, column 411, on the value of unpaid national insurance contributions. [21057]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

A random survey of employers known to the Contributions Agency estimated that underpayments of class 1 national insurance contributions by employers for 1995–96 were £93 million. The survey was not undertaken for 1994–95 and no figures are available.

The self-employed pay class 2 and 4 contributions. Class 2 contributions are collected by the Contributions Agency by direct debit payments or in response to the issue of quarterly bills. Estimates of unpaid class 2 could be given only at disproportionate cost.

Class 4 contributions are collected by the Inland Revenue. The Inland Revenue accounts which were used to provide details in the reply to the hon. member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) of 2 July 1996 have not yet been finalised and no later information is available.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on national insurance revenues of each (a) increase and (b) decrease of £1 up to £10, in the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions. [21067]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table.

The table shows the estimated full-year effects of a £10 increase or decrease of the lower earnings limit for class 1 national insurance contributions in 1997–98. The effects of smaller changes would be roughly pro rata.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the information in his answer given to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon, of 1 July 1996, Official Report, column 324, on the numbers in receipt of family credit and disability working allowance with earnings below the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions. [21058]

Mr. Heald: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon on 25 February, Official Report, column 207.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have received payments under the earnings top up scheme to date; how many of these are employees; and what proportion have had earnings below the level of the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions. [21068]

Mr. Roger Evans: At 28 February 9,000 awards of earnings top up had been made. Some 8,346 awards were to employees and, of these, 27 per cent. were to people with earnings below the lower earnings limit. These figures are provisional and based on a 100 per cent. count of the live cases at 28 February.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the effect on the number of employees who (a) are paying national insurance contributions and (b) have earnings above the contribution ceiling of the change in indexation from earnings to prices of the national insurance contribution limits since 1979. [21091]

Mr. Heald: If the level of the basic retirement pension, to which the lower and upper limits for class 1 national insurance contributions are linked, had been uprated since 1980 in line with the higher or earnings or prices, an estimated 1.2 million fewer employees would be liable to pay contributions in 1997–98, and some 2.1 million fewer employees would have earnings above the upper earnings limit.

1. Assumes the current 3 per cent. contribution rate would apply to earnings below the lower earnings limit.

2. There is no upper earnings limit on employers' contributions.

3. Assumes the current 2 per cent. contribution rate would apply to earnings below the lower earnings limit.

4. Assumes the current 10 per cent. contribution rate would apply to earnings above the upper earnings limit.

5. The additional yield from contributions on earnings below the lower earnings limit is estimated to be negligible.

6. The figures for 2000–01 and later years are based on the assumptions contained in the "National Insurance Fund Long Term Financial Estimates" (HC160) published in January 1995. All figures exclude the effects of contracted-out rebates.

Member for Gordon of 26 March 1996, Official Report, column 559, on extending employer national insurance contributions to taxable benefits in kind; and if he will provide figures for employee contributions. [21104]

Mr. Heald: It is estimated that extending employer national insurance contributions to those taxable benefits in kind not already subject to an employer charge would raise £250 million in 1997–98. Extending employee NICs to cover the same benefits in kind would yield a further £300 million a year.

Departmental Budgets

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of his Department's annual budget was spent in Wales in each of the last five years; and how much that proportion was in (a) 1997 prices and (b) cash terms for each year. [20706]

Mr. Burt: The Department does not routinely collect information on expenditure by country.

However, based on figures published in the "Statistical Supplement to the Financial Statement and Budget Report", previously "The Statistical Supplement to the Autumn Statement", it is estimated that about 6 per cent. of all social security expenditure is in respect of Wales.

Basic Pension Plus

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated pension fund and weekly pension on retirement of a person on average earnings under basic pension plus using the Government Actuary's assumptions on investment returns. [21476]

Mr. Heald: Based on the Government Actuary's prudent assumptions for real investment returns of +4.25 per cent. per annum, it is estimated that people on average earnings for most of their working lives should accumulate a pension fund of some £130,000, equivalent to a pension of £175 a week in today's prices. In practice, funds could do much better than this; over the past 45 years or so, investments in equities have enjoyed returns averaging 7.7 per cent. a year in real terms.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of basic pension plus on charges by pension providers; and if he will make a statement; [21480]

(2) what steps he is taking to keep down pension charges under basic pension plus. [21481]

Mr. Heald: Basic pension plus will apply to everyone and its security is guaranteed, therefore marketing costs will be lower than for existing personal pensions. We are also confident that the pensions industry would respond to the economies of scale by designing low cost products, but we would not hesitate to use legal powers to impose a ceiling on charges, in particular transfer charges, should it prove necessary.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the risks of mis-selling under the basic pension plus proposals; and if he will make a statement. [21482]

Mr. Heald: Basic pension plus will apply to everyone and its security is guaranteed, so the sort of alleged mis-selling that occurred in the late 1980s is not directly relevant. Moreover, any company that failed to compensate for past mis-selling would not be eligible to manage a basic pension plus fund.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to consult on the proposals under basic pension plus; and if he will make a statement. [21520]

Mr. Heald: Representatives of the pensions industry and other interested parties will be invited to join a working group to discuss the proposals and how they might be implemented. A Green Paper will then be published inviting views more generally.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has under basic pension plus to ensure the maintenance of full records of contributors' rebates, credits and home responsibilities protection. [21525]

Mr. Heald: It is proposed that the Contributions Agency would maintain full records of people's rebates, credits and home responsibilities protection as it does now.

Mr. Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the rebates under basic pension plus may be paid into occupational pension schemes. [21478]

Mr. Heald: Yes.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on survivors' benefits under basic pension plus. [21518]

Mr. Heald: Funds of those in the new scheme who die before drawing any money purchase benefits[1] would be inherited in full by the surviving spouse, or the estate where there is no spouse. Some or all of these funds would have to be used by a surviving spouse to purchase an annuity, or income could be withdrawn. The state would also guarantee the basic pension rights of widows. In cases where the individual dies after purchasing an annuity, the surviving spouse would get an annuity equal to 50 per cent. of the annuity in payment to the deceased.

Note:

[1]Under basic pension plus, the £9 per week payments will always provide money purchase benefits. The payments on 5 per cent. of earnings between the lower earnings limit and the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions purposes will also provide money purchase benefits, except in a contracted-out salary-related scheme—COSR. In the case of a COSR, the scheme will be required to provide a pension to a surviving spouse equal to half of the pension in payment to the member at the time of death. If death occurs before retirement, half the pension accrued by the member at the date of death would be payable to the surviving spouse.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated pension fund and weekly pension on retirement of a person on average earnings under basic pension plus assuming investment returns equivalent to those since 1979. [21523]

Mr. Heald: The real return on pension fund investments from 1979 to 1994 was 9.6 per cent. in real terms. Assuming that rate of investment growth, it is estimated a person on average earnings paying in the minimum contributions over a working lifetime would accumulate a fund worth £553,000 by retirement, paying a pension of £745 a week in today's money.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the cost of state pensions after 2040 assuming the introduction of basic pension plus. [21396]

Mr. Heald: It is estimated that, assuming the introduction of basic pension plus, expenditure on state pensions will fall rapidly after 2040, eventually relieving the taxpayer of a cost of some £40 billion a year.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he plans to take to ensure that prudent investment principles are adopted by scheme managers under basic pension plus. [21397]

Mr. Heald: We would discuss with the pensions industry regulators and others any appropriate restrictions to guard against exploitation of the Government guarantee on the basic pension. We may introduce legislation to require scheme managers to publish, and be liable for adhering to, a statement of investment principles based on the "prudent person" principle; to prescribe rules on the amounts of funds to be allocated to different types of asset, and to require pension providers to disregard the existence of the Government guarantee in investment decisions.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on the effect on the estimated future income related benefits claimants level of the introduction of basic pension plus; [21398]

(2) what estimate he has made of the reduction in future income related benefits claimant levels in the event that investment returns on basic pension plus exceed those used by the Government Actuary by (a) 1 per cent. and (b) 2 per cent. [21399]

Mr. Heald: It is not possible to provide such estimates given that, under basic pension plus, no-one will retire before 2040 or later.

However, the number of pensioners reliant on income-related benefits could be lower than under the present scheme, even if there were no increase in the number making voluntary additional provision.

Mr. Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the impact on the public finances of basic pension plus; and if he will make a statement. [21475]

Mr. Heald: Under basic pension plus, the value of the new rebates, less the impact of the proposed tax changes, will grow by a net average amount of about £160 million a year, reaching a peak of about £7 billion or $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of GDP around 2040—substantially less than the net costs of rebates from SERPS, which peaked at almost $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of GDP.

The starting cost of the new scheme will depend on the precise age limit chosen. Expenditure on state pensions will fall rapidly after 2040 and savings in public expenditure will build up reaching some £40 billion a year.

Mr. Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated pension fund and weekly pension on retirement of a person on average earnings under basic pension plus assuming investment returns equivalent to those over the last 50 years. [21477]

Mr. Heald: The average annual increase in the ordinary industrial share index in real terms from 1950 to 1995 was 7.7 per cent. Assuming that rate on investment growth, it is estimated that a person on average earnings paying in the minimum contributions over a working lifetime would accumulate a fund worth £320,000 by retirement, paying a pension of £435 a week.

Note

Pension amount is rounded to nearest £5.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the proposals under basic pension plus affect the accrued rights of existing contributors to the state pension scheme; and if he will make a statement. [21521]

Mr. Heald: Basic pension plus will be phased in over a generation. Current pensioners and all but the youngest national insurance contributors, will be unaffected. The rights already built up under the existing state pension scheme by young people covered by the new scheme when it is first established will be respected.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that the value of the basic pension guarantee and the £9 rebate under basic pension plus rises in line with the basic state pension under the present pay-as-you-go system. [21526]

Mr. Heald: Our intention is that the basic pension guarantee would go up in line with basic state pension. Rebates would also be increased to reflect a higher basic pension.

Mr. Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated pension fund and weekly pension on retirement of a person on average earnings under basic pension plus assuming investment returns (a) 1 per cent. and (b) 2 per cent. higher than those used by the Government Actuary. [21479]

Mr. Heald: Estimated pension funds of £166,000 and £216,000 respectively by retirement, paying pensions of £225 and £290 a week respectively.

Mr. Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each year from 2020 to 2040 the impact on public expenditure of the equalisation of state pension age at 65 years and the reforms of the state earnings-related pension scheme 1995; and what is the projected revenue forgone as a result of basic pension plus in these years. [21484]

Mr. Heald: Information relating to every year from 2020 to 2040 is not available. The measures in the Pensions Act 1995[1] will produce public expenditure savings of over £6 billion in 2020, over £9 billion in 2030, and over £10 billion in 2040[2].

Under basic pension plus, the value of the new rebates less the impact of the proposed tax changes will grow by a net average amount of about £160 million a year, reaching a peak of about £7 billion or ½ per cent. of GDP around 2040. The starting cost of the new scheme will depend on the precise age limit chosen.

Note

[1] These measures include equalisation of state pension age, annualisation of SERPS, breaking the links between SERPS and contracting-out, and the introduction of age-related rebates for appropriate personal pensions and contracted-out money purchase schemes. [2] The savings in expenditure for the national insurance fund will be £7 billion in 2020, over £10 billion in 2030 and £12 billion in 2040.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if an individual's pension fund under the basic pension plus proposals goes to his estate on his death. [21519]

Mr. Heald: Yes. If an individual dies before drawing any benefits from his fund and there is no surviving spouse, then the funds built up under the proposals would form part of the estate. Similarly, if the individual dies while withdrawing an income from his fund, but before annuity purchase, then the residual fund would form part of the estate.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the proposals under basic pension plus would retain home responsibilities protection and national insurance contribution credits; and if he will make a statement. [21524]

Mr. Heald: The proposals under basic pension plus would retain home responsibilities protection and national insurance contribution credits. They would contribute towards building up entitlement to the guaranteed basic pension, as they do now towards the current basic state pension. For those contributors not in the new scheme, credits and HRP would continue as now.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumption underlay his forecasts that the £175 pension payable to those on average earnings under his basic pension plus proposal would represent (a) 26 per cent. and (b) 21 per cent. of average earnings. [21099]

Mr. Heald: I refer the hon. Member to my letter of 13 March to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman), which was copies to the hon. Member and placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated value of the pension payable to the average earner under his basic pension plus proposals assuming 1.5 per cent. per annum real earnings growth. [21098]

Mr. Heald: Assuming real-earnings growth of 1.5 per cent. per annum, a person on average earnings paying in the minimum contributions to basic pension plus should, over a working lifetime, accumulate a fund sufficient to pay a pension of £173 a week.

Family Credit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families claimed family credit in the constituencies of Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale and of Roxburgh and Berwickshire in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [21529]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table:

Number of family credit claims by Benefits Agency offices

BA office	April 1993	April 1994	April 1995	April 1996	January 1997
Edinburgh East	1,298	1,432	1,487	1,599	1,632
Edinburgh South	1,283	1,493	1,573	1,748	1,860
Galashiels	1,127	1,262	1,372	1,511	1,549

1. Family credit is a national benefit administered by the family credit unit in Preston. As such statistics are prepared on a national basis.
2. A periodic scan of the computer system is conducted which identifies the number of families in receipt of FC, at that given date, within the area covered by individual Benefits Agency office areas. Such scans do not produce accurate details with regard to the number of families receiving FC within such an area during any particular year, as each FC award is payable for 26 weeks and the figures serve only as a "snap-shot" of the situation at that particular date.
3. The above offices service the said constituencies.

Pensions Act 1995

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the impact to public funds of the measures contained in the Pensions Act 1995. [21483]

Mr. Heald: The measures in the Pensions Act 1995 will reduce tax and national insurance revenue by about £0.5 billion in 1997–98, rising gradually to around £1.0 billion in 2050. The effect on expenditure in the first few years will be broadly neutral. The measures will produce expenditure savings of over £6 billion per annum in 2020 and over £10 billion in 2050.

Habitual Residence Test (Appeals)

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what requests he has received from local authorities for compensatory payments to cover unplanned expenditure under section 17 of the Children Act 1989 to families with children who have failed the habitual residence test and have expressed their intention to appeal to the Independent Social Security Appeals Tribunal against those decisions. [21522]

Mr. Roger Evans: None. Expenditure under section 17 of the Childrens Act 1989 is a matter for the Secretary of State for Health.

Council Tax and Housing Benefits

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in the constituencies of Roxburgh and Berwickshire and of Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale claimed (a) council tax benefit and (b) housing benefit for each of the past five years for which figures are available. [21527]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table:

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of people claiming (a) disability living allowance, (b) attendance allowance and (c) invalid care allowance in the constituencies of Roxburgh and Berwickshire and of Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale for each of the most recent five years for which figures are available. [21533]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefit Fraud Hotline

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many calls have been received by the national benefit fraud hotline. [21617]

Mr. Heald: The number of calls to the national benefit fraud hotline up to 20 March 1997 was 195,891.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many calls per day were received by the national benefit fraud hotline in the most recent period for which figures are available. [21618]

Mr. Heald: The national benefit fraud hotline receives, on average, 1,512 calls per day.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the estimated savings to date from action arising from calls to the national benefit fraud hotline. [21619]

Mr. Heald: The national benefit fraud hotline has achieved savings of £23.2 million up to the end of February 1997. There are also further potential savings of £12.3 million from referrals being currently investigated, which shows a potential overall benefit saving in the region of £35.5 million.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to provide the independent living fund with greater flexibility in managing their finances. [21608]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The independent living fund trustees have requested that they be given the power to obtain bank overdrafts, should they be required in the future. I am pleased to announce that the ILF trust deeds have therefore been amended to give them power to borrow, subject to the written approval of the Secretary of State for Social Security. It is proposed that a Government guarantee be provided for any loan, and parliamentary approval for the guarantee is sought. Further information is contained in a parliamentary minute, "Class XII, Vote 2 Department of Social Security: Independent Living Funds", Cm 3590, which has been laid before the House today.

Appeals

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce amending regulations in respect of appeals to the Social Security and Child Support Commissioners. [21604]

Mr. Roger Evans: I have today laid regulations to make changes in relation to applications for leave to appeal against a tribunal decision. These regulations require any application for leave to appeal to a commissioner against the decision of a tribunal to be accompanied by a copy of the full statement of the tribunal's decision. A notice of appeal must also be accompanied by a copy of this statement. Arrangements will be made to ensure that appellants are aware of the need to request a full statement of the tribunal's decision.

The regulations also amend the time limit for making an application to the appeal tribunal chairman for leave to appeal to a commissioner so that it begins with the date on which the full statement of the tribunal's decision is given or sent to the appellant. I have consulted the council on tribunals on these proposals and copies of the letter to them and their response have been placed in the Library

All-work Test

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who were on invalidity benefit have (a) failed the all-work test for incapacity benefit and (b) appealed against the decision (i) successfully and (ii) unsuccessfully; and how many have subsequently been (1) awarded and (2) refused jobseeker's allowance. [21183]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available.

Benefit Recipients (Study Hours)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people aged (a) 16 to 17 years and (b) 18 to 24 years have been disqualified from benefit due to the rule forbidding more than 16 hours study in each of the last three years in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales, (iii) England and (iv) each English region. [21180]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of bills to his Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21201]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

	Percentage
Departmental headquarters	89
Benefits agency	98
Contributions agency	96
Child support agency	91
War pensions agency	98
Information technology services agency	99
Resettlements agency	92
Departmental total	96

1. It is not possible to disaggregate the information between payments which were subject to contractual agreements and those which were not.

2. The figure for the Resettlement Agency relates to the period April to October 1995.

3. Figures for departmental headquarters includes payments made by the Independent Tribunal Service in the period to December 1995 which cannot be separately identified.

Home Responsibilities Protection

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the information contained in his answer to the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) of 29 February 1996, Official Report, columns 709-10, relating to home responsibilities protection. [21064]

Mr. Heald: The information available is given in the table:

Thousands

	1993–94	1994–95

1. Entitlement—HRP used where earnings or credits are not sufficient for a qualifying year for pension purposes.

2. Figures are for U.K.

3. Figures for 1994–95 are not complete as some employers tax returns may not have been received at the time of the extract.

4. Excludes women with a reduced rate option.

5. The sample only includes people who have been allocated a national insurance number and excludes some people who did not have a NINO at the time of the child benefit award.

1 per cent. sample of national insurance recording system records taken at February 1996—home responsibilities protection statistics 1994–95.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number and proportion of women with earnings below the lower earnings limit in the most recent available year whose circumstances would qualify them for home responsibilities protection. [21061]

Mr. Heald: The information required to make such an estimate is not available.

The national insurance recording system holds details of eligibility for home responsibilities protection for those who meet the relevant criteria. However, it is not possible to identify separately women who are in employment and have earnings below the lower earnings limit for payment of national insurance contributions because neither they nor their employers are required to provide details of such earnings.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans there are for the feasibility study being conducted by the Contributions Agency into the formation of a national inquiry centre to include consideration of (a) research, (b) policy, (c) other pro-active work and (d) the processing of telephone inquiries; and if he will make a statement. [21188]

Mr. Heald: The Contributions Agency is currently examining the work that might be included in an inquiry centre. This includes unsolicited telephone calls and correspondence. No decision has yet been made about the scope of the inquiry centre.

State Pensions

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the basic retirement pension and (b) state earnings-related pension scheme for male and female contracted-in employees on average and half average earnings assuming pensions are uprated in line with (1) prices and (2) earnings in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 2025 and (iii) 2035, based on the Government Actuary's assumptions for annual increases in (A) retail prices index, (B) the Rossi index and (C) earnings expressed in current prices and as a percentage of average earnings. [21063]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the tables:

Actual earnings revaluation figures have been used up to 1995–96, a provisional 1996–97 earnings revaluation has been used.
3. Uprating in line with prices (whether RPI or Rossi) is assumed to be at 5 per cent. per annum.
4. It is assumed that there is real average earnings growth of 2 per cent. per annum and that individuals have constant (non-age specific) earnings in each year of their working life.
5. Individuals are contracted in throughout their working life.
6. The actual levels of retirement pension, lower earnings limit, and upper earnings limit, are used up to 1997–98. The links between RP and the LEL and the UEL are maintained.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated value of the SERPS pension that would be earned by a woman on average female earnings throughout her time in work, assuming that she benefited from (a) five, (b) 10, (c) 15 and (d) 20 protected years due to caring responsibilities. 2. It is assumed that the woman retires in 2044–45 aged 65 and she has been contracted in throughout her working life. In each year from age 16, except those years covered by home responsibilities protection, she earns average female adult earnings (£290 per week in 1996–97).
3. Real average earnings growth of 2 per cent. per annum is assumed.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated value of the SERPS pension that would be earned by a woman on half average female earnings in receipt of maximum family credit, assuming that she benefited from (a) five, (b) 10, (c) 15 and (d) 20 years of SERPS credits for those on family credit. [20466]

Mr. Heald [holding answer 27 March 1997]: The information is in the table.

Family credit period	Weekly SERPS (£)	Of which extra SERPS in respect of family credit (£)
None	50.55	None
5 years, age 25-29	51.45	0.90
10 years, age 25-34	52.45	1.90
15 years, age 25-39	53.20	2.65
20 years, age 25-44	53.95	3.40

The Government Actuary's Department.

Notes:
1. Figures are in 1996–97 prices and rounded to the nearest 5p.
2. Employment and earnings assumptions are as follows:

— the woman retires in 2044–45 aged 65;

— half average female adult earnings of £145 per week gross and £126 per week net in 1996–97 earned in each year from age 16;

— any family credit received is taken into account as earnings in the SERPS calculation;

— real average gross and net earnings growth of 2 per cent. per annum;

— the woman is contracted in throughout her working life.

3. Each hypothetical case assumes that the woman is a lone parent working for at least 30 hours per week throughout her period of FC receipt, with an eldest child born at the start of the FC period, a middle child born at the start of the third year of FC and a youngest child born at the start of the fifty year of FC.
4. Maximum FC refers to the total amount of any adult and child premiums to which the claimant is entitled where the claimant's earnings are less than the applicable amount and so the taper does not bite. The 1996–97 applicable amount is £75.20, which is less than half average female adult earnings. It has therefore been assumed that each hypothetical case receives the full amount of FC to which it is entitled after the operation of the taper. This amount of FC will vary as children are born and age, thus entitling the claimant to different premiums, but it has been assumed that each of the premiums and the applicable amount remains constant in real terms.

Discretionary Social Fund

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what gross budget will be set for the discretionary social fund in 1997–98. [21652]

Mr. Roger Evans: The social fund gross discretionary budget for 1997–98 will be £467.5 million. Some £97 million will be allocated to community care grants, £370 million to loans and the remaining £0.5 million will be set aside as a contingency reserve. The new allocations represents an increase of £27 million over the total gross budget for 1996–97.

Details of individual district budgets allocations are in the Library.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces (Equipment)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) tanks, (b) artillery pieces, (c) RAF fighter aircraft, (d) frigates and destroyers and (e) infantry were in the possession of United Kingdom armed forces in (i) 1979, (ii) 1990 and (iii) 1997. [14067]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 4 February 1997]: Since 1979, the circumstances in which we envisage British armed forces being deployed have changed dramatically. In particular, with the end of the cold war, and the dissolution of the Warsaw pact, we have been able to reduce the size of the front line while spending a higher proportion of the defence budget on new equipment for the services to enhance significantly their military capabilities. Each of the three services has taken delivery of new, advanced equipment including the Challenger 2 tank, AS90 howitzer, the Duke class type 23 frigate and advanced air-to-air missiles. In addition, orders have been placed for military equipment including the Apache attack helicopter and amphibious ships which will further enhance the fighting capability and mobility of the armed forces. The Government are, of course, also committed to the procurement of the Eurofighter 2000 aircraft.

Our forces are robustly configured to face the challenges of the post-cold war world and are the envy of their counterparts around the globe. The Government's forward procurement programme illustrates our commitment to ensuring that this remains the case.

The figures requested by the hon. Gentleman, which are set out in the table, should be considered in this context.

Details of Army equipment holdings are not available in the form requested or across the period concerned. The overall unit establishments for Regular armoured and field artillery regiments have therefore been given to indicate their required front-line strength in the designated years. The figures exclude equipment held by training and research establishments, in store as the war maintenance reserve or awaiting disposal.

United Kingdom holdings of tanks, artillery, fighters, frigate and destroyers and infantry numbers, 1979 to 1997[1]

Year	Tanks[2]	Artillery pieces[3]	Fighters[4]	Frigates and destroyers	Infantry[5]
1979	640	282	126	69	45,600
1990	699	298[6]	157	48	46,900
1997	388	240	100	35	31,900

[1] Figures are for 1 April except for 1997, where they reflect the situation at 1 January.
[2] Figures are for main battle tanks only and exclude armoured reconnaissance vehicles and armoured vehicles royal engineers.
[3] Figures are for field artillery pieces only and exclude air defence artillery, anti-tank guided weapon systems and, in 1979 and 1990, Lance sub-strategic nuclear missile launchers.
[4] Defined as those aircraft established in the air defence role, as indicated by statements on the Defence Estimates.
[5] Figures include British and Gurkha soldiers but exclude Royal Marines, and troops of the Ulster Defence Regiment and the Royal Irish Regiment (Home Service) battalions. Figures include soldier trainees.
[6] Includes the unit establishments for both M107 self-propelled guns and MLRS which was replacing them.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21450]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21734]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21683]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [21690]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Advisory Bodies (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the non-elected bodies responsible to his Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21378]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Organophosphates

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will update his answer of 11 July 1994, Official Report, column 436, on the use of organophosphate insecticides in Operation Granby, in light of the memorandum submitted by his Department to the Defence Select Committee on 26 February. [21593]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library the briefing material prepared by his Department in support of the appearance by the then Minister for the Armed Forces, the right hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley), on BBC2's "Newsnight" programme on 5 July 1993 in respect of Gulf War illness. [18378]

Mr. Soames: No. The briefing material has been withheld under the terms of the internal discussion and advice exemption in part 2 of the code of practice on access to Government information.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Crown Agents

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the transfer of Crown Agents to the Crown Agents Foundation has now been completed. [21789]

Dr. Liam Fox: Vesting of Crown Agents under the provisions of the Crown Agents Act 1996 into The Crown Agents for Overseas Governments and Administrations Ltd. and the transfer of ownership of that company to the Crown Agents Foundation took place today.

Global Environment Facility

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received copies of the second annual report of the Global Environment Facility; and if he will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library. [21788]

Dr. Liam Fox: Copies of the second annual report of the Global Environment Facility have recently been received. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Aid Donors

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the 20 largest overseas aid donors in descending order, indicating the total amount of aid given by each donor country. [21494]

Dr. Liam Fox: In 1995, total flows of official assistance from 21 members of the OECD's development assistance committee to developing and other countries on parts I and II of the DAC list were as follows, in descending order:

Donor	US$ million
1. Japan	14,739
2. Germany	12,038
3. France	9,191
4. USA	8,647
5. UK	3,563
6. Netherlands	3,531
7. Canada	2,317
8. Italy	1,909
9. Denmark	1,904
10. Sweden	1,809
11. Spain	1,348
12. Norway	1,244
13. Australia	1,198
14. Switzerland	1,186
15. Belgium	1,123
16. Austria	1,080
17. Finland	464
18. Portugal	293
19. Ireland	155
20. New Zealand	123
21. Luxembourg	65

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in descending order the 20 largest overseas aid donors on a per capita basis indicating the amount of aid per capita given by each donor country. [21495]

Dr. Fox: In per capita terms, the 21 members of the OECD's development assistance committee provided the following levels of official assistance to developing and other countries on parts I and II of the DAC list in 1995:

Donor	Total assistance per capita (US$ millions)
1. Denmark	363
2. Norway	285
3. Netherlands	228
4. Sweden	205
5. Switzerland	168
6. Luxembourg	167
7. France	158
8. Germany	147
9. Austria	134
10. Japan	117
11. Belgium	112
12. Finland	91
13. Canada	78
14. Australia	66
15. UK	61
16. Ireland	43
17. New Zealand	34
18. Spain	34
19. Italy	33
20. USA	33
21. Portugal	29

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his Department's policy to provide aid to Indonesia for projects of general application which treat East Timor as a province of Indonesia. [21405]

Dr. Liam Fox: While it is not our policy to provide aid on a Government-to-Government basis for projects in East Timor, we do not consider it necessary, or indeed practicable in most cases, to exclude East Timor from projects of general application within Indonesia. This does not imply support for or recognition of Indonesian sovereignty over the territory.

ENVIRONMENT

Packaging Waste

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish (a) the recommendations of the advisory committee on packaging for statutory guidance to be made by the Environment agencies under section 94(4) of the Environment Act 1995 and on accreditation of reprocessors and (b) the background analysis to his decision to adopt shared producer responsibility approach as the basis for the Producer Responsibility Obligation (Packaging Waste) Regulations made under the Environment Act 1995. [21826]

Mr. Gummer: I am today placing in the Library of the House copies of Sir Peter Parker's letter to me of 7 March setting out the recommendations of the advisory committee on packaging on statutory guidance to be made by the environment agencies under section 94(4) and on accreditation of reprocessors. I am also placing in the House copies of the background analysis to the decision to adopt shared producer responsibility as the basis for the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations made under section 93(10) of the Environment Act 1995.

I am also placing in the Library of the House a list of responses to the 1996 consultation papers and arranging for copies to be available for inspection. I will be making similar arrangements for the 1995 consultations responses.

Building Research Establishment

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many members of the current staff of the Building Research Establishment he estimates will leave its service through (a) retirement and early retirement and (b) (i) voluntary and (ii) involuntary redundancy, before the sale of the BRE is completed; and what are the estimated costs. [21363]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Of the 660 staff employed at BRE at close of play on 14 March, none left its service through retirement, early retirement or redundancy before the completion of the sale of BRE on 19 March.

Development Corporations

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs have been created by development corporations since their inception; and if he will make a statement. [21364]

Mr. Curry: Up to 31 March 1996, the urban development corporations have created 187,277 gross jobs in new developments.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of Water Services which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter; [21452]

(2) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of Water Services have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21436]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 22 July 1996, Official Report, column 29.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21710]

Sir Paul Beresford: Details of the advisory non-department public bodies sponsored by my Department are listed in the Cabinet office publication, "Public Bodies 1996". A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on Tuesday 12 March 1996, Official Report, column 518. The information contained in that answer remains correct.

Since then, three new advisory non-departmental public bodies have been established: the Advisory Committee on Building Materials Exports; the Advisory Committee on Plant and Machinery and the Water Regulations Advisory Committee. None of these bodies has been set up on a statutory basis. There is no requirement for them to publish their advice to government, to publish an annual report or to lay an annual report before Parliament.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21736]

Sir Paul Beresford: Details of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department are listed in the Cabinet office publication. "Public Bodies 1996". A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on Thursday 21 March 1996, Official Report, columns 273–74. The information contained in that answer remains correct.

Since then, three new advisory non-departmental public bodies have been established: the Advisory Committee on Building Materials Exports; the Advisory Committee on Plant and Machinery and the Water Regulations Advisory Committee. The Government are under no obligation to consult these bodies on legislative proposals or to publish any response to advice from them.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21693]

Sir Paul Beresford: Details of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department are listed in the Cabinet office publication, "Public Bodies 1996". A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on Wednesday 20 March 1996, Official Report, columns 213-14. The information contained in that answer remains correct.

Since then three new advisory non-departmental public bodies have been established: the Advisory Committee on Building Materials Exports; the Advisory Committee on Plant and Machinery and the Water Regulations Advisory Committee. All three bodies conduct public consultation exercises and conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests. These are not a statutory requirement. These bodies do not carry out any of the other activities specified in the question.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those of the Office of Water Services advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21749]

Mr. Clappison: None.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of Water Services (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21726]

Mr. Clappison: The Office of Water Services national consumer council is a non-statutory advisory body established by the Director General of Water Services. Accounts of the council's activities are published in its annual report, copies of which are in the Library. There is no statutory requirement on the council to publish or lay any papers.

Advisory Bodies (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the non-elected bodies responsible to his Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21379]

Mr. Gummer: Non-departmental public bodies responsible to my Department for providing advice or services in London are listed below:

£ million

	1996–97		1997–98		1998–99		1999–2000
Body	Budget	Running costs (estimate)	Budget	Running costs (estimate)	Budget	Running costs (estimate)	Budget	Running costs (estimate)
London Docklands Development Corporation[1]	84.7	23.9	97.4	23.7	—	—	—	—
Waltham Forest Housing Action Trust[2]	31.1	3.9	32.4	2.8	20 rent[2]	2.2	18.5 rent[2]	2.1
Tower Hamlets Housing Action Trust[2]	12.5	2.8	13	3	10 rent[2]	3.1	10 rent[2]	3
Stonebridge Housing Action Trust[2]	9.5	3.6	12.9	2.8	11 rent[2]	3	16 rent[2]	3.3

[1] London Docklands Development Corporation wound up on 31 March 1998.
[2] HAT budgets for 1998–99 to 1999–2000 do not include rental income, which will cannot yet be estimated with accuracy being dependent on progress in redevelopment.

In addition, a number of national bodies responsible to my Department, including the Housing Corporation, the Health and Safety Executive, English Partnerships and the Environment Agency, are responsible for delivery of services in London. Expenditure and running costs associated with these activities are not readily separable from overall national expenditure. I refer the hon. Member to my Department's annual report, published yesterday, copies of which are available in the Library.

Water Charges

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the increase or decrease in real terms since privatisation in water charges. [21493]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Between 1989–90, the year of privatisation, and 1996–97, average domestic water and sewerage charges in England and Wales increased by 35 per cent. in real terms. Since privatisation, the water industry has invested over £18 billion and in 1994 the Director General of Water Services allowed for investment of £24 billion over the 10-year period to 2005.

Prison Ships

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning guidance he has issued which relates to applications in respect of prison ships; what considerations are material to such applications; and if he will make a statement. [21413]

Sir Paul Beresford: Planning guidance is issued to local planning authorities for them to take into account, inter alia, in decisions on planning applications. In the case of the proposed temporary mooring of a prison ship in Portland harbour, Dorset, the local planning authority accepts that planning permission is not required. Proposals by the Prison Service for shore-based facilities to serve the ship, which are Crown development, fall to be dealt with under the procedures set out in DOE Circular 18/84.

Tyne and Wear Development Corporation

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to extending the life of the Tyne and Wear development corporation; and if he will make a statement. [21420]

Mr. Curry: I refer to my reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury, (Mr. Baldry), then the Under-Secretary of State in this Department, on 22 April 1994 Official Report column 680.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines his Department has issued in respect of decisions by planning inquiries which might bind an incoming Government. [21575]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State has a statutory responsibility to decide any planning case before him taking into account all material considerations, including the inquiry report. Guidance for an incoming Government on this issue does not therefore arise.

Marine Nature Conservation

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the results so far of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee's marine nature conservation review; [21579]

(2) what proportion of the British coast is due to be assessed by the time the Joint Nature Conservation Committee's marine nature conservation review ends in March 1998; and what steps his Department will take to ensure that the rest of the British coast will be assessed for its marine nature conservation importance; [21580]

(3) which marine regions of Great Britain have been assessed for their marine nature conservation importance by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee's nature conservation review. [21581]

Mr. Clappison: The two major review publications—the rationale and methods volume and the first of the regional reports series, MNCR sector 6: inlets in eastern England—are in the Library already. I have arranged for a list of the 160 limited circulation reports also to be placed in the Library.

By March 1998, if work in hand is completed, approximately 60 per cent. of the inshore coastal area of Great Britain will have been described and assessed. After the marine nature conservation review team finishes its work in March 1998, information collected by country nature conservation agencies and others using the review techniques will continue to be added to the MNCR database by the joint nature conservation committee, and will therefore be available to assist in management of marine resources.

Assessments of marine conservation importance have been made or are in draft for the Shetland voes, south-east Scotland and north-east England, marine inlets in eastern England, marine inlets in south-west Britain, Liverpool bay and the Solway Firth and the Scottish lagoons. Assessments for Orkney, Cardigan bay and north Wales and the Scottish sea lochs will also be undertaken.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to respond to the second annual report of the United Kingdom Round Table on Sustainable Development published on 12 March. [21592]

Mr. Clappison: We announced in "This Common Inheritance" annual report 1997 that we would publish a response to this report within three months.

Housing Associations

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if housing associations publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) minutes of meetings, (d) agendas of meetings and (e) registers of members' interests; and in each case whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21685]

Mr. Clappison: Registered social landlord are required by statute to provide a copy of their audited annual accounts to the Housing Corporation which holds them available for inspection. All other requirements are non-statutory. The main ones are:

The tenants guarantee, which requires registered social landlords to keep their tenants informed about their housing management performance.

Housing Corporation performance standards, under which associations are required to conduct their affairs in an open and accountable way, disseminating widely information about their housing provision and activities.

The National Housing Federation's code of governance, which requires board members to declare conflicts of interest and registered social landlords to maintain records of interests of board members and senior staff and to make them available for public inspection.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the statutory basis of housing associations; and if they (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21768]

Mr. Clappison: Registered social landlords are independent non-profit making bodies, of which two-thirds are charities. There is no statutory requirement to admit members of the public to board or committee meetings, nor is there a statutory requirement to hold open meetings for the public.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if housing associations are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [21765]

Mr. Clappison: Registered social landlords are not subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, the Audit Commission, or the National Audit Office. However, the Housing Corporation, which has a statutory responsibility to regulate all registered social landlords is subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner and scrutiny by the National Audit Office. Furthermore, under powers granted in the Housing Act 1996, the Audit Commission may undertake value for money studies for, and provide advice on audit matters to, the Housing Corporation.

The corporation's statutory duties include the requirement to publish information about the performance of registered social landlords in the form of performance indicators.

There are no statutory provisions for open government which apply to registered social landlords.

Registered social landlords are eligible to apply for charter mark awards, and last year nine received awards.

"Environment News"

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for copies of his Department's newsletter, "Environment News", to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. [21597]

Mr. Clappison: The latest copy of "Windoe", the Departmental newsletter and successor to "Environment World", has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent on the current energy conservation advertising campaign; how many calls have been received by the contact number; and what is the average cost per call to date. [21786]

Mr. Clappison: I will write to the hon. Member.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Secretariat

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what briefings have been requested by his Department from the Irish side of the Anglo-Irish Secretariat since 1 January 1990. [17701]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: This information is not available. It is, however, open to both sides of the secretariat to seek or offer briefings on subjects relevant to the operation of the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which Minister in his Department is responsible for the oversight of fair employment legislation and personnel matters. [20405]

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 20 March 1997]: Baroness Denton, by virtue of her responsibility for the Department of Economic Development, has ministerial responsibility for the fair employment legislation in Northern Ireland. My right hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) is the Minister responsible for the Department of Finance and Personnel and hence for the general management and control of the Northern Ireland civil service. In that capacity he has a responsibility to oversee how the Northern Ireland civil service, as an employer, complies with good personnel practice including the relevant provisions of fair employment legislation.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case under a statutory requirement. [21433]

Mr. Moss: The information is as follows:

[1] On a voluntary basis.

[2] A statutory requirement.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the pubic to all board committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21442]

Sir John Wheeler: I will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement; [21721]

(2) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary; [21762]

(3) if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21744]

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21761]

Mr. Moss: The information is as follows:

Sectarian Harassment

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when (a) he and (b) the Under-Secretary first learned that a sum of money had been paid to a civil servant formerly in her private office for sectarian harassment; and if he had to approve the payment. [20402]

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 20 March 1997]: I was not required to approve this payment, but I was advised of the key elements of the proposed settlement, and agreed that the case should be settled in January 1997. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State was advised at the end of December 1996 of the key elements of the proposed settlement.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Hayes inquiry into allegations of sectarian harassment in the office of the Economy Minister will be in public. [20403]

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 17 March 1997]: No. Dr. Hayes has been invited to undertake a review, not a public inquiry. The nature of the personnel issues to be examined by Dr. Hayes are unsuitable for public hearings.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the report of the Hayes inquiry will be published in full. [20404]

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 20 March 1997]: Yes, subject to such matters as may derive from security and personal confidentiality considerations.

Safari Park

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money his Department has made available to the Ulster Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals for the purchase of a safari park in County Antrim; and if he will make a statement. [21790]

Mr. Ancram: I will write to the hon. and learned Gentleman.

Public Appointments

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 721, if he will make it his policy to keep and make available records of the religious breakdown of those public appointments made on the proposal of the Irish side of the Anglo-Irish secretariat at Maryfield; and for what reasons they are not currently made available. [21791]

Sir John Wheeler: I will write to the hon. and learned Gentleman.

Orders in Council

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the Orders in Council made in 1995 and 1996, indicating which were taken (a) on the Floor of the House and (b) in Standing Committees on Delegated Legislation, giving in the latter case the names of the hon. Members from Northern Ireland who were nominated to each Committee. [21792]

Sir John Wheeler: I will write to the hon. and learned Gentleman.

Departmental Private Offices

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff and what grades are in the private offices of (i) the Northern Ireland Office and (ii) each of the departmental private offices. [21794]

Sir John Wheeler: I will write to the hon. and learned Gentleman.

Government Legislation

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on present Government policy in relation to the inclusion of Northern Ireland in the extent of appropriate Bills; and what changes he has made to this policy since he became Secretary of State. [21793]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I will write to the hon. and learned Gentleman.

Personnel Documents

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the powers of the inquiry set up to investigate the improper copying of restricted Department of Agriculture personnel documents to the media; and if civil servants will be obliged to answer questions about the matter. [21795]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I will write to the hon. and learned Gentleman.

Citizens Charter

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list those national citizens charters which (a) provide complaints procedures in line with recommendations of the complaints task force and (b) provide financial compensation for users when particular standards have not been met; and if he will publish for each the figures for compensation paid out in each financial year since the charter was implemented; [21796]

(2) how many citizens charters adopted by national public services (a) have their performance indicators validated and verified by an external body and (b) specify enforceable rights for particular standards of service; and if he will identify those services under (a) and (b); [21803]

(3) if he will list all national citizens charters, indicating which involved consumer consultation in (a) the setting of their performance standards and (b) their preparation; [21801]

(4) how many of the national citizens charters are available (a) in an appropriate form for the visually impaired and (b) in two or more languages other than English; and if he will identify those charters under (a) and (b). [21815]

Sir John Wheeler: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Social Fund

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the Northern Ireland social fund discretionary budget will be for 1997–98. [21806]

Mr. Moss: I am pleased to announce that the social fund gross discretionary budget for 1997–98 will be £40.34 million. £9.76 million will be allocated to grants; £30.48 million to loans and £0.1 million will be held as a contingency reserve. The new allocations represent an increase of £3.63 million over the gross budget set at April 1996.

This increase in the social fund budget will ensure that more people receive help and that the fund continues to play an important role in targeting resources to those most in need. Details of the individual district budget allocations; together with a note explaining the basis on which they have been made, have been placed in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Departmental Budget

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of his annual departmental budget was spent in Wales in each of the last five years; and how much that proportion was in (a) 1997 prices and (b) cash terms for each year. [20705]

Mr. Howard: The available information is contained in the table. Other Home Office expenditure benefiting Wales, for example, crime prevention publicity campaigns and research, cannot be broken down beyond the global spend for England and Wales. In addition, for 1992–93, total Home Office expenditure cannot be broken down at all between England and Wales.

Year	Home Office expenditure in Wales (£000's)	Percentage of total Home office expenditure	Home Office expenditure in Wales (at 1997 prices)
1992–93	n/a	n/a	n/a
1993–94	203,929	3.4	218,114
1994–95	214,039	3.4	224,946
1995–96	230,813	3.6	236,583
1996–97[1]	243,215	3.7	243,215

[1] Estimated.

Citizens Charters

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will develop and implement a citizens charter for (a) the Immigration and Nationality Service and (b) the Prison Service. [21781]

Mr. Howard: I will write to the hon. Member.

Prison Building

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department is he will list (a) the prison building projects for which contracts have been signed, (b) the estimated date of completion and (c) their planned capacity once opened. [21784]

Miss Widdecombe: I will write to the hon. Member.

Prison Ship

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the countries with which his Department competed to purchase the prison ship Weare. [21785]

Miss Widdecombe: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about progress with the planning application for the prison ship in Portland; and what permissions have been granted for its continued mooring there. [21412]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 21 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the planning application for the prison ship in Portland.

Portland Port Limited has leased to the Prison Service a temporary berth until a decision is reached by the Secretary of State for the Environment on the notice of proposed development. A meeting to consider the issues has been arranged by the Department of Environment for 20 March.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what expenses have been incurred preparing shore facilities in Dorset for the prison ship Weare; when such expenditure was first authorised; and when such expenditure first began to be incurred. [21576]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Hugh Taylor to Mr. George Howarth, dated 21 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your question about expenses incurred preparing shore facilities in Dorset for the prison ship.

I will write to you when the information is available.

Police Authorities (Expenditure)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the gross public spending on police authorities for each year since 1990–91, in 1996–97 prices. [21812]

Mr. Maclean: I will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the statutory basis of police authorities and if they (a) admit members of the public to board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and whether in each case this is under statutory requirement. [21769]

Mr Maclean: Police authorities, free-standing of local government, were established by provisions in the Police and Magistrates Courts Act 1994, now consolidated in the Police Act 1996. They, their committees and sub-committees, continue to be bound by provisions in the Local Government Act 1972, as amended, requiring meetings to be open to the public.

Reginald Dudley and Robert Maynard

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning (a) the safety of the conviction and (b) the case for parole, of Reginald Dudley and Robert Maynard; and if he will make a statement. [21378]

Mr. Kirkhope: Representations about the cases of Reginald Dudley and Robert Maynard have been received from a variety of sources. The latest representations that they were wrongfully convicted, and that they should be granted parole stem from an article in The Guardian alleging that a key prosecution witness wished to withdraw his evidence. These are being considered.

Both cases have been considered at the appropriate times by the Parole Board; neither has yet been recommended for release on life licence.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Data Protection Registrar on (a) the use by the Security Services of the exemptions in section 28 of the Data Protection Act 1984 and (b) the use by the police of the exemptions in section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984; and if he will make a statement. [21416]

Mr. Howard: I have had no such discussions.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of the implementation of the data protection directive, EC/95/46, on the problems associated with enforced subject access; and if he will make a statement. [21417]

Mr. Sackville: I will write to the hon. Member.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21445]

Mr. Howard: The following executive non-departmental public bodies have a statutory base:

Alcohol Education and Research Council

Commission for Racial Equality

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Data Protection Registrar

Gaming Board for Great Britain

Horserace Betting Levy Board

Horserace Totalisator Board

Parole Board

Police Complaints Authority.

None of the NDPBs for which I am responsible admits members of the public to all board or committee meetings either under a statutory requirement or voluntarily.

The Commission for Racial Equality holds conferences and seminars on race relations issues, but none of the NDPBs for which I am responsible is under a statutory requirement to hold open meetings.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21719]

Mr. Howard: The following advisory non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by my Department:

(a) are on a statutory basis

Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs

Animal Procedures Committee

Firearms Consultative Committee

Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England

Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales

Poisons Board

Police Negotiating Board.

(b) publish their advice to Government

Animal Procedures Committee

Firearms Consultative Committee[1]

Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England[1]

Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales[1].

(c) publish an annual report and lay it before Parliament

Animal Procedures Committee[1]

Firearms Consultative Committee[1]

Metropolitan Police Committee.

[1] In these cases, the bodies concerned meet a statutory requirement. In other cases, the bodies act voluntarily.

In my reply of 14 March 1996 at column 711, I indicated that the Poisons Board and the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs published their advice to Government. I regret that was incorrect.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if police authorities are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [21767]

Mr. Maclean: Police authorities established under the provisions of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994 now incorporated in the Police Act 1996 are not open to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, but by the Commissioner for Local Administration. Similarly, they are subject to scrutiny by the Audit Commission, not the National Audit Office. Also, the Audit Commission's citizens charter performance indicators include a range of indicators that apply to the police service, and police authorities are required to publish these annually. As regards statutory provision for open government, police authorities are bound by rules similar to those that apply for local government.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21741]

Mr. Howard: The Government are required to consult the following advisory non-departmental public bodies before relevant legislative proposals:

Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs;
Animal Procedures Committee;
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England;
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales;
Poisons Board.

In addition, the Government's response to advice supplied by the following bodies must be published:

Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England;
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21696]

Mr. Howard: The following advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department:

(a) hold public meeting
Metropolitan Police Committee
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales.
(b) conduct public consultation exercises
Animal Procedures Committee
Firearms Consultative Committee
Metropolitan Police Committee
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales.
(c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interest
Animal Procedures Committee
Crime Prevention Agency
Firearms Consultative Committee
Metropolitan Police Committee.

The activities listed are undertaken voluntarily by the bodies concerned.

None of the advisory non-departmental public bodies which my Department sponsors publishes a register of members' interests, agendas for meetings or minutes of meetings.

Crime (London)

Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the crime rate in each of the London boroughs; and if he will publish this in the Official Report giving details of each category of reported crime. [21491]

Mr. Maclean: I will write to the hon. Member.

Advisory Bodies (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the non-elected bodies responsible to his Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21381]

Mr. Howard: Available information on the bodies requested is given in the table:

£000

	Budgeted expenditure		Estimated running costs
	1996–97	1997–98	1996–97	1997–98
Metropolitan Police	1,713,494	1,738,884	1,663,829	1,705,000
Metropolitan Police Committee	399	405	399	405
Inner London Probation Service	46,144	45,555	40,619	40,042
North-east London Probation Service	10,693	10,348	9,636	9,521
South-east London Probation Service	7,003	6,910	6,403	6,326
South-west London Probation Service	5,733	5,820	4,894	4,797
Middlesex Probation Service	19,174	18,972	17,421	17,133

Budgets for subsequent years are not yet determined.

WPC Yvonne Fletcher

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with (a) Lieutenant Colonel George Styles and (b) Dr. Hugh Thomas, former chief consultant surgeon to the British Army in Northern Ireland, and (c) Professor Bernard Knight, on the circumstances of the murder of WPC Yvonne Fletcher. [21600]

Mr. Howard: None. The investigation of crime is a matter for the police.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the actions taken by (a) his Department and (b) the Metropolitan police in respect of the contents of the Channel 4 film, "Murder in St. James", broadcast in April 1996 concerning the murder of WPC Yvonne Fletcher. [21599]

Mr. Howard: My officials viewed the programme and had various consultations about its contents. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State responded to the allegations made in it in the Adjournment debate initiated by the hon. Member on 8 May 1996, and he and I have answered various questions asked by the hon. Member and letters from other hon. Members and members of the public. The metropolitan police reviewed the contents of the programme as part of their continuing investigation into the murder of WPC Yvonne Fletcher. They remain satisfied with the findings of the inquest that the shot that killed her was fired from the Libyan People's Bureau.

Albanian Nationals

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions he has given to the immigration authorities for discretionary treatment of Albanian nationals currently present in the United Kingdom; what estimate he has made of the number of Albanian nationals who are currently in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [21772]

Mr. Kirkhope: We are urgently reviewing the situation in Albania, in consultation with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Pending the outcome of this review, instructions have been given that action on all outstanding Albanian asylum claims should be frozen and that any removal directions for Albanians to Albania should be suspended.

Statistics on the number of Albanians currently present in the United Kingdom are not available.

Prison Service (Expenditure)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total expenditure on the Prison Service in each of the last five years; what is projected expenditure for the next three years; and if he will make a statement. [21584]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 21 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent question about total expenditure on the Prison Service in each of the last five years and projects expenditure for the next three years.

Expenditure for the years 1991–92 to 1995–96 was as follows:

1991–92 £1,462.1 million
1991–93 £1,470.3 million
1993–94 £1,508.8 million
1994–95 £1,597.9 million
1995–96 £1,666.9 million.

For the current and the next three years the projected expenditure is:

1996–97 £1,642.3 million (voted provision)
1997–98 £1,756.8 million
1998–99 £1,707.3 million
1999–00 £1,829.3 million.

Prison Population

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage increase in the prison population for each of the last 60 months for which figures are available; what increases he estimates will take place in each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [21585]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 21 March 1997:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent question about the prison population.

I will write to you later.

Crime (Conviction Rates)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) number of convictions, (b) conviction rate and (c) clear-up rate, for each category of crime, in each region, for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [21586]

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of convictions and the conviction rate for the years 1991, 1993 and 1995—latest available—is given in tables A, B and C. The provision of data for other years would involve disproportionate cost.

Information on clear-up rates for 1995 and 1996 is given in tables D and E. Figures for earlier years are published annually in chapter 9 of "Regional Trends"; copies of which are available in the Library.

Table A: Number of offenders convicted and conviction rate[1] for indictable offences by offence group and region 1991

Crime (Sentences) Bill

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the additional expenditure required by the Crime (Sentences) Bill has been included in his Department's projected spending; what are the figures per year; and if he will make a statement. [21591]

Mr. Howard: The public expenditure survey 1996 produced a baseline settlement for my Department up to the end of the financial year 1999–2000, which is set out in the Home Office Annual Report 1997 published on 20 March (Cm 3608). The only provisions in the Crime (Sentences) Bill which are likely to have a significant financial impact before the end of that survey period are the provisions relating to automatic life sentences for repeat serious sexual or violent offenders and to minimum sentences for drug traffickers. The cost of implementing these provisions can be met from within current Home Office resources.

The White Paper "Protecting the Public", made clear that provisions for honesty in sentencing and minimum sentences for burglars could be implemented in 1999, but that implementation will be dependent on the availability of prison places and securing the necessary provision in subsequent public expenditure survey rounds.

It is not possible to identify the costs to the Prison Service of the additional prisoners likely to be accommodated as a consequence of the implementation of the automatic life sentences and of the minimum sentences for drug traffickers separately from the costs of accommodating other new prisoners in accordance with the prison population projections.

Audio Alarms

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has given to police authorities with regard to their policy on responding to audio alarms; and what steps he has taken to monitor local policies on responding to audio alarms. [21603]

Mr. Maclean: The response to audio alarms and monitoring of that response is an operational matter for the chief police officer of each force to decide.

Police Authorities (Public Information)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if police authorities publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) minutes of meetings, (d) agendas of meetings and (e) registers of members' interests; and in each case whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21686]

Mr. Maclean: Police authorities established under the provisions of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994 now incorporated in the Police Act 1996 are required to publish an annual report on local policing for that year and to copy that report to the Home Secretary. Under the 1996 Act, they are also bound by provisions in the Local Government Act 1972, as amended, which require agendas, minutes of proceedings and accounts to be open to inspection during reasonable hours and also requires members to declare any direct or indirect pecuniary interest in business which is under discussion. Additionally, regulations made under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 require councillor and independent members of police authorities to declare information about their pecuniary interests in a register which is open to public inspection.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is her latest estimate of the number of places for four-year-olds created under phase 1 of the voucher scheme in each of the four pilot areas in (a) the maintained sector, (b) the voluntary sector and (c) the private sector. [21505]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information available in the autumn of 1996 was set out at page 56 of the report on phase 1 of the nursery education voucher scheme, copies of which are in the Library. In the four phase 1 areas as a whole, 346 more children redeemed vouchers in the autumn term 1996 than in the summer term 1996.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those local education authorities which are planning to make less than £1,100 available to providers in the maintained sector, in respect of places for four-year-olds under the national voucher scheme; indicating in each case the expected level of funding per four-year-old. [21550]

Mr. Squire: This information is not yet available.

Class Sizes

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the proportion of children in classes of more than 31 in 1979; and what is the proportion currently for (a) all schools, (b) primary schools and (c) secondary schools. [21504]

Mr. Robin Squire: The available information is shown in the following table.

Percentage of pupils[1] in one teacher classes of 31 or more pupils in maintained primary and secondary schools in England

Position in January each year

	1979	1996
Primary schools	35.3	31.8
Secondary schools	16.0	8.5

[1] Pupils in one teacher classes of size 31 or more pupils expressed as a percentage of all pupils in one teacher classes.

Information for nursery, special and independent schools is not collected centrally.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which of the executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by her Department have a statutory base; if she will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21448]

Mr. Squire: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is the statutory basis of (i) career service companies, (ii) city technology colleges, (iii) further education corporations, (iv) higher education corporations, and (v) training and enterprise councils; and of those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public, showing whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [21766]

(2) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultations exercises,

(c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [21692]

(3) if she will list those of her Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from; [21735]

(4) if (i) career service companies, (ii) city technology colleges, (iii) further education corporations, (iv) higher education corporations, and (v) training and enterprise councils are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter; [21763]

(5) what (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) minutes of meetings, (d) agendas of meetings and (e) registers of member's interests are published by (i) career service companies, (ii) city technology colleges, (iii) further education corporations, (iv) higher education corporations and (v) training and enterprise councils; and in each case whether it is under a statutory requirement; [21728]

(6) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if she will indicate in each instance whether this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [21691]

Mr. Squire: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the gross public spending for each year since 1990–91, in 1996–97 prices on (a) grant-maintained schools, (b) city technology colleges, (c) training and enterprise (d) career service companies. [21811]

Mr. Paice: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of children got their first preference in allocation of secondary school in each local education authority in England in the most recent year for which figures are available. [21313]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 20 March 1997]: Data on the number of parents securing their first choice of school is not collected centrally. However surveys commissioned by the Association of Metropolitan Authorities in 1992 and The Times in 1993 showed that some 90 per cent. of parents gained a place at their first choice of secondary school.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of bills to her Department for the financial year 1995 to 1996 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [21214]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 20 March 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 18 July 1996, Official Report, columns 613–14 which answered part (b) of the above question. An answer to part (a) could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Jobseekers

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if a jobseeker's allowance claimant could be referred to a (i) jobplan workshop, (ii) workwise course, (iii) restart course, (iv) 1-2-1 and (v) jobfinder if he (a) is attending a jobclub, (b) will start a full-time education or training course in the near future and (c) will be starting work in the near future. [21373]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Robert Horne to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 21 March 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to write to you direct to respond to your question about claimants in receipt of Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) and referrals to Jobplan, Workwise and Restart Courses 1-2-1 and Jobfinder caseloading.

It may help if I explain that Jobplan, Workwise and Restart Courses are short programmes which help people compete more successfully for jobs and opportunities by allowing them to establish clear job goals and review their strengths and skills and the way they sell themselves to prospective employers. They are delivered on the Employment Service's (ES) behalf by organisations from the public, private and voluntary sectors.

In the main, jobseekers are referred to Jobplan and Workwise when they have been unemployed for at least 12 months and to Restart Courses when they have been unemployed for two years or more.

1-2-1 and Jobfinder (from April 1997) offer a series of caseload interviews, with an ES adviser, for jobseekers who have been unemployed for one year or two years or more, respectively. Through the interviews ES advisers are able to offer jobseekers concentrated help to encourage more effective job search; develop self-motivation; and help set clear goals for jobseekers to achieve.

Where a jobseeker is attending a Jobclub, they would still be expected to attend Jobfinder caseload interviews. However arrangements would be made so that the jobseeker could continue to attend the Jobclub, in addition to attending a caseload interview. Indeed, the caseload interviews will complement the activity in Jobclub. However, Jobclub members would not normally be directed to attend 1-2-1, Jobplan, Workwise or a Restart Course, whilst still actively and regularly attending the Jobclub.

If a jobseeker is due to start full-time education, a training course or a job in the near future, it is at the discretion of ES advisers as to whether they refer the individual to any of these programmes. However, where there is a firm offer (usually in writing) and the course or job is due to start shortly, we would not normally expect the jobseeker to be referred to a programme. However, if they do not subsequently take up the course or job they will in most cases be referred to the relevant programme.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which groups of claimants are given priority access to jobclubs and jobsearch plus. [21374]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Robert Horne to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 21 March 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to write to you direct to respond to your question about priority access to Jobclubs and Jobsearch Plus.

To be eligible to join these programmes jobseekers will normally have been registered unemployed for 26 weeks for Jobclub and 13 weeks for Jobsearch Plus. There are however a number of exemptions to the eligibility criteria which allow people in special groups to join the programmes immediately they become unemployed. These include people with disabilities, people with literacy or numeracy difficulties, labour market returners, people needing basic training in English (and Welsh/Gaelic), jobseekers affected by large scale redundancies, ex-offenders and people who have served in HM Forces.

Some jobseekers will have priority status for entry into the two programmes. These include unemployed people with disabilities and 18 to 24 year olds who have been unemployed for a year or more who have never worked since leaving full time education. In addition people who have been directed to and have completed a Jobplan, Workwise or Restart course also enjoy priority consideration.

I hope this is helpful.

School Budgets

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her letter of 17 March on school budget deficits, if she will list the schools running a budget deficit indicating in each case the amount. [21410]

Mr. Robin Squire: I regret that the effort and cost entailed in compiling such a list would be disproportionate.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her letter of 17 March on school budget deficits, what estimate she has made of the number of local education authorities which plan to take back delegated budgets from schools in deficit. [21411]

Mr. Squire: My right hon. Friend has made no such estimate.

Advisory Bodies (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the non-elected bodies responsible to her Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21387]

Mr. Paice: The information available is given in the following table.

Non-elected bodies	Overall budget 1996–97 (£)	Running costs 1996–97 (£)
Training and Enterprise Councils:
West London TEC	20,658,317	1,740,682

TEC and Careers Service total budget and running costs for 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 have not yet been determined.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what are the criteria for deciding whether BSE-infected and suspected BSE-infected bovine offal is (a) disposed of in landfill sites and (b) incinerated; [20219]

(2) if BSE-infected or suspected BSE-infected bovine offal has been dumped in landfill sites in Warrington; [20220]

(3) if it is Government policy to continue to dump BSE-infected offal in landfill sites. [20221]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 March 1997]: The Animal By-Products Order 1992, which implements EC animal waste directive 90/667 in Great Britain, requires animal waste to be rendered, incinerated or buried.

There is no legal requirement for the carcases of cattle slaughtered as affected with, or suspected of being infected with, BSE to be destroyed specifically by incineration. However, it has been the Ministry's practice to use incineration whenever feasible. No BSE suspects have been disposed of other than by incineration since 1995.

In the case of specified bovine material removed on a precautionary basis from non-BSE suspects, the SBM order of 1996, as amended, requires that it be processed in dedicated rendering lines or incinerated. Where the SBM is rendered, the order provides for the resultant meat and bone meal to be incinerated, disposed of at a landfill site for which there exists a current waste management licence granted under section 35 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, or disposal as specified by the Minister in the plant's approval. At present, however, SBM removed from cattle aged under 30 months and sheep and goats is rendered with over-30-months scheme material and is, therefore, all destined for destruction.

The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, which advises Ministers on BSE, has considered the current and proposed methods of dealing with waste material from the slaughter of cattle and concluded that these are safe. A press release reporting its conclusions was issued by MAFF on 7 June 1996 and a copy is available in the Library of the House.

The Department's records indicate that BSE suspect cattle were disposed of by landfill in Warrington during 1990 and 1991. The sites were licensed under part I of the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

The Department's records also indicate that approximately 15 tonnes of unrendered SBM were consigned, contrary to SBM rules, to a landfill site in Warrington just prior to Christmas 1995. The matter was drawn to the attention of Tameside metropolitan borough council, as the appropriate local authority with enforcement responsibility under the order. Whilst the incident is regrettable, investigation revealed that the site is a "total containment site" and of the highest standard. In the unlikely event that the SBM contained any infectivity, it is thought that the resultant risk should be very small.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) for what reasons the Rowley landfill site was selected for the burial of BSE-infected cows; [20419]

(2) how many BSE-infected cows are buried at the Rowley landfill site near Burnley. [20420]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 March 1997]: In the early years of the BSE epidemic, incineration capacity was insufficient to deal with all the cattle involved. Therefore, in July 1988 this Department approached Lancashire county council seeking licensed landfill facilities for disposal of BSE suspect cattle. At that time, the county council was responsible as a waste disposal authority for the granting and supervision of licences under part I of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Following an assessment by the authority of the landfill sites then in its ownership, Rowley was identified by the authority as suitable for the disposal of waste of this kind.

The Ministry's records, cross checked with those available to the Environment Agency, indicate that the carcases of just over 30 cattle affected, or suspected of being affected with, BSE—their heads having been removed for incineration—were disposed of at the Rowley landfill site.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he intends to remove the remains of the cattle buried at Rowley for disposal by incineration; [20417]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure the BSE-infected cows buried at Rowley do not contaminate the water supply. [20418]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 March 1997]: In May last year a sub-group of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, which advises Ministers on BSE, considered the issue of BSE and the environment, including the question of disposal to landfill sites. It considered that, although the spongiform encephalopathy agent was not yet fully characterised, there was good evidence to believe that individual molecules were not infectious and that infectivity was associated with macro molecular agglomerations, indeed possibly with tissue fragments, albeit small ones. On this basis, it concluded

"it was unlikely that leachate from landfill sites would present a significant risk and there was certainly no justification for taking heroic measures to excavate sites, even those which had previously been used for material such as BSE-confirmed cattle".

The Environment Agency as the regulatory body responsible for supervising the operation of landfill sites, is in possession of SEAC's advice. The agency monitors groundwater quality in the vicinity of licensed landfill sites as a check for any leachate contamination.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which landfill sites in the United Kingdom were used for the disposal of cattle reported as having BSE. [18134]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 March 1997]: I will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations his Department has received from the Environment Agency in respect of the disposal of BSE-infected carcases to landfill sites; and if he will make a statement; [20471]

(2) if he will instigate an inquiry into the safety of all sites where BSE-infected carcases have been disposed of during the past eight years; and if he will make a statement. [20472]

Mrs. Browning: Prior to the formation of the Environment Agency in April 1996, regulatory responsibility for the operation of landfill sites rested with waste regulation authorities. The Environment Agency inherited the responsibility for the safe regulation of landfill sites in England and Wales under part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, and for this purpose monitors ground water quality in the vicinity of licensed landfill sites as a check for any leachate contamination.

This Department is in regular contact with the Environment Agency in view of its responsibility for supervising the waste management licensing system in respect of landfill sites.

Pig Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the two consignments of pigs exported on 19 February 1996 via the port of Hull were accompanied by the approved journey plans and export health certificates required under EU and United Kingdom law. [20617]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 March 1997:]: Without further details of the consignments to which the hon. Member refers, it is not possible to give an answer.

Slaughterhouses

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all prosecutions of abattoirs for breaches of hygiene legislation that have (a) taken place and (b) succeeded, in each year since 1985. [21679]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In Great Britain, local authorities were responsible for the enforcement of hygiene regulations in abattoirs until 1 April 1995, when responsibility was transferred to the newly established Meat Hygiene Service. Information on any prosecutions of abattoirs which may have been brought between 1985 and 1 April 1995 is not held centrally. Since 1 April 1995, whilst there have been several prosecutions on BSE-related matters, there have, to date, been no prosecutions of abattoirs for failure to comply with the hygiene requirements of the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995, as amended.

In Northern Ireland, no prosecutions have been brought against operators of abattoirs for failure to comply with the hygiene requirements of the relevant regulations in the period 1985 to date.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all those persons who are permitted to make unannounced visits to abattoirs in the United Kingdom to ensure that health and hygiene standards are upheld. [18866]

Mrs. Browing: I will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many slaughterhouses are currently operating in the United Kingdom; of those how many do not have EU approval but are operating under a United Kingdom Government derogation; and how many were operating in April 1995 and of those how many were operating under a United Kingdom derogation. [20517]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 March 1997]: For slaughterhouses licensed in Great Britain under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 and in Northern Ireland under the Agricultural Produce (Meat Regulation and Pig Industry) Act (Northern Ireland) 1962, the available information is as follows:

Type of approval	End March 1995	1 March 1997
Export approved	133	244
National market only
Permanently derogated low throughput[1]	211	205
Temporarily derogated low throughput[2]		7
Temporarily derogated full throughput[2]	174	[3]26
Total	518	482

Information on the position in other member states is not available.
[1] Premises which meet the EC structural requirements for low throughput plants.
[2] Premises subject to a temporary derogation from structural requirements.
[3] Of which 9 licences revoked for failure to comply with temporary derogation but operating under appeal provisions.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many abattoirs are currently (a) EC approved and (b) non-approved but operating with a derogation. [20728]

Mrs. Browning: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) today.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the derogations to continue slaughtering animals expire for each of the non-EC approved abattoirs. [20758]

Mrs. Browning: Under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 as amended, non EC export approved premises (permanently derogated low throughput) are required to meet less onerous structural requirements than those with EC export approval (full throughput).

At 1 March 1997, the number of slaughterhouses and cutting premises in England subject to a temporary derogation was as follows:

Licensed premises[1]	Full throughput		Low throughput
	Slaughterhouse	Cutting premises	Slaughterhouse	Cutting premises
Total numbers by type	202	226	180	126
Of which subject to temporary derogation	[2]22	[3]13	7	[4]7

[1] Some of these are combined premises. For combined slaughterhouse/cutting premises the numbers are included under slaughterhouse, for combined cutting premises/cold stores the numbers are included under cutting premises.
[2] Including one premises with an extension of time in principle to end December 1997 (subject to review in September 1997) and one request for a further extension of time under consideration; nine licences revoked for failure to comply with temporary derogations operating under appeal provisions.
[3] Including one premises with an extension of time to end December 1997; three licences revoked for failure to comply with temporary derogations operating under appeal provisions.
[4] Including one licence revoked for failure to comply with temporary derogation operating.

Of those temporary derogations not subject to an extension of time or where licences have not yet been revoked, approximately half the premises could complete the necessary work to comply with the structural requirements of the Regulations within the next four to six weeks. Licence revocation action will be taken against those who do not. For the remainder, urgent action is in hand to revoke the premises licences with the minimum of further delay.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many abattoirs in each member state of the European Union are (a) EC approved and (b) non-approved but operating under derogations. [20833]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 March 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) today.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the abattoirs and cutting plants which have derogations will be required to comply fully with EC requirements. [20832]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 March 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) unsuccessful and (b) successful prosecutions were brought against operators of abattoirs and cutting plants for infringements of the relevant hygiene regulations in the period 1979 to 1995. [20956]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 March 1997]: In Great Britain, local authorities were responsible for the enforcement of hygiene regulations in abattoirs and cutting plants until 1 April 1995, when responsibility was transferred to the newly established Meat Hygiene Service. Information on prosecutions which may have been brought between 1979 and 1995 is not held centrally.

In Northern Ireland, no prosecutions were brought against operators of abattoirs or cutting plants for infringements of the relevant hygiene regulations in this period.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the extent to which derogations granted to abattoirs for structural shortcomings impinge on hygiene requirements. [20830]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 March 1997]: For premises operating under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995, detailed requirements for structure are laid down in schedules 1 to 6 of the regulations and, for hygiene, in schedules 7 to 11 and 13 to 15. Irrespective of any structural requirements, fresh meat produced in premises subject to derogations has to satisfy the hygiene requirements laid down.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the (a) statutory instruments, (b) circulars and (c) other official guidance from Ministers to local authorities between 1979 and 1995 concerning the duties and responsibilities of environmental health officers towards abattoirs and cutting plants. [20831]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 March 1997]: I will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Meat Hygiene

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he was notified about the data relating to E. coli contamination arising from poor animal hygiene at abattoirs, contained in the report prepared by Mr. Swann for the Meat Hygiene Service. [20038]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 13 March 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 20 March 1997, Official Report, column 715. [19571]

Sir Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department collates data on the professional qualifications of meat hygiene inspectors. [20734]

Mrs. Browning: The Department does not hold any data on the professional qualifications of meat inspectors.

Meat hygiene inspectors are employed by the Meat Hygiene Service and I have asked the chief executive to reply to your question direct.

Sir Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the veterinarians who carried out the assessment of standards in slaughterhouses, commissioned by the Meat Hygiene Service, agreed with Mr. Bill Swann's summary of their findings. [20738]

Mrs. Browning: The assessment of standards you refer to was part of the hygiene advice team exercise carried out by the Meat Hygiene Service. I have asked the chief executive to reply to you direct.

Sir Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many of the employees of the general secretary of the Association of Meat Inspectors have been offered a contract by the Meat Hygiene Service; [20733]

(2) when Mr. Bill Swann applied for the position as head of operations of the Meat Hygiene Service; [20737]

(3) when the general secretary of the Association of Meat Inspectors tendered for a meat hygiene service contract; and what was the outcome. [20739]

Mrs. Browning: Staffing matters are the responsibility of the Meat Hygiene Service and I have asked the chief executive to reply to you direct.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Sir Colin Shepherd, dated 21 March 1997:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) your Parliamentary Questions to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries enquiring a) whether details of the professional qualifications of Meat Hygiene Inspectors (MHIs) are collated; b) whether the veterinary surgeons who carried out an assessment of standards in slaughterhouses agree with Bill Swann's findings; c) about the number of the employees of the General Secretary of the Association of Meat Inspectors (AMI) who have been offered a contract by the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS); d) when Bill Swann applied for the position of Head of Operations, and e) when the General Secretary of the AMI tendered for an MHS contract and what was the outcome, have been passed to me for reply.

[20734] [20738] [20733] [20737] [20739]

To take each of your questions in turn:

a) All MHIs must be qualified by gaining, through examination, in the Certificate in Meat Inspection approved by the Royal Society of Health for England and Wales and the Royal Environmental Health Institute of Scotland for Scotland. Copies of the appropriate Certificates in Meat Inspection are held on the individual's personnel files by the MHS.

b) The Hygiene Advice Teams (HAT) completed a detailed analysis of the operational hygiene and animal welfare standards at all licensed slaughterhouses (approximately 615 plants). As part of this exercise, Bill Swann undertook many visits (although in a limited area of the country) and wrote HAT reports on a number of plants. These reports were specific to the plants concerned and the recommendations therein may or may not have agreed with recommendations in reports on other plants. An editorial committee was set up to produce a final report of the HAT exercise. This included a number of veterinarians who had been heavily involved in the exercise. Bill Swann provided a first draft summary of the overall findings of the HAT exercise in respect of red meat plants. The final report was intended to give a summary of the important issues relating to hygiene operation and animal welfare, an indication of the level of industry compliance overall and to include the most important recommendations made by the HAT teams. Mr. Swann's draft was rejected by his colleagues as it gave little indication of the level of compliance, repeated a great deal of material covered by the MHS Operations Manual and provided a long list of deficiencies, many of which only related to a small number of plants.

c) The MHS is aware of 26 employees who worked for the Meat Inspection Agency run by the General Secretary of the AMI who have been offered a contract by the MHS.

d) Bill Swann applied for the position of MHS Head of Operations in September 1995.

e) The MHS is staffed mainly by Meat Hygiene Inspectors who transferred to the agency from their local authority employers under TUPE arrangements on 1 April 1995. Operating without the constraints of local authority boundaries the MHS has the opportunity to deploy its permanently employed staff to the best effect. Where employed staff are not available MHS Regional Managers have the option of contracting staff through a small number of Agencies, one of which includes the General Secretary of the AMI, Mr Comrie.

An invitation to tender for the provision of meat inspection services was issued in December 1994 and the information received was made available to the MHS's Regional Managers to assist in their task of ensuring that meat inspection and relief cover would be available at all licensed establishments at Agency launch via the most cost effective means.

Subsequent to the launch of the MHS, Mr Comrie has provided some relief meat inspection cover to the MHS.

Sir Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from the vice-president of the Association of Meat Inspectors regarding hygiene standards in abattoirs. [20735]

Mrs. Browning: I held a meeting on 19 March with representatives of the Association of Meat Inspectors. Two of the vice presidents of the association have disassociated themselves from the sentiments expressed in recent correspondence from the General Secretary of the association, and confirmed their total support for the work of the Meat Hygiene Service in driving up standards in abattoirs.

BSE-infected Material (Land Burial)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations cover the land burial of (a) BSE-infected carcases and (b) BSE-infected rendered meat and bonemeal, or material suspected to the BSE-infected; what inspections measures are in place to ensure compliance with the regulations; and if he will make a statement. [20770]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The Animal By-Products Order 1992 (SI 1992/3303), which implements the EC animal waste directive 90/667 in Great Britain, requires animal waster to be rendered, incinerated or buried. It has been the Ministry's practice to use incineration whenever feasible for the disposal of cattle displaying clinical signs suggestive of BSE.

The landfilling of controlled waste is subject to the waste management licensing provisions of part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994. The Environment Agency is responsible for the administration and enforcement of the licensing system. Amongst other matters, licences issued by the Environment Agency specify the types and quantities of waste which may be disposed of in each site. Landfill site operators are also subject to the duty of care provisions in Section 34 of the 1990 Act and the Environmental Protection (Duty of Care) Regulations 1991.

The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee has considered the current and proposed methods of dealing with waste material from the slaughter of cattle and concluded that these are safe. A news release reporting its conclusions was issued by MAFF on 7 June 1996 and a copy is available in the Library of the House.

of the relevant regulations in the period 1985 to date.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement; [21687]

(2) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [21684]

(3) if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from; [21730]

(4) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21449]

Mr. Boswell: I will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Advisory Bodies (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the non-elected bodies responsible to his Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21375]

Mr. Boswell: I will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Avoparcin

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 379, regarding avoparcin's use as a feed antibiotic, if he will list by livestock species all dates prior to 1 April on which the licence for avoparcin's use as a feed antibiotic has been (a) revoked and (b) reinstated since it was first licensed in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [21511]

Mrs. Browning: No licence for the use of avoparcin in animal feedingstuffs has been revoked prior to 1 April 1997.

Cattle Slaughter

Mr. Benton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the stockpiling of brown granular dust from remains of slaughtered cattle in Bootle; what assessment he has made of (a) the dangers to the public health posed by this substance and (b) the conditions of its storage; and if he will make a statement. [21419]

Mrs. Browning: Meat and bone meal arising from the rendering of cattle carcases under the over-30-months scheme is being stored at five sites in England pending destruction by the best practicable environmental option. Only healthy cattle can be purchased under the scheme and EC regulation 716/96, under which the scheme operates, expressly prohibits the purchase of cattle affected with or suspected of being affected with BSE. These are destroyed under separate arrangements.

The Government are actively pursuing a number of options for the disposal of meat and bone meal arising from the OTMS. The Intervention Board recently agreed a contract with a high temperature incineration company, Rechem, to burn MBM at its Fawley plant, and has an exercise under way for further incineration facilities from which additional MBM disposal capacity is expected to emerge. Also combustion trials have been carried out at PowerGen's test facilities at Ratcliffe on Soar, Nottinghamshire, and at National Power's test facilities at Didcot, Oxfordshire, to establish the feasibility of burning MBM in power stations. These trials have been monitored by the Environment Agency and the results will be placed on the public register. The test results are being fully evaluated, and full weight will be given to the protection of human health and of the environment before any decisions are reached.

The independent Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, which advises Ministers on BSE, has concluded that there was no epidemiological evidence to suggest that the handling of MBM presented a risk to any of those engaged in the related trades. The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens has also considered the health risks associated with the handling of MBM and has issued generic guidance for all occupational groups, including those involved in storage. The Intervention Board executive agency, which has executive responsibility for the day to day running of the scheme, has drawn the guidelines to the attention of storekeepers storing MBM.

The storage of this material as waste is subject to the requirements of part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994, as amended. With these requirements in view, IBEA ensures that all potential storage sites meet rigorous technical criteria before they are considered suitable for dry storage and are well managed to keep them free of rodents, insect infestation or excessive odour. Where odour problems have arisen, the IBEA has engaged the services of leading experts in odour suppression technology for advice.

Tuberculosis

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the results of his inquiry into the possible relationship between TB in badgers and TB in cattle. [21508]

Mrs. Browning: I expect the results to be published later this year.

Meat Hygiene Service (Disciplinary Action)

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many people employed or under contract with the national Meat Hygiene Service as (a) official veterinary surgeons, (b) meat inspectors and (c) other officers have been disciplined for failure to enforce hygiene legislation, for each year from 1995; [21678]

(2) what length of training has been required for (a) official veterinary surgeons, (b) meat inspectors and (c) other posts that are currently within or under contract with the national Meat Hygiene Service in each year since 1985. [21680]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The subjects of these questions are the responsibility of the Meat Hygiene Service and I have asked the chief executive to reply to you direct.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Dr. Gavin Strang, dated 21 March 1997:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) your Parliamentary Questions to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries enquiring how many people employed or under contract with the National Meat Hygiene Service as (a) Official Veterinary Surgeons, (b) meat inspectors and (c) other officers have been disciplined for failure to enforce hygiene legislation, for each year since 1995, and what length of training has been required for (a) Official Veterinary Surgeons, (b) meat inspectors and (c) other posts that are currently within or under contract with the National Meat Hygiene Service in each year since 1985, have been passed to me for reply. [24678] [21680]

No employed or contract MHS staff were disciplined for failure to enforce hygiene legislation in 1995/96. 7 employed Meat Hygiene Inspectors are currently facing internal disciplinary investigation into alleged failure to enforce hygiene legislation. 6 of these are on precautionary paid suspension.

As you are aware the MHS was launched on 1 April 1995. The MHS requires Official Veterinary Surgeons (OVSs) to be qualified veterinary surgeons, members of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons and to have gained OVS accreditation following attendance at an OVS training course. The OVS training course consists of one weeks college based training together with a practical input prior or post course attendance. Accreditation is approved by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

All Meat Hygiene Inspectors (MHIs) employed by the MHS must be qualified by gaining, through examination, the Certificate in Meat Inspection approved by the Royal Society of Health for England and Wales, and the Royal Environmental Health Institute of Scotland for Scotland. The traditional route to acquisition of the certificate in meat inspection is on a day release basis over a two year period with a requirement of at least 200 hours practical experience for red meat and a further minimum of 120 hours for white meat. The Meat Hygiene Service has sponsored the training of Meat Hygiene Inspectors in accordance with the Royal Society of Health and the Royal Environmental Health Institute for Scotland requirements of typically 22 weeks of intense full time combined theoretical and practical training, the latter arranged in meat plants.

Prior to the actual launch of the Agency, the MHS provided weekend induction and operational training for all groups of staff. Post launch numerous training courses have been delivered to veterinary and meat inspection staff on operational issues including animal welfare, hygiene assessment and Specified Bovine Material (SBM) controls.

For other (mainly non operation) posts job specific training has been provided according to individual requirements.

Organophosphates

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the dangers of organophosphate sheep dip to fish and insects in rivers; and if he will make a statement. [21095]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 20 March 1997]: No veterinary medicine is authorised for use unless it meets stringent statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. Safety includes risk to the environment. Applications for marketing authorisations must be supported by information to satisfy the statutory criteria, including details of relevant research. Product labels include warnings about the safe use and disposal of all sheep dips and guidance on disposal is available from the Agriculture Departments.

Fur Farms

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the permitted means of disposal of mink carcases from fur farms. [21241]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 20 March 1997]: I will write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Avenue of Statues (London)

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement about her proposal for an avenue of statues in London. [21460]

Mr. Sproat: Sir Neil Cossons, the director of the science museum, has been invited to be chairman of a committee to look at the possibility of establishing a project to erect an avenue of statues of famous British inventors, scientists, discoverers, industrialists etc. This avenue would be sited in London, as the capital city of the United Kingdom, but the precise site within London would be a matter for the committee to decide. Among other matters for the committee to decide would be the identification of those to be included as statues, and the sources, and raising, of funding for the project. The committee would be totally independent of the Government, and its membership would be for Sir Neil to decide.

London is plentifully and properly adorned with statues of kings and queens, soldiers, sailors, statesmen and artists etc., but our great scientific and industrial heritage, which is certainly as important as other parts of our heritage, is less well commemorated. This project could help redress that balance.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list those of her Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21743]

Mr. Sproat: (a) Advisory Committee on Historic Wreck Sites.

(b) None.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if she will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21722]

Mr. Sproat: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Statutory base

The Theatres Trust

(b) Publish their advice to Government

Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art'

(c) Publish an annual report

The Advisory Committee of the Government Art Collection'

Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art'

Royal Fine Art Commission'

Theatres Trust'

Treasure Trove Reviewing Committee'

(d) Lay an annual report before Parliament

The Advisory Committee of the Government Art Collection'

Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art'

Royal Fine Art Commission'

Treasure Trove Reviewing Committee'

'This is not a statutory requirement.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which of the executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by her Department have a statutory base; if she will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21443]

Mr. Sproat: The information is as follows:

Statutory base

British Library
British Museum
British Tourist Authority
Broadcasting Complaints Commission
Broadcasting Standards Council
English Heritage
English Tourist Board
Football Licensing Authority
Imperial War Museum
Millennium Commission
Museum of London
National Gallery
National Heritage Memorial Fund
National Lottery Charities Board
National Maritime Museum
National Museum and Galleries on Merseyside
National Portrait Gallery
National Museum of Science and Technology Natural History Museum
Public Lending Right
Royal Armouries
Sir John Soane's Museum
Tate Gallery
Victoria and Albert Museum
Wallace Collection

(a) Admit Members to all board and committee meetings

None

(b) Hold open meetings for the public

None holds formal open board meetings for the public, although many engage in regular dialogue with, or arrange informal events for, members of the public to discuss matters of policy.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of member's interest, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21697]

Mr. Sproat:

(a) None

(b) None

(c) None

(d) Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art[1]

(e) None

(f) None.

[1]It is not a statutory requirement to conduct consultation exercise with outside commercial interests.

Charity Collections

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what advice she has given concerning the owners of premises to which the public are admitted in relation to granting permission to charities to make collections on those premises; and if she will make a statement. [21367]

Mr. Sproat: None. However, the Charity Commission has for a number of years advised retailers about the risks of fraudulent collectors. The commission regularly advises retailers on the licensing requirements for charitable fundraising and how they can make checks to establish whether a charity or fundraiser is a registered charity or is otherwise known to the commission. Stores are encouraged to pass on to the commission information about organisations or individuals who have approached them for permission to collect on their premises and who did not, for whatever reason, appear to be bona fide. The Charity Commission continues to look for opportunities to help retailers to avoid giving permission to possibly fraudulent collectors.

National Coal Mining Museum

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will provide financial assistance to the national coal mining museum for England, based at Wakefield; and if she will make a statement. [21362]

Mr. Sproat: Since 1994, the Government, through the Museums and Galleries Commission, have been providing £300,000 of transitional funding to the museum to give it a breathing space in which to identify alternative sources of income. The heritage lottery fund has now offered in principle to contribute up to 75 per cent. of development costs of £1.3 million at the museum to be incurred over two years. This assistance is intended to preserve the museum's collections, site and public services in the medium term while exploring the opportunities for the museum's longer term viability through a business study. My Department will be making a contribution to £200,000, via the Museums and Galleries Commission, towards the partnership funding that is necessary to secure the heritage lottery fund's grant.

Advisory Groups (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the non-elected bodies responsible to his Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21386]

Mr. Sproat: The table lists the non-elected bodies which provide advice or services in London. It is not, however, possible to identify the proportion of total budgets and running costs related to advice or services specifically for London. The budget and running costs are therefore the estimated and planned totals for each body.

Figures for 1996–97 are estimated outturn. Figures for 1997–98 onwards are planning figures.
[1] Budget figures include grant in aid income only.
[2] These museums have branches outside London but the majority of their expenditure is on branches in London.
[3] The budget figure for the BFI for years 1997–98 to 1999–00 includes grant in aid only.
[4] From 1.4.97 the Broadcasting Standards Council and the Broadcasting Complaints Commission will merge to form the Broadcasting Standards Commission.
[5] The MGC is based in London but provides services and advice throughout the UK.
[6] The GB Sports Council was replaced by the UK Sports Council and the English Sports Council on 1 January 1997. The running cost figures for the GB Sports Council for 1996–97 are split between the two new councils.
[7] Proceeds from the National Lottery have been excluded as it is not possible to estimate the amount that the distributors will receive from the National Lottery Distribution Fund. As the Millennium Commission and the National Lottery Charities Board receive funds only from the Lottery they have been excluded.

Printing and Publications

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much her Department has spent on printing and publications in each of the last five financial years. [20848]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 19 March 1997]: The amounts spent on producing and printing the Department's publications since its creation in 1992 are as follows:

1992–93 (actual)	Nil
1993–94 (actual)	25,000
1994–95 (actual)	57,000
1995–96 (actual	348,000
1996–97 (spend to date)	532,000

PRIME MINISTER

Ethiopia

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all ministerial visits to Ethiopia, indicating the purpose of the visit, in the last five years. [21369]

The Prime Minister: Visits made by Ministers to Ethiopia in the last five years were as follows:

1993

September: Baroness Chalker (Minister of State FCO/Minister for ODA)

1995

July: Baroness Chalker (Minister of State FCO/Minister for ODA)

August: Mr. Baker (Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Home Office)

1996

November: Baroness Chalker (Minister of State FCO/Minister for ODA)

The purpose of all visits by Baroness Chalker was to review the United Kingdom's development programme in Ethiopia and to take forward dialogue on matters of mutual concern. The visit by Mr. Baker reviewed the implementation of UK immigration policy in respect of Ethiopia.

Advisory Groups (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the non-elected bodies responsible to his Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21376]

The Prime Minister: For these purposes my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my hon. Friend the Paymaster General.

TREASURY

Government Borrowing (Scotland)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the Scottish share of the United Kingdom general government borrowing requirement for each year since 1979 adopting the same methodology as that set out in the Government expenditure and revenue in Scotland 1994–95. [15669]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 13 February 1997]: The table shows the figures requested. As Scotland accounts for roughly 9 per cent. of the UK population, this implies that the Scottish fiscal deficit per capita has normally exceeded that of the UK as a whole.

Estimates of the Scottish share of the UK GGBR, excluding North Sea taxes and privatisation proceeds

	Ratio of Scottish GGBR to UK GGBR (per cent.)
1979–80	15
1980–81	17
1981–82	12
1982–83	17
1983–84	15
1984–95	13
1985–86	14
1986–87	21
1987–88	50
1988–89	—
1989–90	—
1990–91	57
1991–92	22
1992–93	17
1993–94	17
1994–95	17

Estimates of the Scottish ratio prior to 1990–91 are very approximate. The ratios of Scottish GGBR to UK GGBR are calculated using rounded data (to the nearest billion pounds).
The ratios in 1888–89 and 1989–90 cannot be calculated, as the UK GGBR was zero or negative.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of (a) the total proceeds from the uniform business rate for each local authority area in Britain in each of the last three years and (b) the amounts of such moneys paid back to each local authority in each year. [20102]

Mr. Waldegrave: The available information has been collated, and copies have been placed in the Library of the House. The tables show (a) the contribution to the English, Welsh and Scottish non-domestic rates pools by each billing authority, and (b) the amounts redistributed from each rates pool by local authority recipient.

Basic Pension Plus

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what revenue he expects to raise in each year from the taxation of pension fund contributions under the basic pension plus proposal; and what assumptions this estimate is based on; [20437]

(2) what estimate he has made of lost tax revenue after 2040 due to the change in tax relief under the Government's basic pension plus proposal. [20434]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 March 1997]: It is broadly estimated that the annual savings to the Exchequer from the tax change on contributions would build up gradually from some £170 million in the first year after the change to about £8 billion by around 2040. Thereafter, these savings would continue, but would be offset by a decline in income tax on pensions in payment—from an annual yield of some £7 billion—as the population under the current pension regime reduces. This decline will coincide with a rapid fall in expenditure on state retirement pension which will reach some £40 billion a year in the longer term.

These estimates are very tentative and assume the current tax regime and levels of contributions and pensions in payment. It would not be appropriate to give precise figures for each year, since the exact costs will depend on when the scheme is introduced, what the initial age limit is, and other details to be considered during the consultation.

Departmental Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the past 15 years; and how many have been passed by Parliament. [19778]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The number of Bills sponsored by the Chancellor's Departments in each of the last 15 years is given in the table. All have been passed by both Houses of Parliament.

Session	Bills
1982–83	7
1983–84	12
1984–85	8
1985–86	5
1986–87	6
1987–88	9
1988–89	5
1989–90	7
1990–91	6
1991–92	7

1993–94	5
1994–95	4
1995–96	4

National Lottery

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) of 12 December 1994, Official Report, columns 443–44 on the national lottery, by providing equivalent figures for the years 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [20557]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 18 March 1997]: The table provides the Budget projections of payments into and out of the national lottery distribution fund.

National lottery distribution fund—forecast income and expenditure (all figures £ million)

Year	Income	Expenditure
1996–97	1,541	600
1997–98	1,400	1,200
1998–99	1,470	1,500
1999–2000	1,540	1,800

ECOFIN

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent Council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European Union. [21422]

Mr. Oppenheim: I represented the UK at the Economic and Finance Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 17 March.

The Council carried out an examination of the revised convergence programmes of Germany and France for the period 1997–2001. The German strategy of pursuing budgetary consolidation while promoting growth and employment through structural reforms was welcomed. The Council also welcomed the objective in the French programme of reducing the Government deficit in the medium term and the measures they have proposed to achieve this.

The Council agreed to the reactivation of previously agreed balance of payments lending to Romainia. Lending to Bulgaria was discussed, but no conclusion reached and the matter will be considered again at a future meeting.

The Council recommended that the European Parliament should grant the Commission discharge for the 1995 budget. However, the Council noted that standards of financial management of the EC budget remained low, and looked forward to the effect of measures in the Commission's sound and efficient management 2000 initiative to improve resource management. A progress report on this initiative is due in June.

The Commission presented proposals for an energy products directive. I made it clear that any proposals which would require the UK to introduce new taxes on gas, electricity or coal would be unacceptable.

The Council discussed technical specifications of euro coins, but no final decisions were reached on this issue. The Council will need to return to this issue at some point in the future.

Working Hours

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many and what percentage of (a) male and (b) female employees worked (i) less than eight hours a week, (ii) less than 16 hours a week and (iii) part-time in (1) 1970, (2) 1980, (3) 1990 and (4) the most recent year for which figures are available; [21065]

(2) what was the average number of hours per week worked by (a) full-time and (b) part-time employees in (i) 1970, (ii) 1980, (iii) 1990 and (iv) the most recent year for which figures are available by gender. [21066]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 21 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the number and percentage of male and female employees who worked less than eight hours a week; less than 16 hours a week and part-time in 1970, 1980, 1990 and most recently.

The only consistent source going back to 1970 is the New Earnings Survey from which this response is derived.

For the general category of part-time employees the estimates requested are as follows:

Numbers and proportion of part-time employees

	Male		Female
	Number	Percentage of all employees	Number	Percentage of all employees
June 1971	n/a	n/a	2,757,000	34
June 1980	n/a	n/a	3,919,000	42
June 1990	999,000	8	4,677,000	44
June 1996	1,235,000	11	4,904,000	46

A more detailed breakdown on part-time work by number of hours and gender is available in the attached tables which have been taken from the New Earnings Survey.

Copies of the New Earnings Survey itself are available in the House of Commons Library. I will arrange for a copy of the tables to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Unemployed People (Skills and Qualifications)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a breakdown of the skills and qualifications held by those people unemployed in (a) Welwyn and Hatfield and (b) Hertfordshire. [21308]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 20 March 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Stephen Byers, dated 21 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the skills and qualifications held by those people unemployed in (a) Welwyn and Hatfield and (b) Hertfordshire.

According to 1995 Labour Force Survey Local Area Database, the estimated number of people in Welwyn and Hatfield unemployed under the standard International Labour Office (ILO) definition was less than 6,000. Only estimates above 6,000 are considered reliable enough to be released. Therefore no information can be made available about the skills or qualifications of the unemployed in Welwyn and Hatfield.

The available breakdown of those ILO unemployed in Hertfordshire by highest qualification is shown in the table below:

ILO unemployed in Hertfordshire by highest qualification

(thousands)

	Number
NVQ level 4 and equivalents and above[1]	6
Below NVQ level 4	21
No qualifications	9
All[2]	37

Income

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the average annual rate of increase in average net real disposable income (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) since 1979; [21497]

(2) what was the percentage increase in average net real disposable income (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) since 1979. [21496]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Sir John Stanley, dated 21 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent questions on the rates of increase in real disposable income. I have assumed that the question relates to real disposable income for the economy as a whole.

The increase in real personal disposable income between 1974 and 1979 was 11.4 per cent and from 1979 to 1995 (the latest available information) the increase was 45.5 per cent. The equivalent changes at annual rates are 2.2. per cent. and 2.4 per cent. respectively.

Information on real personal disposable income is published annually in table 4.1 of the ONS publication United Kingdom National Accounts, the Blue Book and estimates of the percentage changes at annual rates in table 16.12. This information is also held on the ONS database. These sources are available in the House of Commons Library.

Corporation Tax

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement of the level of corporation tax in Britain relative to that in other EU countries; and when corporation tax in the United Kingdom was last below its present level. [21499]

Mr. Jack: The United Kingdom continues to provide one of the lowest rates of corporation tax in the European Union. At no time since the introduction of corporation tax in 1965 has the main rate of corporation tax been lower than its present level of 33 per cent.

Adult Learning Courses

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on recent changes in the treatment for VAT of adult learning courses. [21509]

Mr. Oppenheim: I am not aware of any recent changes.

Advisory Groups (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the non-elected bodies responsible to his Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21385]

Mr. Waldegrave: I cannot answer substantively before Parliament is prorogued. I will, however, write to the hon. Member.

Youth Unemployment

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the rate of youth unemployment in (a) the United Kingdom,(b) Italy, (c) Spain, (d) Germany and (e) France; if he will give the EC average; and if he will make statement. [21366]

Mr. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Sir Irvine Patnick, dated 21 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the rate of youth unemployment in the United Kingdom and other EC countries.

Estimates are available for the United Kingdom from the Labour Force Survey (LFS). The LFS uses the International Labour Office (ILO) definition of unemployment which is widely accepted and used for international comparisons. According to estimates from the autumn 1996 LFS 15.6 per cent of people aged 16-24 were ILO unemployed in the UK.

European comparisons are published in the Eurostat annual publication Labour Force Survey Results. ILO unemployment rates for various age groups are shown on table 8 of the latest edition which is for 1995. This publication is available in the House of Commons Library.

Cancer Deaths

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many deaths there have been from cancer in people under the age of 40 years in each health authority region in each of the last 10 years. [21549]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Dr. John Cunningham, dated 21 March 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) to your recent question asking how many deaths have occurred from cancer in people under the age of 40 years in each health authority region in each of the last 10 years.

This information is published from 1986 to 1992 in Table 4 of "Mortality statistics: area, England and Wales", series DH5, no. 13 to no. 19, and from 1993 to 1995 in VS3 tables which are available on floppy disk. All of these sources can be accessed in the House of Commons library.

New procedures for coding cause of death from 1993 mean that figures for 1993 onwards may not be exactly comparable with earlier years. More details may be found in ONS Series DH2 for 1993 (revised) and 1994, which was published in September 1996. Copies are available in the House of Commons library.

Regina v. Rees and Rotheroe

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost to public funds of the case of Regina v. Rees and Rotheroe, separately identifying the costs of lawyers' fees. [21552]

Mr. Oppenheim: The direct identifiable costs of the customs investigation which gave rise to the case of Regina v. Rees and Rotheroe amount to approximately £20,250. Identifiable costs of customs lawyers are approximately £32,500. In addition there will be direct management costs which cannot be separately identified.

Payments so far made to counsel involved in the case amount to £7,300. The remaining costs of counsel for the prosecution and the defence costs to be paid out of public funds have still to be assessed. The details cannot therefore be provided at this time.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list those of the Royal Mint's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice supplied from; [21745]

(2) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Royal Mint (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [21706]

(3) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Royal Mint (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21712]

Mrs. Angela Knight: None.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from; [21750]

(2) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement; [21711]

(3) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21701]

Mrs. Knight: The information could not be obtained in the time available before Prorogation.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the (a) home and (b) overseas consultancy contracts which have been held by the panel of independent forecasters and have been notified to him. [21778]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Membership of the panel of independent forecasters imposes no formal restrictions on the other work undertaken by its members. Members are therefore under no obligation to notify the Chancellor of the Exchequer of consultancy contracts which they undertake in their own capacity.

Building Societies

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to revise the guidance notes published by the Building Societies Commission in respect of section 102A of the Building Societies Act 1986 as inserted by the Building Societies (Joint Account Holders) Act 1995. [21669]

Mrs. Angela Knight: None. Guidance on conversion procedures is a matter for the commission. The guidance that it published in March 1996 took full account of the Building Societies (Joint Account Holders) Act 1995.

International Monetary Fund

Mr. Legg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to be able to respond to the fourth report from the Treasury Committee on the International Monetary, Fund HC 68. [21823]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have today written to the hon. Member as Chairman of the Treasury Committee setting out the response of the Government. Copies of my letter are being placed in the Library of the House.

Finance Act 1997

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the operation of sections 97 and 102 of the Finance Act 1997. [21820]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The definition of "intermediary" for the purposes of the new relief aims broadly to distinguish between dealers and end-investors, on the lines recommended by the Securities and Investments Board in its report to the Chancellor in July 1996.

Sections 97 and 102 of the Finance Act 1997 define "intermediary" as a person who carries on a bona fide business of dealing in stock or securities, and who does not also carry on a business which the sections describe as an "excluded business". It will depend on the facts of the particular case whether a dealer is also carrying on an "excluded business".

One category of "excluded business" is a business which consists wholly or mainly in making or managing investments. Thus if the dealing firm also carries on a separate business of making and managing investments in exchange-traded chargeable securities or stock on its own behalf, that would be an excluded business and the dealer would not qualify as an intermediary, But if the dealer is holding such investments merely as an incidental part of a dealing activity taxable under case 1 of schedule D, and not as a separate business, that would not disqualify the firm from being an intermediary. For example, if the dealer buys and holds shares merely to hedge derivative contracts which it has made, that would not be regarded as a business of making investments for the purpose of the excluded business test.

Similarly, the Inland Revenue would not regard a dealer as disqualified merely because the firm also makes and manages investments for clients, if the investments are not beneficially owned by the dealer. By contrast, if the dealer purchases investments for clients and the clients hold something short of beneficial ownership in those investments—as would happen, for example, under the American arrangements known as prime brokerage—that would be regarded as a business of making or managing investments for the purpose of the excluded business test.

A firm may also be excluded from relief if it carries on a business which consists wholly or mainly of providing services to persons with which the firm is connected, such as members of the same group of companies. For example, if he dealer carries on a business of taking positions in equities as a service to connected persons who would not themselves qualify for relief as intermediaries, the sections would exclude the firm from relief. The Inland Revenue would not however regard the dealer as disqualified if business with connected persons is merely an incidental part of the firm's business with third parties, or if the services the firm provides are not related to handling securities within the scope of stamp duty and stamp duty reserve tax—such as research, secretarial or cleaning services. If the dealing firm buys chargeable securities merely in order to hedge the group's exposure as a result of derivative contracts undertaken with third parties by other members of the group, that would not be regarded as an excluded business.

The sections include a power for the Treasury to make regulations to alter the definition of intermediary, if that proves necessary. That will give flexibility to respond to market developments, or to deal with any particular practical problems which emerge as the new regime is introduced.

I understand that concern has also been expressed about the way in which relief may be withdrawn if the Inland Revenue concludes that a firm which has been recognised as an intermediary has in fact been carrying on an excluded business. The treatment of a particular case will depend on the precise facts. For example, if the intermediary had been recognised on the basis of incorrect or misleading information which it had provided about the nature of its business, any relief already given would be withdrawn. Similarly, if the firm had knowingly started to carry on an excluded business after being recognised as intermediary, it would generally be appropriate to withdraw relief from the time the excluded business started. On the other hand, where the business was extended inadvertently into an excluded area, or there were genuine doubts about whether a particular part of the business came into the excluded category, the Inland Revenue's practice would be to give the intermediary an opportunity to modify or reorganise the business so as to retain intermediary status; and if a decision was taken to discontinue the relief, past transactions would not be affected. If firms have doubts about whether particular types of business are excluded business, they may discuss the issues with the Inland Revenue. The Inland Revenue will consider issuing guidance on other aspects of the new regime if it proves necessary.

In order to qualify for the intermediaries' relief, intermediaries will have to be recognised as such by the exchange of which they are members, under arrangements approved by the Inland Revenue.

Investment Companies

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further progress has been made with proposals for open-ended investment companies which are not subject to the undertakings for collective investment in transferable securities directive. [21821]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Proposals to permit the formation of non-UCITS open ended investment companies were published in a Treasury consultation document, "Open-Ended Investment Companies: The Next Generation", in December 1996. The proposals secured a wide measure of support and the Treasury has received a number of helpful responses from the investment fund industry and other interested parties.

I regret that it has not proved possible to complete the proposed legislation in this Session. The Government remain committed to providing powers for the formation of non-UCITS open ended investment companies.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the intends to bring into force the new stamp duty and stamp duty reserve tax reliefs for intermediaries and for stock borrowing and repo arrangements. [21822]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Sections 97, 98, 102 and 103 of the Finance Act 1997 provide for the new regime to be brought into force from a date to be appointed by the Treasury. Our current planning assumption is that the new regime will be brought into force in September. The precise start date will depend on how soon all the necessary practical arrangements can be put in place. In particular CREST will have to adapt its present system for administering the present reliefs in order to cater for the new reliefs instead. It will take a little time to design and test the new system, and we are grateful to CREST for fitting this change into its programme over the next few months. Market participants will also need to adapt their systems accordingly.

Mersey Docks and Harbour Company

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage stake the Government currently holds in the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company; what is the current cash value of this stake; and what practical steps the Government have taken to resolve the current industrial dispute. [21635]

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government hold some 13.9 per cent. of the issued share capital in the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company. The current market value of this stake is approximately £53.4 million. The industrial dispute between the company and its former employees is a matter for the parties concerned. The Government do not intervene in such matters.

Abortions

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many legal abortions were performed in 1995 (a) with anti-progesterone and (b) without overnight stay on women resident (i) in each health region and (ii) in each district health authority in England and Wales; and how many of these abortions involved (1) NHS hospitals; (2) NHS agency arrangements and (3) other purchasers. [21827]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply, but cannot do so before Parliament is prorogued. I will, however, write to the right hon. Member.

Rent Payment

Mr. Brooke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement concerning the payment of rent in the context of section 37 of the Finance Act. [21824]

Mr. Oppenheim: Section 37 is an anti-avoidance measure dealing primarily with the situation where a person funds the purchase or construction of a building with a view to occupying it for VAT-exempt purposes. The measure has been drafted so as not to disturb ordinary arms-length commercial leasing arrangements and genuine speculative property development. In these circumstances a tenant simply paying rent is not providing finance for the landlord's initial purchase or construction of the building.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Denmark (Jane Horney)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from Denmark in connection with the disappearance of Jane Horney. [20350]

Dr. Liam Fox: None.

St. Helena

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) which factors relating to the publicly expressed views of a visitor to St. Helena may be considered in determining the continuance of his leave to remain. [21360]

(2) what instructions were given by the Government of St. Helena to the immigration officers of the island concerning the ending of the visitor's permit for Mr. Mikael Olsson; and what factors underlay this decision. [21361]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: None. The immigration officer implements the St. Helena Government's immigration policy under the provision of the Immigration Ordinance 1972. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) on 20 March 1997, Official Report, column 770.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the internal review of the use, by Indonesia, of United Kingdom-supplied armoured water cannon will be completed. [21407]

Mr. Hanley: We shall continue to study any allegations which we may receive of misuse of British-supplied defence equipment.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Government representations have been made to the Indonesian authorities regarding the use of United Kingdom-supplied Scorpion for internal security purposes in the forthcoming Indonesian elections. [21406]

Mr. Hanley: The Indonesian authorities have given us assurances that British-supplied military equipment will not be used against civilians. They are fully aware of the importance which the British Government attach to these assurances.

Riot Control Equipment

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that no further licences for the export of (a) armoured water cannon and (b) other riot control equipment, will be issued until the current inquiry is completed. [21408]

Mr. Hanley: We shall continue to consider any such applications on their individual merits.

EU Ambassadors

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries and the international organisations to which EU representatives are accredited with ambassadorial status. [21501]

Mr. David Davis: The countries and international organisations to which the European Commission have accredited representatives are listed below. Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what section of the EU treaties representatives of the European Union are accorded ambassadorial status; and if he will make a statement on the basis of their ambassadorial status. [21500]

Mr. Davis: No provisions of the EU treaty, or the treaties establishing the European Communities, provides for according ambassadorial status to any representatives of the European Union. Delegations of the European Commission in third countries are in practice often accorded privileges and immunities by their host states. The head of delegation is the Commissions's representative and known as the delegate. Some countries choose to treat delegates as ambassadors; but this is largely a matter of local custom.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21447]

Mr. Hanley: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 21 February 1996, Official Report, column 173.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement; [21717]

(2) if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from; [21739]

(3) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e)

publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21694]

Mr. Hanley: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 26 November 1996, Official Report, column 150, if he will make a statement on his latest discussions with the United States Government on Libyan sanctions; and if he will make a statement on changes in his Department's policy on sanctions towards Libya in each of the last four years. [21551]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: UK and US Government officials discussed UN sanctions against Libya in the weeks preceding the review of sanctions on 14 March. Both Governments remain committed to the rigorous implementation of the sanctions until Libya has complied fully with UN Security Council resolutions 731 and 748. It remains Her Majesty's Government's policy that, since the break in relations with Libya in 1984, we neither encourage nor discourage unembargoed trade with Libya. We support UK exporters to the extent that our limited resources in Tripoli allow.

Libya's continued failure to surrender the two Lockerbie accused, and to comply with the other requirements of the UN Security Council, caused the adoption of resolution 883 which imposed further sanctions effective from 1 December 1993; specifically, a partial assets freeze, a ban on the supply of certain oil-related equipment, and a tightening of sanctions imposed by SCR 748.

UK sanctions against Libya are reviewed every four months. There has been no change in Her Majesty's Government's policy on Libya sanctions since they were imposed, because the reasons for imposing them remain valid.

Balkans

Mr. Gill : To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice his Department has received from James Pettifer in respect of (a) Albania and (b) other Balkan states. [21577]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Freedom International

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list know-how fund consultancy contracts awarded to Freedom International, indicating in each case the year awarded, approximate value, countries concerned and brief description of the project. [21775]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Albania

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the principal areas of advice and assistance given to the Berisha Government in Albania in the fields of (a) macroeconomic management, (b) financial services regulation and (c) prevention of serious fraud. [21666]

(2) if he will list the United Kingdom (a) firms, (b) partnerships and (c) individuals who have been paid via the know-how fund to provide services (i) in Albania or (ii) to the Albanian Government since April 1991. [21665]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

European Parliament

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom will oppose proposals at the intergovernmental conference to include in the treaty a provision requiring the European Parliament to continue to divide its activities between Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg. [21668]

Mr. David Davis: I shall write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Liverpool Macroeconomic Research

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list know-how fund consultancy contracts awarded to Liverpool Macroeconomic Research or its principals, indicating in each case the year awarded, approximate value, countries concerned and brief description of the project. [21774]

Sir Nicolas Bonsor: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Sudan

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the possible outcomes of the current fights between the National Democratic Alliance/SPLA forces and the forces of the Government of Sudan; what action he proposes to take; and if he will make a statement. [21825]

Mr. Hanley: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Scottish Members of Parliament

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the aggregate amount spent on (a) parliamentary salaries, (b) office costs allowance, (c) additional costs allowance, and (d) travel expenditure in respect of hon. Members representing Scottish constituencies in 1996. [21598]

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information requested is not in a form which can readily be extracted. However, I have asked the Fees Office to write to the hon. Member in due course with the information he has requested.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Lord President of the Council which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings,

(b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21709]

Mr. Newton: I am not responsible for any non-departmental public bodies.

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what research his Department has commissioned into the use of drugs by young people; and if he will make a statement. [21595]

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office has not commissioned any research into the use of drugs by young people.

Under the Government's tackling drugs together strategy, the Department of Health was given the responsibility of commissioning research into drug misuse among 11 to 35 year-olds. The first survey of over 5,000 people was conducted by the Health Education Authority and BMRB International in autumn 1995, and the results published in May 1996. A second survey was conducted in autumn 1996, and the results will be made available later this year.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what formal assessments have been made of the effectiveness of the different elements of the anti-drugs campaign; and if he will make a statement. [21594]

Mr. Newton: The Government are vigorously implementing complementary drug strategies in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, tailored to the circumstances of each country. The effectiveness of each of these strategies is under regular review, under the auspices of the Cabinet Sub-Committee on the Misuse of Drugs.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what discussions his Department has had with the Economic and Social Research Council about applied social research on drug taking; and if he will make a statement. [21596]

Mr. Newton: The central drugs co-ordination unit in the Privy Council Office was offered the opportunity, which it accepted, to comment on the most recent drug-related research grant applications to the Economic and Social Research Council.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Advisory Bodies (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the non-elected bodies responsible to his Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21377]

Mr. Bates: Within the Cabinet Office, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is responsible for the performance of Millennium Central Ltd. the operating company which will set up and run the millennium exhibition in Greenwich. It is not possible to provide figures for the overall budget and estimated running costs of MCL, as these will not be available until the business plan for the exhibition has been finalised.

Criminal Conviction Certificates

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if those organisations which are expected to undertake basic checks as a part of contracting for Government business are also required to obtain criminal conviction certificates from employees; and if he will make a statement. [21415]

Mr. Freeman: Government contractors are obliged to carry out basic checks on employees and potential employees who, in the course of working on a particular contract, have a requirement to have access to Government assets. As part of the basic check procedure, employees and potential employees are required to provide a declaration of unspent criminal convictions. This may be passed direct to the contracting Department or agency rather than the employer if the employee prefers.

The Government's proposals for new arrangements for access to criminal records have been set out in the Police Bill. This provides that, in future, individuals will be able to obtain certificated details of their own criminal convictions. These developments will be kept under review with regard to their possible application in the area of basic checks and in security vetting more widely.

Admiralty Arch

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has made for the future of Admiralty Arch. [21429]

Mr. Freeman: Good progress is being made with preparations for the transfer of this important historic building to a new body that will enable it to be renovated and re-used for the benefit of organisations concerned with the promotion of London.

The executive agency currently responsible for its management, Property Advisers to the Civil Estate has drawn up a long lease providing for its occupation by a not-for-profit company or trust representing Londoners' interests through business, local government, the voluntary sector and faith communities. The lease would be subject to the availability of appropriate funding, for example from the national lottery heritage fund. It is envisaged that the trust would be headed by a co-chairmanship.

The new organisation would then be responsible for the refurbishment and maintenance of Admiralty Arch and for arranging for its occupation by appropriate bodies whose purpose is the promotion of London. Several charities and similar organisations have already expressed strong interest.

In the meantime, work is about to begin on strengthening the building. This will entail sequential closures of the arches to traffic and pedestrians which will be phased over the next 16 weeks in order to minimise disruption.

Citizens Charters

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many citizens charters adopted by national public services (a) have their performance indicators validated and verified by an external body and (b) specify enforceable rights for particular standards of service; and if he will identify those services under (a) and (b); [21802]

(2) if he will list each citizens charter, indicating which involved consultation with consumers in (a) setting performance standards and (b) their preparation; [21783]

(3) if he will list those national citizens charters which (a) provide complaints procedures in line with recommendations of the complaints task force and (b) provide financial compensation for users when particular standards have not been met; and if he will publish for each the figures for compensation paid out in each financial year since the charter was implemented; [21782]

(4) how many of the national citizens charters are available (a) in an appropriate form for the visually impaired and (b) in two or more languages other than English; and if he will list those charters in each category; [21780]

(5) if he will list all national public services which have not yet published a citizens charter. [21819]

Mr. Freeman: I shall write to the hon. Member and place copies in the Libraries of the House.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those of the Central Office of Information's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish this response to advice from. [21733]

Mr. Freeman: The Central Office of Information does not sponsor any advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Central Office for Information (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [21688]

Mr. Freeman: The Advisory Committee on Advertising is the only non-departmental public body sponsored by the Central Office of Information. It: (a) does not have a statutory base, (b) does not publish its advice to Government, (c) does not publish an annual report and (d) does not lay an annual report before Parliament.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary; [21689]

(2) if he will list those Cabinet Office's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from; [21732]

(3) if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from; [21731]

(4) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21682]

Mr. Freeman: I shall write to the hon. Member and place copies in the Libraries of the House.

WALES

Public Transport (Cardiff)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision he has made for a public sector contribution to the funding under the private finance initiative of the Bute avenue and allied public transport scheme in the financial years (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1988–99. [21530]

Mr. Hague: Cardiff Bay development corporation is currently evaluating private sector bids for Bute avenue. It would be prejudicial to negotiations to reveal information about what public sector provision has been made for the project.

Public bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case under a statutory requirement. [21431]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is a statutory obligation on national health service trusts to publish an annual report, all other NHS bodies are required to do so by the code of conduct and accountability. There is a statutory obligation on all NHS bodies to publish annual accounts, but no obligation on them to publish minutes of their meetings, although many do. Health authorities and special health authorities are statutorily required to publish the agendas of their meetings. All NHS bodies are required by the code of conduct and accountability to maintain a register of members' interests.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base. [21754]

Mr. Hague: The Historic Buildings Council for Wales; the Ancient Monuments Board for Wales; the local government boundary commission; the staff commission for Wales; the Welsh industrial development advisory board; the Environment Agency advisory committee for Wales; the Agricultural Dwelling House Advisory Committee; the Welsh Dental Committee; the Welsh Medical Committee; the Welsh Optical Committee; the Welsh Pharmaceutical Committee; the Welsh Nursing and Midwifery Committee; the Hill Farming Advisory Sub-Committee for Wales and the Library and Information Services Council.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21760]

Mr. Jones: All national health service bodies, as defined by the Cabinet Office, have a statutory basis. Health authorities and special health authorities are statutorily required to admit members of the public to their meetings. NHS trusts are statutorily required to hold an annual public meeting and many voluntarily open board meetings to the public.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21438]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is as follows: the Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales, the Countryside Council for Wales, the Cardiff Bay development corporation, the Development Board for Rural Wales, the Further and Higher Education Funding Council, Housing for Wales, the Land Authority for Wales, the Residuary Body for Wales, the Welsh Development Agency, the Welsh Language Board, the Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, the Wales tourist board and the agricultural wages committees are all established by statute. Other bodies are established under royal warrant or royal charter.

(a) The Residuary Body for Wales and the Land Authority for Wales are both required by statute, under the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960, to open their board meetings to the public. For the Land Authority for Wales, the public may, by resolution, be excluded from meetings if the nature of the business is confidential or for other special reasons. The public are allowed access to board meetings of the Welsh national board but are asked to leave if confidential matters are to be discussed.

(b) No NDPB is statutorily required to hold open meetings for the public: the Countryside Council for Wales; the National Library for Wales and the National Museums and Galleries of Wales hold such meetings voluntarily.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21748]

Mr. Hague: There are no such bodies.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [21757]

Mr. Jones: National health service bodies, as defined by the Cabinet Office, are subject to investigation by the health service commissioner for Wales (ombudsman), and scrutiny by both the Audit Commission and the National Audit Office.

The principles of open government are incorporated in the code of practice on openness in the national health service with which all national health service bodies must comply. The principles of the citizen's charter apply to national health service bodies and have been incorporated into the patient's charter.

The Welsh Office health department monitors the performance of all national health service bodies in Wales.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21708]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is as follows:
(a) None;

(b) the local government boundary commission has a statutory duty to conduct consultation exercises. The staff commission for Wales conducts such exercises voluntarily as appropriate;

(c) to (f) none.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answers of 13 March, Official Report, columns 299–00, if he has received a copy of the briefing note to the board of the Llandough NHS trust dated 27 February, headed "Barry Hospital Defects Progress report"; if he will place a copy of it in the Library; what assessment he has made of the contents of paragraph 2.2 with particular reference to Welsh Health Estates taking over responsibility for the project management of Barry hospital; what further consideration he will give to the previous answers given on the respective responsibilities for project management of Beard Dove and Welsh Health Estates; and if he will make a statement. [21773]

Mr. Hague: I have not received a copy of the report.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the project management work for which Beard Dove took over responsibility for the estate care division of Welsh Health Common Services Authority (i) at the time of the division's privatisation and (ii) since July 1996; which of those projects have since been completed; and if he will list (a) the value of work done,

(b) fees earned, (c) estimated value of the transferred assets, and (d) liabilities and responsibilities at the time of privatisation. [21776]

Mr. Hague: This information is not available centrally. Details of project management work transferred to Beard Dove on 1 July 1996 is held by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

Developments since then are a matter for individual trusts.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many speech therapists there are in each health authority area; and what assessment he has made of the necessary establishment of speech therapists in each area. [21602]

Mr Gwilym Jones: The information is given in the table. Speech therapists employed by NHS trusts are shown in the health authority area in which the trust is situated. It is a matter for trusts to determine the number required.

Speech therapists (whole time equivalent numbers), 30 September 1995[1]

New health authority area	Number (wte)
Bro Taf	46
Dyfed Powys	28
Gwent	29
Morgannwg	45
North Wales	51

[1] Excluding a small number of speech therapists paid on local pay scales for whom no details of occupation are available centrally.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of (a) the recruitment and (b) the provision of speech therapists in Wales. [21601]

Mr. Jones: A survey of speech therapy departments in Wales was carried out in 1996 which identified 14.1 whole-time equivalent vacancies. NHS trusts indicated that there were some recruitment difficulties. Provision is being made for a further eight speech therapists to be trained in each annual cohort in Wales in addition to the 22 student places available.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 March, Official Report, column 300, what consultation he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority in relation to restitution payments by Beard Dove to the authority, following the termination of its project management responsibility for Barry Community hospital and its transfer to Welsh Health Estates. [21777]

Mr. Hague: None. All issues surrounding this matter are still being considered by Llandough hospital and Community NHS trust.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library all material documents relating to his arrangements and obligations to the European Commission in respect of wildlife compensatory measures for the Cardiff bay barrage; and if he will make a statement on the extent and nature of his obligations. [21787]

Mr. Hague: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Citizens Charters

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list those national citizens charters which (a) provide complaints procedures in line with recommendations of the complaints task force and (b) provide financial compensation for users when particular standards have not been met; and if he will publish for each the figures for compensation paid out in each financial year since the charter was implemented; [21797]

(2) how many citizens charters adopted by national public services (a) have their performance indicators validated and verified by an external body and (b) specify enforceable rights for particular standards of service; and if he will identify those services under (a) and (b); [21804]

(3) if he will list all national citizens charters, indicating which involved consumer consultation in (a) the setting of their performance standards and (b) their preparation; [21799]

(4) if he will list the gross public spending for each year since 1990–91, in 1996–97 prices on (a) grant-maintained schools, (b) city technology colleges, (c) training and enterprise councils and (d) career service companies; [21810]

(5) how many of the national citizens charters are available (a) in an appropriate form for the visually impaired and (b) in two or more languages other than English; and if he will identify those charters under (a) and (b). [21813]

Mr. Hague: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress on signing PFI contracts for (a) Chepstow hospital and (b) the Red Barn project in the grounds of Nevill Hall hospital, Abergavenny. [21667]

Mr. Hague: I expect the contract for the Chepstow neighbourhood health unit to be signed shortly. The Red Barn project is currently under consideration by Gwent Community NHS trust and Gwent health authority.

SCOTLAND

Doctors and Nurses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of (a) doctors and (b) nurses by grade, employed by each area health board in Scotland in each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement. [21274]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Farm Enterprises

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the average public subsidy for UK and EU funds to (a) dairy, (b) arable and (c) livestock farm enterprises in Roxburgh and Berwickshire and in Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale for the last five years for which figures are available. [21538]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement; [21723]

(2) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [21698]

(3) if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from; [21746]

(4) if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizen's charter; [21451]

(5) which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case under a statutory requirement; [21432]

(6) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Scottish Courts Administration (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement; [21713]

(7) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Scottish Courts Administration (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [21707]

(8) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Scottish Courts Administration have a statutory base; [21755]

(9) if he will list those of the Scottish Court Administration's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21747]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [21756]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: National health service bodies in Scotland are subject to investigation by the Health Service Commissioner (Ombudsman), and scrutiny by both the Accounts Commission and the National Audit Office.

The principles of open government are incorporated in the code of practice on openness in NHS in Scotland to which all national health service bodies must have regard. The principles of the citizens charter apply to national health service bodies and have been incorporated into the patients charter.

The Scottish health service management executive monitors the performance of all national health service bodies in Scotland.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21759]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All national health service bodies in Scotland have a statutory basis. Health boards and special health boards are statutorily required to admit members of the public to their meetings, unless by resolution they exclude the public to all or part of their meetings for a specific reason, for example, security considerations. NHS trusts are statutorily required to hold an annual public meeting and many trusts voluntarily admit the public to their board meetings. The Mental Welfare Commission, the Common Services Agency and the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Scotland are not required to hold any board meetings to which the public is admitted.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of sexual abuse of children under 16 years of age led to a conviction in each of the last five years. [19076]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table sets out information for the most recent five years for which it is available for those sexual offences within the classification which, by definition, involve sexual abuse of children.

Persons with a charge proved where the main crime was a sexual offence against a child aged under 16, Scotland 1990–1994

	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Lewd and libidinous practices	172	160	154	159	182
Unlawful sexual intercourse with a girl under 13	9	2	7	8	3
Unlawful sexual intercourse with a girl under 16	97	91	57	53	67
Causing or encouraging seduction, prostitution etc. of a girl under 16	1	—	—	—	—
Taking or making indecent photographs or pseudo-photographs of children	1	—	5	—	2

Small Towns Initiative

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what budget has been allocated to Scottish Enterprise to finance the small towns initiative; and if he will make a statement. [21548]

Mr. Kynoch: The budget allocation to Scottish Enterprise is not generally hypothecated to particular initiatives. The 1997–98 costs to Scottish Enterprise of the small towns initiative are expected to be met from its overall budget of £464 million. This budget was determined after consultation with Scottish Enterprise and, with the agreement of the chairmen of that organisation, took account of expected levels of expenditure on the initiative.

Mr. W. J. Duff

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what year auditors working for Greater Glasgow health board first took note of the exceptional nature of the annual service fees paid to Mr. W. J. Duff; and what action was taken. [19046]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Dentists' NHS earnings are monitored by the dental practice division of the Common Services Agency on behalf of the Scottish Dental Practice Board and it is the board which brings to the attention of health boards any concerns about payments to dentists. The auditors for Greater Glasgow health board examine the internal control systems established by the board for handling NHS general dental service payments and administration: they do not look in detail at individual cases.

Local Enterprise Companies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if local enterprise companies publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) minutes of meetings, (d) agendas of meetings and (e) registers of members' interests; and in each case whether this is under a statutory requirement; [21764]

(2) if he will list gross public spending on local enterprise companies for each year since 1990–91, in 1996–97 prices. [21807]

(3) what is the statutory basis of local enterprise companies; and if they (a) admit members of the public to board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21770]

Mr. Kynoch: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

NHS Trusts (Applications)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent by (a) his Department and (b) hospitals on unsuccessful applications to achieve trust status since 1990. [20182]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Cullen Inquiry

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost to public funds of the Cullen inquiry. [15604]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Legal Aid Fees

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the 10 (a) Queen's counsel,

(b) advocates and (c) law firms which have received the highest sums of legal aid fees in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [18242]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

NHS Salaries

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the NHS salaries and wages costs for (a) administrative, clerical and management staff and (b) nurses and midwives in each financial year form 1988–89 in 1995 prices. [21159]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Official Residence, Charlotte Square

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the annual maintenance and running costs associated with his official residence in Charlotte square in the most recent year for which figures are available, indicating the different categories of expenditure. [19153]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Scottish Office Quangos

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the annual publicity budget for (i) the Scottish Office and (ii) Scottish Office quangos in each year since 1986–87 in (a) real and (b) cash terms. [19154]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Special Advisers

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the costs to public funds in (a) salary, (b) administrative support and (c) travel of the special advisers employed in his Department in the last year for which figures are available. [20635]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Cottage Hospitals

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the cottage hospitals which have (a) closed and (b) opened in Scotland in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [21300]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Grants and Loans

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 18 March relating to the condition of grants and loans from public bodies and the oral statement of the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) of 11 March, Official Report, column 48, if the defined political objectives were declared when the company applied for grants from the Highlands and Islands development board, Highlands and Island Enterprise or the local enterprise companies. [21512]

Mr. Kynoch: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Eye Tests

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have had eye tests in Scotland in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [21299]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of beds available for (a) accident and emergency wards, (b) geriatric wards, (c) surgical wards and (d) paediatric wards, by area health board in Scotland in each year since 1986; and if he will make a statement. [21301]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Cairngorm Funicular Railway

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what public funding will be given to Highlands and Islands Enterprise to meet the agreement obligations in relation to the proposed Cairngorm funicular; and what assessment he has made of the value for money of such expenditure. [21510]

Mr. Kynoch: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Convictions

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) number of convictions, (b) conviction rate and (c) clear-up rate, for each category of crime, in each region, for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [21587]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. and learned Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Citizens Charters

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list those national citizens charters which (a) provide complaints procedures in line with recommendations of the complaints task force and (b) provide financial compensation for users when particular standards have not been met; and if he will publish for each the figures for compensation paid out in each financial year since the charter was implemented; [21798]

(2) how many citizens charters adopted by national public services (a) have their performance indicators validated and verified by an external body and (b) specify enforceable rights for particular standards of service; and if he will identify those services under (a) and (b); [21805]

(3) how many of the national citizens charters are available (a) in an appropriate form for the visually impaired and (b) in two or more languages other than English; and if he will identify those charters under (a) and (b); [21814]

(4) if he will list all national citizens charters, indicating which involved consumer consultation in (a) the setting of their performance standards and (b) their preparation. [21800]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what monitoring his Department carries our concerning the assurance given by the Government that previously acceptable rail routes would continue to be available after privatisation; and if he will make a statement about the change in the validity of Newcastle upon Tyne to London full-fare tickets for travel to Euston; [21614]

(2) if, for the purposes of the Government's assurance concerning continued acceptance for full-fare ticketing of routes accepted by British Rail, all routes accepted by British Rail prior to privatisation, including Newcastle to Euston, are regarded as reasonable routes. [21616]

Mr. Watts: I have been asked to reply.

A routeing guide has been prepared by the Association of Train Operating Companies, which sets out clearly the permitted routes by which passengers may travel on their journeys. This guide requires the approval of the franchising director and the Rail Regulator and they will be concerned to ensure that if protects all reasonable routes that were allowed by BR before privatisation.

The guide has been given interim approval for an experimental period until 31 May. At this stage it does not include Newcastle to London via Birmingham.

Comments are being sought via rail users consultative committees on the accuracy and completeness of the guide. These will be taken into account before final approval is granted.

I have made no assessment of the impact on business men of using single one-day tickets.

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that nationwide rail rover tickets continue to be (a) available and (b) widely publicised; and what assessment he has made of the importance of such tickets to the United Kingdom tourism industry [21615]

Mr. Watts: I have been asked to reply.

The all-line rail-rover continues to be available. Promotion of the product is the responsibility of the Association of Train Operating Companies and its members. I have made no assessment of the importance of the product to the United Kingdom tourist industry.

TRANSPORT

Milford Haven

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library all the reports obtained by his Department concerning accidents or reported near misses within the Milford Haven Port Authority area involving vessels in the 10 years prior to 15 February 1996. [16263]

Mr. Bowis: My noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of his letter in the Library.

London Underground (Crime Rate)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many crimes were committed on London Underground in each of the last six years. [21534]

Mr. Bowis: Total notifiable offences in 1995–96 in the London Underground area were 14,971. The comparable 1994–95 figure was 15,149. In the time available, it has not been possible to obtain comparable figures for earlier years.

Clapham Junction

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Health and Safety Executive will investigate the overcrowding which occurred at Clapham Junction station early in the evening of 13 March; and what British Transport Police and Railway Company staff resources were available to alleviate or control the crowds. [21771]

Mr. Watts: I understand that HSE will be making inquiries with the station operator, South West Trains Ltd., to ensure that it is complying with its Railway safety case by having adequate procedures in place to control passenger congestion.

The British Transport Police sent four constables to assist with crowd control at Clapham Junction station. It is for railway companies to decide the staffing necessary to meet their safety duties.

Cash Limits

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits for 1996–97. [21779]

Sir George Young: The cash limit for class V vote 2—administration and transport services—will be reduced by £11,000,000 from £154,645,000 to £143,645,000 and the cash limit for class V vote 4—Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency—will be reduced by £2,000,000 from £180,451,000 to £178,451,000.

The reductions in these cash limits arise from the need to offset payments accounted for on class V votes 1, 3 and 5 for trans-European network infrastructure projects in the UK.

Sea Empress

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to publish the marine accidents investigation branch report on the Sea Empress before 1 May. [21583]

Sir George Young: The marine accidents investigation branch's report into the Sea Empress has not yet been submitted to me. If it is submitted to me during the period of the general election campaign, it will not be published, in line with the convention that Departments should avoid announcements which might be likely to compete with political parties or parliamentary candidates for media attention.

Interim recommendations were made by the chief inspector in relation to matters on which he considered early action should be taken, and the necessary action has already been taken.

A500

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the projected starting date and date of completion for the A500 Shavington bypass; and what funds have been set aside for its construction. [21506]

Mr. Watts: Timing of construction will depend upon the availability of resources. The next stage is to serve notices to treat upon landowners and I have instructed the Highways Agency to commence this action. The works are expected to cost some £21 million and to take two years.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the reasons for the delay in the construction of the A500 Shavington bypass. [21507]

Mr. Watts: The A500 Basford–Hough–Shavington bypass is one of many schemes in the national road programme competing for funds. We are taking schemes forward to construction on the basis of economic benefit, environmental impact, route importance and importance for regeneration. The timing of construction of the A500 scheme will be determined by these factors.

Full-fare Train Tickets (London–Newcastle)

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of (a) the change in the availability of through full-fare rail tickets from Newcastle to London for business men seeking to break their journey at places between Birmingham and London and return directly to Newcastle upon Tyne, and (b) the impact on business men of the need to use single tickets which are valid for only one day; [21612]

(2) what assessment he has made of the degree of compliance with the Government's assurance that routes accepted by British Rail before privatisation for full-fare ticketing purposes would continue to be accepted, (a) nationally and (b) for journeys from Newcastle upon Tyne to Euston. [21613]

Mr. Watts: A routing guide has been prepared by the Association of Train Operating Companies which sets out clearly the permitted routes by which passengers may travel on their journeys. This guide requires the approval of the franchising director and the Rail Regulator and they will be concerned to ensure that it protects all reasonable routes that were allowed by BR before privatisation.

The guide has been given interim approval for an experimental period until 31 May. At this stage it does not include Newcastle to London via Birmingham.

Comments are being sought via rail users consultative committees on the accuracy and completeness of the guide. These will be taken into account before final approval is granted.

I have made no assessment of the impact on business men of using single one-day tickets.

London Buses

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of compulsory competitive tendering on the operation of London Buses. [21403]

Mr. Bowis: London Transport began tendering bus services in 1985. The whole network is now subject to competitive tender and from 1997 around 22 per cent. of route mileage is being put out to tender on an annual basis.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many passengers travelled on London Buses in each of the last five years. [21402]

Mr. Bowis: The information is as follows:

Year	Passenger journeys (millions)
1991–92	1,149
1992–93	1,127
1993–94	1,112
1994–95	1,159
1995–96	1,198

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of the Rail Regulator have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21435]

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 19 July 1996, Official Report, at column 683.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [21437]

(2) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21439]

Mr. Bowis: Listed below are the answers for each of the Department of Transport's executive NDPBs.

The Traffic Director for London, the London Regional Passengers Committee and Trinity House Lighthouse Authority and the Northern Lighthouse Board have a statutory basis.

(a) The London Regional Passengers Committee under a statutory requirement; but the public can be excluded.

(b) None.

Advisory Groups (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the non-elected bodies responsible to his Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21384]

Mr. Bowis: Very many bodies, elected and unelected, provide advice on transport in London or offer some form of transport service. Of these, three bodies have roles which are specific to London and are responsible to me. These are London Transport, the London Regional Passengers Committee and the Traffic Director for London. The information for these bodies is:

Traffic Director for London

£ million

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–00
(i) overall budget	17.5	22	22	22
(ii) estimated running costs	1.8	1.8	1.8	1.8

Budget and running costs for London Transport are a matter for LT.

My Department provides the LRPC with grant in aid which covers its running costs. The estimated outturn for 1996–97 is £534,000 and the planned level of grant for 1997–98 is £524,000. Figures for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 are not available.

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on light dues. [19540]

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply 16 March, c. 716.]: I am pleased to announce that light dues for 1997–98 will be reduced by about 4.6 per cent. from 43p to 41p per net tonne with consequential reductions to other charges. This reduction, coming after four years of stability, takes rates back to below those established in 1992. It is a clear demonstration of the increasing efficiency of the three general lighthouse authorities.

I am announcing changes to the light dues regulations which are designed to simplify some aspects of collection and will remove the liability to pay light dues in certain cases. Vessels liable to pay light dues by reference to their tonnage that do not hold an International Tonnage Certificate (1969) will pay on the basis of their gross registered tonnage.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Record Office

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on public access to Public Record Office document AIR 2/16918. [21359]

Mr. Streeter: The question concerns a matter which has been assigned to the Public Record Office under the terms of its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones, dated 21 March 1997:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply for the Public Record Office to your question about this document.

The document was open to public inspection in July 1990. Under the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967, once a document has been opened to public inspection it cannot be closed again. Documents may be withdrawn temporarily by their department of origin, but this did not happen with AIR 2/16918 and even if it had happened arrangements could have been made for it to be consulted at the Ministry of Defence.

We know from our records of document usage that AIR 2/16918 was consulted by members of the public on several occasions between 1990 and 1996. In April 1996, it was in our Reprographic section for some photographs to be taken, but it appears that it was subsequently misplaced and, despite several searches, we have so far been unable to locate it.

I am very sorry that it is currently unavailable for consultation and we shall continue to search for it. I shall let you know when we find it. By way of explanation, but not in mitigation, I should add that we hold several million documents on 160 kilometres of shelving, processing over a million document movements each year, and that occasionally and regrettably human error does lead to misplacements.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21444]

Mr. Streeter: The Lord Chancellor's Department sponsors two such bodies: the Legal Aid Board and the Authorised Conveyancing Practitioners Board. Both have a statutory basis. However, the latter has been inactive since March 1992 when the Lord Chancellor announced his decision to postpone implementation of the authorised practitioners scheme.

The Legal Aid Board does not, nor is it required to, admit members of the public to board or committee meetings or hold open meetings for the public.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21742]

Mr. Streeter: Of the Lord Chancellor's Department's advisory bodies appearing in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1996", the Insolvency Rules Committee and Land Registration Rule Committee have to be consulted about relevant rules and the Council on Tribunals must be consulted before procedural rules are made for any tribunal specified in schedule 1 to the Tribunals and Inquiries Act 1992 and on procedural rules made by the Lord Chancellor or the Lord Advocate concerning statutory inquiries.

The Government are not required to publish their response to advice from these bodies.

Although there is no legal requirement to consult the Advisory Council on Public Records, it generally is consulted on legislation affecting public records.

The County Court Rule Committee, Supreme Court Rule Committee, Family Proceedings Rule Committee and Crown Court Rule Committee actually make rules and the Lord Chancellor is a member of all but the first.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if she will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21720]

Mr. Streeter: The following advisory non-departmental public bodies appear under my Department's name in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1996":

Insolvency Rules Committee

County Court Rule Committee

Supreme Court Rule Committee

Land Registration Rule Committee

Family Proceedings Rule Committee

Crown Court Rule Committee

Advisory Council on Public Records

Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct

Council on Tribunals

Law Commission

Legal Aid Advisory Committee (NI)

Advisory Committees on General Commissioners of Income Tax (NI)

Advisory Committees on JPs in Northern Ireland

Advisory Committees on Juvenile Court Lay Panel (NI)

Advisory Committees on General Commissioners of Income Tax

Advisory Committees on JPs in England (excluding the Duchy of Lancaster) and Wales

Judicial Studies Board

Honorary Investment Advisory Committee.

All but the last seven have a statutory base.

(a) None is under a statutory requirement to publish its advice to Government; (b) The Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct, the Law Commission and the Council on Tribunals are all required by statute to make annual reports to the Lord Chancellor. While there is no statutory requirement on the Advisory Council on Public Records to submit an annual report, there is a requirement that any report by it to the Lord Chancellor should be included in the Public Record Office's own annual report, for which there is a statutory requirement. The Judicial Studies Board also publishes an annual report, but this is not under a statutory requirement; (c) apart from that of the Judicial Studies Board, all of the annual reports in (b) are laid before Parliament by the Lord Chancellor, under a statutory requirement.

The Legal Aid Advisory Committee (NI) is required to consider the Law Society's annual report on legal aid in Northern Ireland and the Lord Chancellor is required to lay before Parliament a copy of any comments or recommendations made by the committee.

The other bodies do not publish advice or produce annual reports.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21705]

Mr. Streeter: For the advisory non-departmental public bodies listed under my Department in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1996", the answers are as follows:

(a) none.

(b) The following advisory bodies have carried out public consultation exercises:

the Supreme Court Rule Committee

the County Court Rule Committee

the Family Proceedings Rule Committee

the Law Commission

the Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct the Judicial Studies Board.

(c) the Supreme Court Rule Committee, the County Court Rule Committee and the Family Proceedings Rule Committee regularly consult with individuals and organisations which have a professional or commercial interest in the amendment of rules of court.

The Law Commission do conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests but this is encompassed within (b) above.

(d) none.

(e) none.

(f) none.

There is no statutory requirement for these bodies in these areas.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Firearms Exports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many licences have been granted for the export of firearms in categories ML1 and PL5018 since 6 December 1996; how many licence applications are currently under consideration; and what is his policy in respect of issuing such export licences for weapons prohibited by the Firearms (Amendment) Bill; [19089]

(2) how many licences have been granted for the export of firearms in categories (a) ML1 and (b) PL5018 since 6 December 1996; how many such licence applications are currently under consideration; and what is his policy in respect of issuing export licences for weapons prohibited by the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997. [21414]

Mr. Nelson: A total of 659 export licences covering goods in categories ML1 and PL5018 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order were issued in the period 7 December 1996 to 7 March 1997. A further 425 export licence applications covering goods rated under those headings were under consideration at close of business on 7 March 1997. In the same period there were also two new open individual export licences issued covering such goods and 25 dealer-to-dealer licences, valid for a period for three years, were issued to registered firearms dealers enabling them to trade with counterparts in EU countries.

Firearms and most military equipment require an export licence before export and all applications for such licences are considered case by case. Careful consideration is given to the political and military implications of allowing individual consignments overseas.

The Government pay particular attention to proposed exports of military goods to countries with poor human rights records, where such goods might be used for internal repression, and to countries or regions where the export of arms might contribute to destabilisation of the area. In all, eight strict criteria for allowing arms sales were agreed by Ministers at Luxembourg and Lisbon European Councils in June 1991 and June 1992.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of licences, organised by class and subclass, (a) granted and (b) denied for the export of strategic goods to Indonesia, since 1 July 1996. [21409]

Mr. Nelson: Our records show that the numbers of individual licences for Indonesia which were issued between 1 July 1996 and 18 March 1997 are as follows:

Table 1: Individual licences issued under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 ordered by category

Regina v. Rees and Rotheroe

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the implication of the case of Regina v. Rees and Rotheroe for the work of his Department. [21553]

Mr. Nelson: As I said to the hon. Member in the House on 19 March, Official Report, columns 870–71, arrangements have been put in place which seek to avoid the accidental oversight that occurred in the case in question.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library those documents his Department made available to lawyers acting in the case of Regina v. Rees and Rotheroe. [21554]

Mr. Nelson: No. Documents disclosed to the defence were provided solely for the purposes of the trial.

Advisory Bodies (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the non-elected bodies responsible to his Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21383]

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department has responsibility for a broad range of bodies which provide advice or services both in London and outside. A list of these can be found in "Public Bodies 1996" which is available in the Library of the House. In addition, specific details about the agencies and a number of non-departmental public bodies for which my Department is responsible are published in "Trade and Industry: The Government's Expenditure plans 1997–98 to 1999–00" (Cm 3605), published on 20 March 1997, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Further details about particular bodies may be found in their annual reports. Many of these reports are also either available in the Library of the House or can be obtained direct from the body concerned.

Export Licences

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licences classified under the headings ML1 and PL5018 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 have been issued since 6 December 1996. [20670]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 March 1997]: A total of 659 export licences covering goods in categories ML1 and PL5018 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order were issued in the period 7 December 1996 to 7 March 1997.

Firearms Dealers

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many dealer-to-dealer licences have been issued to registered firearms dealers in the period since 6 December 1996. [20671]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 March 1997]: A total of 25 dealer-to-dealer licences, valid for a period of three years, were issued in the period 7 December 1996 to 7 March 1997 to registered firearms dealers enabling them to trade with counterparts in EU countries.

Japanese Investment

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the United Kingdom share of Japanese investment in Europe; how many jobs have been safeguarded since 1979 as a result of inward investment; and if he will make a statement. [21365]

Mr. Greg Knight: The United Kingdom is the No. 1 location in the EU for inward investment with the latest OECD figures available showing that in 1994 the UK had over 40 per cent. of all Japanese investment in the EU. Since 1979 my Department's Invest in Britain Bureau has recorded over 462,000 safeguarded jobs associated with inward investment. This is an enviable record which we are determined to maintain in the face of increased competition in Europe to international investment.

Stored Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of plutonium are stored under safeguards at United Kingdom nuclear facilities; in what form; if he will list the owners of the plutonium; and what quantities of United Kingdom-owned plutonium are currently on loan to other countries under safeguards. [21306]

Mr. Nelson: All civil plutonium in the United Kingdom is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the tripartite UK/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement (INFCIRC/263). Details of the quantities of such plutonium stored at United Kingdom nuclear facilities, including its form and ownership, are published by my Department each year. A copy of the United Kingdom's annual plutonium figures publication for the year ended 31 March 1996 was placed in the Library of the House of Commons in July 1996. This publication also includes information by country on exports, and imports, of civil plutonium. Information on specific transactions, including loans of material, is commercially confidential. The United Kingdom has a policy of requiring full scope safeguards as a condition of supply which means that exports of plutonium are not allowed to any country, other than the nuclear weapons states, where there are any unsafeguarded nuclear installations.

Privatisation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the increase or decrease in real terms since privatisation in the price of (a) gas, (b) electricity and (c) telephone calls. [21492]

Mr. Page: Between privatisation in quarter four 1986 and quarter four 1996 average UK industrial gas prices have fallen by 59 per cent. in real terms and real domestic prices, including VAT, by 20½ per cent, whilst between privatisation in quarter two 1990 and quarter four 1996 average UK industrial electricity prices have fallen by 17 per cent. in real terms and real domestic prices, including VAT, by 5 per cent. Since privatisation in November 1984 real overall telecom prices have fallen by around 45 per cent.

Trade Fairs

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what support will be given to non-core events under trade fair support schemes rules which take place from 1 April until March 1999; and if he will make a statement. [21590]

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) on 17 January 1997, Official Report, columns 392–93, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough on 11 February 1997, Official Report, column 124, when I announced that my Department would offer grants for 300 trade fairs and that my intention is to make all support for the trade fairs after this round available through the sector challenge. All these events are due to take place after 1 April 1997 and before 31 March 1999. During that period there will additionally be those events support for which had already been announced prior to those answers. Details of the supported events can be found in the "Overseas Promotions Guide and Supplementary List" deposited in the Library of the House.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ensure that a proportion of the sector challenge budget be allocated for trade fairs; and if he will make a statement. [21589]

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) on 17 January 1997, Official Report columns 392–93, when I said that I would be reviewing the way we support trade fairs after the first sector challenge. The results of the first challenge will have to be decided upon by the Government after the forthcoming general election.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of Telecommunications (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government,

(c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21715]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The following is the information:

English Advisory Committee on Telecommunications

Northern Ireland Advisory Committee on Telecommunications

Scottish Advisory Committee on Telecommunications

Welsh Advisory Committee on Telecommunications

Business Advisory Committee on Telecommunications

Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for Disabled and Elderly People.

All six ACTs have a statutory basis—section 54 (1) or 54 (4) of the Telecommunications Act 1984—and are remitted by that Act to advise the Director General of Telecommunications (OFTEL).

ACT advice given to Oftel in response to public consultations undertaken by Oftel is made available for public reference in Oftel's library, along with other responses received. Advice given to Oftel in other circumstances may by published, in whole or part, by Oftel or by the ACT itself at the discretion of the chairman by way of press release, newsletter or annual report.

A summary annual report by each ACT is submitted to the director general and published by him as part of Oftel's annual report, which is laid before Parliament. This is a statutory requirement. Each ACT also publishes and disseminates widely a more detailed annual report of its own activities and views. This is voluntary. Copies are not laid before Parliament, but are available to Members of both Houses—and to the public—on request and free of charge.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those of the Office of Telecommunication's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21752]

Mr. Taylor: None.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of Telecommunications (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interest, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21703]

Mr. Taylor: The following is the information:

English Advisory Committee on Telecommunications

Northern Ireland Advisory Committee on Telecommunications

Scottish Advisory Committee on Telecommunications

Welsh Advisory Committee on Telecommunications

Business Advisory Committee on Telecommunications

Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for Disabled and Elderly People.

None of the ACTs hold their regular meetings in public. Some of the information received by them is commercially sensitive to telecommunications companies and the ACTs would not wish to compromise their access to and use of it. However, at the Chairmen's discretion they can invite external observers to meetings. ACTs may conduct both open/public and closed/targeted consultation exercises, assist Oftel with its own exercises and commission consumer research.

The ACTs published annual reports list the main external activities of their members, however, these do not constitute a full register of interests. For instance, details of private shareholdings in BT, although required by members' term of appointment to be disclosed to the director general, are not published.

ACTs do not publish the formal agendas for, nor minutes of, their meetings. However, their annual reports are intended to give a substantial insight into their work.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21700]

Mr. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the then President of the Board of Trade on 19 December 1994, Official Report, Column 912.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21751]

Mr. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 27 March 1996, Official Report, columns 606–07.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21725]

Mr. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 13 March 1996, Official Report, column 672.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21440]

Mr. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 22 February 1996, Official Report, column 250. The information given then is still current with the amendment that the Coal Authority now holds an annual open meeting, on a voluntary basis.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those of Export Credits Guarantee Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21738]

Mr. Nelson: The Export Credits Guarantee Departments takes advice from one non-departmental public body, the Export Guarantees Advisory Council. The answers to the specific questions are none in each case.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Export Credits Guarantee Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21704]

Mr. Nelson: The Export Credits Guarantee Department takes advice from one non-departmental public body, the Export Guarantees Advisory Council. For answers to the specific questions I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 18 July 1996, Official Report, column 611.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Exports Credits Guarantee Deparmtent (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report, and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament, and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21716]

Mr. Nelson: The Export Credits Guarantee Department takes advice form one non-departmental public body, the Export Guarantees Advisory Council. The answers to the specific questions are none in each case except for (a), the Export Guarantees Advisory Council is appointed under the terms of the Export and Investment Guarantees Act 1991.

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list those of the Office of Electricity Regulation's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from; [21737]

(2) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of Electricity Regulation (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [21702]

(3) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of Electricity Regulation (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21714]

Mr. Page: I will write to the hon. Member.

Pembroke Power Station

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he plans to announce his decision on the section 36 application to burn orimulsion at Pembroke power station before 1 May. [21582]

Mr. Lang: I am considering, against the background of the published guidance on procedure and conduct during the general election period, all the material submitted by the applicant and interested parties. I cannot yet say when a decision will be taken.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update his answer of 20 June 1996, Official Report, column 594, regarding incoming telephone calls to the Child Support Agency. [21474]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant CB. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 21 March 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security regarding incoming telephone calls to the Child Support Agency.

The latest information available shows that during the period 1 February 1997 to 28 February 1997 the total calls offered by British Telecom to the Agency was 1,622,542.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many incoming telephone calls were made to (a) the Child Support Agency centres and (b) the national inquiry line in each month since January 1996. [21466]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant CB. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 21 March 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of incoming telephone calls made to the Child Support Centres and the National Enquiry Line (NEL) since January 1996.

The attached table contains the number of incoming calls on a monthly basis from January 1996. From April 1996, the period of time over which information is collected changed; information is now collected and recorded over four-weekly periods instead of calendar months.

The attached figures refer to incoming calls offered by BT which represents the total number of incoming calls made.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each month since April 1995 the number of deduction of earnings orders (a) imposed by the Child Support Agency, (b) in force at the end of each month and (c) lifted each month. [21467]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant CB. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 21 March 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency deduction from earnings orders.

Not all of the requested information is readily available. I have attached a table showing a monthly breakdown since April 1995 of the number of new deduction from earnings orders issued.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many child support assessments (a) were being processed, and (b) were outstanding for more than 26 weeks at the end of each month since April 1996. [21468]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant CB. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 21 March 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency assessments.

I am unable to provide you with precisely the information that you have requested. The Agency measures its performance on the clearance of assessments against its Secretary of State target for 60% of new maintenance applications to be cleared within 26 weeks, and as at 31 March 1997 no more than 10% of all maintenance applications received to be over 52 weeks old.

The attached table gives details of the Agency's performance against this target, together with the number of cases being actioned at the end of each month from April 1996.

I hope this is helpful.

	Number of cases being actioned	Percentage of maintenance assessments cleared within 26 weeks	Percentage of maintenance assessments over 52 weeks old
April 1996	422,454	53	15
May 1996	428,244	52	15

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many outstanding cases are being processed by the Child Support Agency; and how many were being processed on the same date in each of the last three years. [20169]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant C.B. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. John McAllion, dated 21 March 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about cases being actioned by the Child Support Agency.

To give a complete picture, set out in the table below are the numbers of cases which form the caseload of the Agency, the number of cases cleared from launch and the number being actioned at the end of the last three financial years, together with figures at the end of February 1997.

	Approximate caseload[1]	Number of cases cleared from launch (cumulative)	Number of cases being actioned

February 1997	545,900	1,553,308	418,369

[1] Figures quoted are from the nearest published Quarterly Statistical Survey.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each month since April 1994 the number of (a) referrals from the Child Support Agency to the Independent Tribunal Service, (b) referrals outstanding for more than 26 weeks, (c) referrals where the Independent Tribunal Service found in favour of (1) the client and (2) the Child Support Agency and (d) recommendations made by the Independent Tribunal Service which were (i) accepted and (ii) not accepted by the Child Support Agency. [21469]

Mr. Mitchell: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Income Support (Pensioners)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in the constituencies of Roxburgh and Berwickshire and of Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale have been claiming (a) pensioner, (b) enhanced pensioner and (c) higher pensioner income support premiums at (i) higher and (ii) lower levels for each of the past five years for which figures are available. [21535]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 21 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many pensioners in the constituencies of Roxburgh and Berwickshire and Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale have been claiming (a) pensioners, (b) enhanced pensioner and (c) higher pensioner income support premiums at (i) higher and (ii) lower levels for each of the past five years for which figures are available.

The information requested is not available in the format requested. The Benefits Agency (BA) collates statistics by BA Districts and not by Parliamentary constituencies. Information for East Lowlands District which includes offices at Edinburgh South, Edinburgh East and Galashiels is shown in the attached table.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Social Fund Payments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many successful applications were made in the constituencies of Roxburgh and Berwickshire and of Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale for assistance from the social fund for (i) budgeting loans, (ii) crisis loans, (iii) community care grants, (iv) maternity expenses, (v) funeral expenses and (iv) cold weather payments for each of the past five years for which figures are available. [21546]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 21 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question requesting information on successful applications made in the constituencies of Roxburgh, Berwickshire, Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale for assistance from the Social Fund for Budgeting Loans, Crisis Loans, Community Care Grants, Maternity Expenses, Funeral Expenses and Cold Weather Payments, for each of the last five years.

The information requested is not available in the format requested. The Benefits Agency (BA) collates statistics by BA Districts and not by Parliamentary constituencies. Information for East Lowlands Districts which includes offices at Edinburgh South, Edinburgh East and Galashiels is shown in the attached table.

Information relating to Cold Weather Payments can be found in the statistical section of the House of Commons Library. The data is held in the Social Fund Statistical Load file under Cold Weather Payments by District Office. For 1992/93 it is available for each Benefit Office. From 1993/94 to date it is available for each District Office and Area Directorate.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Personal Pensions

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have opted out of occupational pensions into personal pensions in each year since 1988. [19948]

Mr. Heald: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Occupational Pensions

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have taken out occupational pensions since 1988. [19947]

Mr. Heald: It is estimated that, during 1993–94 8.9 million people were active members of contracted-out occupational pension schemes. The most recent date for which information about other categories is available is 1991. There were then over 1 million people in not contracted-out occupational pension schemes. A further 3 million people had preserved rights from previous memberships of an occupational pension scheme and 6.5 million people were in receipt of an occupational pension.

Outturn Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the outturn expenditure by his Department in the current financial year; how much of this represents (a) payments to beneficiaries and (b) administrative costs; what estimate he has made of the amount in each of those categories incurred in Wales; and how many staff his Department employs in (i) Wales, (ii) Scotland, (iii) Northern Ireland and (iv) England. [20746]

Mr. Burt: The total estimated outturn for Department of Social Security expenditure in 1996–97 is £90,834 million. The estimated 1996–97 outturn for administrative costs, inclusive of all grants and subsidies, is £3,535 million. The estimated 1996–97 expenditure on payments to beneficiaries, including housing benefit and council tax benefit is £87,299 million. Figures for individual benefits are in the table.

The Department does not routinely collect information by country. However, it is estimated that about 6 per cent. of all social security expenditure is in respect of Wales. The numbers of staff employed by the Department in the constituent parts of the UK on 1 January 1997 are as follows:-

England: 80,658[1]

Scotland: 9,483[1]

Wales: 4,380[1]

Northern Ireland 13[1,2]

Total: 94,514.

Notes:

[1] Figures expressed on a whole time equivalent basis.

[2] As well as 13 staff directly employed by the DSS, the Department repays Department of Health and Social Services for the operational services it provides.

[3] The expenditure figures provided are for the direct administrative costs of the Department and direct payments to beneficiaries. They therefore exclude the cost associated with Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

Benefits Agency Psychiatrists

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many psychiatrists are engaged by the Benefits Agency on Merseyside; and if he will make a statement. [20755]

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Benefits Agency Medical Services is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Bob Parry, dated 21 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about how many psychiatrists are engaged by the Benefits Agency (BA) on Merseyside; and if he will make a statement.

BA has no doctors on Merseyside who are known to have psychiatric qualifications.

Examining doctors receive specific training in undertaking medical examinations connected with claims for Social Security benefits. Doctors who conduct examinations in connection with Incapacity Benefit are required to undergo a four day modular training course which can be tailored to meet individual needs. Elements of the course include the technical aspects of Incapacity Benefit, the requirements for the content of the medical report form, selecting and justifying the choice of descriptors which specify the level of a customer's disability in each functional area, and mental health problems. The course also has, and I attach great importance to this, elements on customer service and equal opportunities.

In addition to this, all full-time BAMS Doctors have to undergo a two day residential course covering the clinical areas they are likely to encounter such as back pain and psychiatric disorders and those which are likely to cause particular difficulties, such as chronic fatigue states. Many of the sessions in these courses are conducted by internationally recognised experts in their fields. The Benefits Agency Doctors are then responsible for cascading this information to the part-time fee paid Doctors who are also involved in this work.

I should make it clear that BA does not specifically engage doctors because of their psychiatric expertise.

If the opinion of a hospital specialist is deemed necessary in connection with a claim for benefit, a separate report is requested by BA.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Benefits Agency, Liverpool

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the operations of the Benefits Agency in Liverpool. [20756]

Mr. Burt: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Bob Parry, dated 21 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will make a statement on the operations of the Benefits Agency (BA) in Liverpool.

The North West Coast Area Directorate includes 2 BA Districts for Liverpool, Liverpool Mersey and Liverpool North Districts. BA operations in Liverpool are currently delivered from 7 BA sites and 12 Job Centres for Job Seekers Allowance (JSA). JSA is jointly delivered with the Employment Service. These Districts deliver the majority of Social Security benefits locally, for example Income Support, Social Fund, Incapacity Benefit and in addition provide information and advice on the full range of benefits administered by the Agency.

There are approximately 900 staff employed in the 2 Liverpool Districts. During the current year both Districts have achieved all Secretary of State targets for the delivery of benefits.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will require the independent tribunal service not to appoint as members of disability appeal tribunals doctors who are used by the Benefits Agency medical services to examine claimants in connection with claims to disability living allowance or attendance allowance. [20995]

Mr. Roger Evans: The appointment of members of disability appeal tribunals is the statutory responsibility of the President of the Independent Tribunal Service, His Honour Judge Bassingthwaighte.

Housing Benefit

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for social Security what consultations his Departments held with the Department of the Environment over the effects of the proposed housing benefit regulations which restrict the single room rent to single people aged 25 to 59 years; what assessment he has made of these effects; and what plans he has to transfer funds to the Department of the Environment as a consequence. [21131]

Mr. Roger Evans: There was full consultation as normal between all Departments with an interest in this matter both prior to and after the proposal was announced. The current expenditure plans make no provision for a transfer to the Department of the Environment as a result.

National Insurance

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the level of the national insurance lower earnings limit and contribution ceiling expressed in (i) 1997 prices and (ii) as a percentage of average earnings in (a) 1997–98, (b) 2025 and (c) 2035. [21026]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table.

		Expressed as a percentage of estimated average earnings
	1997–98 £	1997–98[1]	2025[2]	2035[2]
Lower earnings limit	62	16.7	9.6	7.9
Upper earnings limit	465	125.5	72.1	59.1

Government Actuary's Department.

Unclaimed Benefits

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual amount of benefit currently forgone by eligible claimants who are entitled to social security benefits but who do not claim in the constituencies of Roxburgh and Berwickshire and of Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale. [21536]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available. Latest national estimates of unclaimed income-related benefits are available from the publication "Income-Related Benefits Estimates of Take-Up in 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

Parent-plus Contracts

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will announce the awards of parent-plus contracts for the private sector areas; and if he will make a statement. [21626]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: No final decision has been made on the award of contracts.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21699]

Mr. Burt: The information is as follows:

(a) None.

(b) Under a Statutory Requirement;

The National Disability Council has a statutory duty to publish its proposals for a Code of Practice which may include consultation with the public.

Voluntarily;

The Social Security Advisory Committee.

The Industrial Injuries Advisory Council.

The Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board frequently consults with medical experts and outside organisations representing disabled people.

(c) Under a Statutory Requirement;

The National Disability Council has a statutory duty to publish its proposals for a Code of Practice which may include consultation with outside commercial interests.

Voluntarily;

The Social Security Advisory Committee.

(d) None.

(e) None.

(f) None.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21724]

Mr. Burt: The information is as follows:

(a) The advisory non-departmental bodies sponsored by this Department are listed in "Public Bodies 1996" and all have a statutory basis.

(b) Under a Statutory Requirement;

None.

Voluntarily;

The advice given to the Secretary of State by the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board is published in its annual report.

The National Disability Council.

(c) Under a Statutory Requirement

The National Disability Council.

Voluntarily

The Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board.

(d) Under a Statutory Requirement

The National Disability Council.

Voluntarily

None.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21753]

Mr. Burt: Except in circumstances prescribed in section 173 of, and schedule 7 to, the Social Security Administration Act 1992, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is required to refer draft regulations to either the Social Security Advisory Committee or the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council for consideration and advice. If the committee reports on proposed regulations he is required to lay before Parliament its report with his responses to any recommendations when he lays the relevant statutory instrument.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21441]

Mr. Burt: All the Department's non-departmental public bodies have a statutory base. They are the Occupational Pensions Board, which will cease to exist from 6 April 1997; the Pensions Compensation Board, which was established in August 1996 and commences full operation on 6 April 1997; and the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority, which was established in April 1996 and commences full operation on 6 April 1997.

None admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings, nor do they hold open meetings for the public—although they can do either if they wish.

Benefits Agency, Manchester

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when work commenced in the Cheetham Hill and Chorlton Benefits Agency offices in order to facilitate the transfer of activities from the Great Ancoats street office; [21490]

(2) when consultation about the closure of the Benefits Agency office in Great Ancoats street, Manchester, was promised to the hon. Member for Stretford; when that consultation took place; and who was consulted; [21488]

(3) what consultation took place between the Benefits Agency and the Contributions Agency about the closure of the Great Ancoats street Benefits Agency office; [21486]

(4) when the decision to close Great Ancoats street Benefits Agency office was published by Ministers; [21489]

(5) what plans there are for access by claimants from the Ancoats area of Manchester to Benefits Agency offices following closure of the Great Ancoats street office. [21487]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 21 March 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your five recent Parliamentary Questions relating to the closure of the Benefits Agency (BA) office at Great Ancoats Street.

As part of the Estates strategy the Area Directorate has given priority, in 1996/97, to projects that would allow it to maximise the use of space in those buildings considered necessary to its operations in the medium and long term. Work commenced at the BA offices at Cheetham and Chorlton on 3 March 1997 to convert space, currently used only for the storage of files, into office accommodation.

The announcement of the consultation exercise about the proposed closure of the BA office at Great Ancoats Street began with consultation letters being issued to Members of Parliament, including yourself, customer representatives and liaison groups on 23 November 1996. Of the 110 letters issued, only 17 responses were received. Of these 6 expressed concerns on the proposed closure. The consultation period ended on 6 January 1997.

The Contribution Agency has been consulted through regular meetings on the proposals for Great Ancoats Street and has been kept closely informed of developments.

The decision to close the Agency's Great Ancoats Street office was made on 13 March 1997 and was announced by the Area Directorate to staff, and local and area trade unions on 14 March 1997. On the same day, letters were sent to all parties involved in the consultation exercise.

Six BA offices at Cheetham, Chorlton, Longsight, Openshaw, Rusholme and Salford will remain following the closure of the Great Ancoats Street office. Customers living in the Ancoats area will be able to attend offices in Cheetham and Chorlton should they wish to attend a BA office in person. In addition for unemployed customers there are 4 Job Centres at Alexander Park, Cheetham, Moss Side and Newton Heath, within 2–3 miles of the Great Ancoats Street site.

Customers can also choose to contact the BA offices by post or telephone. Recent enhancements to the office telephone systems will provide a more efficient telephone service.

I hope you find this reply useful.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the cost of moving Contributions Agency activities to (a) Great Ancoats street and (b) Stockport. [21485]

Mr. Heald: Movement of activity culminated on 17 March 1997 when Great Ancoats street activity was moved to Stockport.

The current anticipated costs are:

Great Ancoats Street: £1,338.01

Stockport: £72,280.51.

No staff costs have been incorporated in the above figures for the designing and creating the new structure.

Reduced Earnings Allowance

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals against the decision to withdraw reduced earnings allowance are outstanding; and what steps he is taking to reduce delays. [21404]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for the Independent Tribunal Service.

Pensioner Incomes

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average annual increase in real terms of (a) the state retirement pension and (b) average pensioner incomes (i) from 1974 to 1979 and (ii) since 1979. [21498]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the tables.

Table A: State retirement pension

	Level of RP at uprating (April 1996 prices) £	Average compound annual growth from previous point Per cent.
1974	54.90	—
1979	59.00	1.4
1996	61.15	0.2

Table B: Average pensioners' incomes

	Mean weekly net income, before housing costs, (July 1994 prices) £	Average compound annual growth from previous point Per cent.
1974	96.10	—
1979	100.80	1.0
1994–95	161.20	3.1

Notes:

1. Table (a) shows the real value of standard rate basic retirement pension, for 1974, 1979 and 1996 (the latest year for which information is available), at April 1996 prices, rounded to the nearest £0.05p.
2. Table (b) shows the mean average net income before housing costs for all pensioner units in July 1994 prices, rounded to the nearest £0.10 for 1974, 1979 and 1994–95, which is the latest period for which data is available. These estimates are subject to a large degree of statistical variability, and should therefore be used to indicate trends over time.
3. The average compound annual percentage growth rate in both tables is rounded to the nearest 0.1 per cent.
4. A pensioner unit is defined as a single person over state pension age (SPA) or a couple where the man, defined as the head, is over SPA.

Advisory Groups (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the non-elected bodies responsible to his Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21382]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

Three of the Department's executive agencies are responsible for the provision of a range of services across London and the rest of the country. These are the Benefits Agency, the Child Support Agency and the Contributions Agency.

Attached is a list of the BA districts, CSA field divisions, and CA regions which have offices within the London area together with their overall budgets for 1996–97.

Budgets for 1997–98 have not yet been finalised for the districts, field divisions, and regions. Budgets for future years can only be estimated when details of the appropriate public expenditure survey settlement have been finalised.

Benefits Agency (BA) districts with London offices: 1997–97

Makerfield	7,886,838
Belfast	11,870,011
Glasgow	14,071,859

The West Kent District includes Bromley office which is the only Branch in that District within the London area, but the budget figure quoted is for the whole District.
The work of Ealing and Euston Districts is remotely processed at Glasgow Benefit Centre; the work of Palace District at Makerfield Benefit Centre; and the work of Neasden and South Circular Districts at Belfast Benefit Centre. Budget details for the Benefits Centres are separately identified.

Child Support Agency (CSA) field divisions with London offices

	1996–97 £
London and the Downs	4,297,673
Essex and Kent	4,065,948
Central Southern	3,494,374

The CSA field divisions cover a wide geographic area including London. The budgets quoted are not solely for those offices within the London area.

Contribution Agency (CA) regions with London offices

	1996–97 £
London North-west	4,878,000
North-east Thames	4,471,000
South Thames	4,283,000

The CA regions also cover a wide area and the budgets quoted are not solely for those offices based in London.

Parliamentary Answers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many questions were tabled for reply by his Department in each Session since 1979–80; in how many instances in each year the reply has been that providing the information involved disproportionate cost; and in how many instances in each year questions have been given the reply that the information was not available centrally. [16788]

Mr Burt: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Fraud

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Government have to derogate from paragraph 4.3 of Council of Europe recommendation R(86)1 as a consequence of the enactment of the Social Security Administration (Fraud) Bill; and if he will make a statement. [21418]

Mr. Heald: We have no such plans.

National Insurance

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were (a) the amounts of national insurance contributions paid by (i) employers and (ii) employees and (b) any Exchequer supplement, and the proportion of the NI fund accounted for by each, in today's prices for each year since 1979; and what estimate he has made of future revenues. [21062]

Mr. Heald [holding answer 20 March 1997]: The information is in the tables.

Estimates of future income from contributions are set out in the "National Insurance Fund Long Term Financial Estimates" (HC160) published in January 1995.

[1] Gross of Statutory Sick Pay (SSP) and Statutory Maternity Pay (SMP) deductions.

[2] The National Insurance surcharge was part of general taxation and not paid into the National Insurance Fund.

[3] Figures take into account deductions made by employers in respect of statutory sick pay (SSP) from April 1993 and statutory maternity pay (SMP) from April 1987. The combined SSP and SMP deductions SMP deductions between 1987–88 and 1989–90 exceed other sources of income. From April 1990 figures include amounts paid from the Consolidated Fund as compensation for SSP and SMP deductions.

1. National insurance contribution figures include the NHS element.
2. Figures may not sum due to rounding.

HEALTH

Departmental Policies (Bournemouth)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the effect of his Department's policies on the residents of Bournemouth since 1992, with special reference to the effects of changes in the resources provided in real terms. [14951]

Mr. Horam: Bournemouth has benefited from the increases in the real resources available to the national health service which the Government has made available every year since 1979.

Since 1991, the number of general practitioners in Dorset has increased by 10 per cent. and 50 per cent. of the population of Dorset are currently served by a fundholding GP.

Dorset health authority's integrated allocation for the financial year 1997–98 will be £329.6 million, a real terms increase of £6.1 million over the last year's allocation.

Hospital Staff (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) consultants, (b) junior hospital doctors, (c) nurses, (d) staff in professions allied to medicine, (e) accident and emergency staff, (f) ancillary staff and (g) other staff were employed in NHS hospitals in north Yorkshire in 1992; and how many there are currently. [20881]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 18 March 1997]: Individual hospital units cannot be separately identified in the Department of Health's hospital and community health services work force censuses, but in some cases staff can be sub-divided between those working in hospitals and those working in the community on the basis of their area of work.

In the area covered by North Yorkshire district health authority there were 210 whole-time equivalent, wte, hospital consultants, 210 wte hospital junior doctors—excluding registrars and senior registrars—and 90 wte other hospital doctors employed by the national health service hospital and community health services (HCHS) at September 1995, of which 30 wte worked in the accident and emergency area of work; this information is not available centrally for earlier years. There were 4,010 wte nursing and midwifery staff employed by the NHS HCHS working in hospital areas of work at September 1992 in the same health authority area, of which 50 wte worked in the accident and emergency area of work; information for 1995, the latest year for which results are available, is not available centrally. It is not possible to separately identify other non-medical staff in the same way.

Nursing Staff (Wakefield)

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing staff were employed in the Wakefield district in (a) 1979 and (b) 1996. [20722]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not available in the form requested. There were 2,690 whole-time equivalent nursing and midwifery staff employed by the national health service hospital and community health services in the Wakefield health authority area in 1979. Figures for 1996 are not yet available.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella Vaccine

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors led the licensing authority (a) to grant a product licence for the Pluserix MMR vaccine on 9 February 1995 and (b) to withdraw it from public use in 1997; what differences exist between the 1988 product and the 1995 product; if he will place in the Library a copy of all versions of the data sheets for each product; and if he will make a statement. [21560]

Mr. Malone: Discussions between the Licensing Authority and marketing authorisation holder associated with the granting of a product licence are confidential. Pluserix measles, mumps and rubella vaccine still holds a licence. There are no significant differences between Pluserix vaccines licensed in 1988 and 1995 and copies of the data sheets are available in the "Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry Data Sheet Compendium" 1989–90, 1990–91 and 1991–1992 which can be obtained from the Library.

Suicides

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of the last five years the number of (a) suicides and (b) attempted suicides of young people in care in each case (i) in total and (ii) broken down by social services authority; and if he will indicate what recording mechanisms are in place for the social services inspectorate to monitor such data. [20074]

Mr. Burns: Under schedule 2(20) of the Children Act 1989, local authorities are required to notify my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health of all deaths of children who are being looked after by the local authority. There is no statutory requirement for the cause of death to be identified although local authorities generally do provide it. Information on numbers of attempted suicide is not held centrally.

The Department's records indicate that there have been a total of 12 suicides of children looked after during the last five years.

Notifications of suicides of children looked after by local authorities 1992–97

Year	Number of suicides	Local authority area
1992–93	1	London Borough of Wandsworth
	1	Liverpool
	1	Lancashire
1993–94	1	Tameside
	1	Cheshire
1994–95	1	Hertfordshire
	1	Salford
	1	Northumberland
1995–96	1	London Borough of Hammersmith and Fulham
	2	Hampshire
1996–97	1	Cheshire

Reports of deaths of children looked after are received by the regional offices of the social services inspectorate who identify when further investigation may be required. "Working Together Under the Children Act" requires area child protection committees to carry out a review of any incident leading to the death of a child where child abuse is confirmed or suspected or a child protection issue likely to be of major public concern arises.

North Hampshire Hospital

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) in-patient and (b) out-patient treatments were performed in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1996 at the North Hampshire hospital, formerly Basingstoke district hospital; and what was the percentage change between the two dates. [20688]

Mr. Horam: Information on numbers of patients treated is not collected centrally. In-patient activity is recorded in terms of finished consultant episodes. The latest year for which in-patient and out-patient information is available is 1995–96. These data are contained in "Ordinary and day case admissions for England" and "Outpatients and ward attenders for England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Prior to 1988–89 in-patient data were collected on a different basis. Information for 1979 is not available on an individual provider basis.

The table details finished consultant episodes and consultant outpatient attendances for North Hampshire Hospitals NHS Trust, formerly Basingstoke general services unit, for the years 1991–92 and 1995–96.

Finished consultant episodes[1] and consultant outpatient attendances[2], by North Hampshire Hospitals NHS Trust (formerly Basingstoke General Services Unit), 1991–92 and 1995–96

Notes:
[1] Finished consultant episodes is the total of ordinary and day case admissions including well babies.
[2] Consultant outpatient attendances is the total of first and subsequent attendances seen.
[3] Denotes not available.

Department of Health form KP70 for finished consultant episodes.
Department of Health form KH0[O] for consultant outpatient attendances.

North Hampshire Hospitals NHS Trust came into being at the beginning of the 1994–95 financial year. Prior to this date it was a directly managed unit called Basingstoke general services unit.

Finished consultant episode data prior to 1991–92 were aggregated to district health authority level, and this is the same for consultant outpatient attendances. However, from that year to 1992–93 NHS trust data could be given individually, but not directly managed unit data, this was again aggregated to district health authority level.

Corticosteroids

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which Government-funded advisory organisations investigating the effects of corticosteroids do not contain Government appointed representatives. [20835]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 18 March 1997]: There are no such organisations.

Edgware General Hospital

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the agreement between his Department and the hon. Members for Hendon, North (Sir J. Gorst) and Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) in respect of comprehensive new casualty facilities at Edgware general hospital; and if he will make a statement. [21578]

Mr. Malone: We agreed to suggest to Barnet health authority that they might consider inviting an independent person to assess the service being provided in the urgent treatment centre at Edgware—after any interim arrangements have ended—to confirm that the maximum range of treatments possible in such a service are being offered. The health authority has agreed to do this.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21695]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Hold public meetings:

(ii) under a statutory requirement: none

(ii) voluntarily:

Gene Therapy Advisory Service

(b) Conduct public consultation exercises:

(i) under statutory requirement: none

(ii) voluntarily:

British Pharmacopoeia Commission

Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food

Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing

(c) Conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests:

(i) under a statutory requirement: none

(ii) voluntarily:

Steering Committee on Pharmacy Postgraduate Education

Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy

Standing Committee on Postgraduate Medical and Dental Education

Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee

Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing

Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food

British Pharmacopoeia Commission

(d) Publish a register of members' interests:

(i) under a statutory requirement: none

(ii) voluntarily:

Advisory Committee on the Registration of Homoeopathic Products

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Medicines Commission

Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy

Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment

Committee on Toxicity of Chemical in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment

Committee on Mutagenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment

Committee on Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment

Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food

(e) Publish agendas for meetings:

(i) under a statutory requirement: none

(ii) voluntarily: none

(f) Publish the minutes of meetings:

(i) under a statutory requirement: none

(ii) voluntarily: none.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if this is in each case under a statutory requirement. [21434]

Mr. Horam: There is a statutory obligation on all national health service trusts to publish an annual report. All other national health service bodies are required to do so by the Department of Health codes of conduct and accountability for national health service boards. The codes of conduct and accountability also require all national health service bodies to maintain a register of members' interests. There is a statutory obligation for the annual accounts of all national health service bodies to be published. There is no obligation on national health service bodies to publish minutes of meetings, although some do. Health authorities are statutorily obliged to publish the agendas of their meetings, but this requirement does not relate to any other bodies.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21758]

Mr. Horam: All national health service bodies, as defined by the Cabinet Office, have a statutory basis. Health authorities are statutorily required to admit members of the public to their meetings. Special health authorities are now required to admit members of the public to their meetings if this is stipulated in their establishment order. National health service trusts are not statutorily required to hold board meetings in public, but some trusts choose to do so. All trusts are statutorily required to hold an annual public meeting. There is no requirement on the Dental Practice Board to hold any meetings to which the public is admitted.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to (a) consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) publish their response to advice from. [21740]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is as follows:

(a) consult prior to legislative proposals:

Committee on Safety Medicines and the Medicines Commission.

(b) publish its response to advice from:

National Specialist Commissioning Advisory Group.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [21729]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 21 March 1996 at column 323.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) have a statutory base, (b) publish their advice to Government, (c) publish an annual report and (d) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is under a statutory requirement. [21718]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is as follows:

(a) have a statutory base:

Advisory Board on the Registration of Homeopathic Products

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Medicines Commission

Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation

Standing Pharmaceutical Advisory Committee

Clinical Standards Advisory Group

Standing Medical Advisory Committee

Standing Nursing and Midwifery Advisory Committee

Administration of Radioactive Substances Advisory Committee

Unrelated Live Transplant Regulatory Authority

Standing Dental Advisory Committee

(b) publish their advice to Government:

(i) under a statutory requirement: none

(ii) voluntary:

Steering Committee on Pharmacy Postgraduate Education

Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy

Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment

Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment

Standing Committee on Postgraduate Medical and Dental Education

Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee

NHS Health Advisory Service

Gene Therapy Advisory Committee

Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing

Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food

(c) publish an annual report:

(i) under a statutory requirement:

Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards

Committee on Safety Medicines

Medicines Commission

(ii) voluntarily:

Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy

Committee for Monitoring the Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship

Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment

Committee on Mutagenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment

Committee on Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment

National Specialist Commissioning Advisory Group

Standing Committee on Postgraduate Medical and Dental Education

NHS Health Advisory Service

Gene Therapy Advisory Committee

Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing

Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food

(d) lay an annual report before Parliament:

(i) under a statutory requirement:

Advisory Board on the Registration of Homeopathic Products

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Medicines Commission and the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food

(ii) voluntarily:

Committee for Monitoring the Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship

Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [21446]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 22 February 1996 at columns 269–70. However, the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting does now voluntarily admit members of the public to all board meetings.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which is the responsible purchasing authority in a case where an asylum seeker who has been residing in the UK is admitted to a psychiatric hospital before a decision is made about his status. [21588]

Mr. Burns: The health authority of the patient's district of residence.

Faithfull Foundation Treatment Centre

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he is having with other Government departments concerning future accommodation for the Faithfull Foundation treatment centre at the Wolvercote clinic in Epsom; and if he will make a statement. [21636]

Mr. Horam: None. The Department of Health is represented on the Faithfull Foundation monitoring group chaired by the Home Office, at a recent meeting of which the future accommodation requirements of the Wolvercote clinic were considered.

NHS Estates Agency

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the key tasks and targets for 1997–98 for the NHS Estates Agency. [21817]

Mr. Horam: I have agreed the agency's key tasks and targets for 1997–98 and have placed copies in the Library.

NHS Pensions Agency

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the key targets for 1997–98 for the NHS Pensions Agency. [21809]

Mr. Horam: I have agreed the agency's key tasks and targets for 1997–98, and have placed copies in the Library.

Medical Devices Agency

Mr Robathan : To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the key targets for 1997–98 for the Medical Devices Agency. [21818]

Mr. Horam: I have agreed the agency's key targets for 1997–98, and have placed copies in the Library.

Nursery, Midwifery and Health Visiting

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has appointed a chairman and members to the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting. [21808]

Mr. Dorrell: Professor Ron de Witt has been appointed as chairman and Mrs. Patricia Oakley has been appointed as a non-executive member for the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting from 1 April 1997 for a four-year term. In addition, Miss Pam Charlwood and Professor Jeff Thompson have been re-appointed for a further four-year term.

Irritable Bowel Syndrome

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support his Department gives to (a) voluntary and (b) self-help groups relating to irritable bowel syndrome. [21557]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health awarded the British Digestive Association, which provides advice and information on a number of gastroenterological conditions, a grant of £18,000 for 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into irritable bowel syndrome. [21556]

Mr. Horam: None.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on current NHS funding for the treatment of irritable bowel syndrome. [21555]

Mr. Horam: It is for local health authorities to decide how best to allocate the resources available to them, taking into consideration the needs of the population served.

NHS Patient Activity

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage increase in patient activity in the NHS between 1974 and 1979; and what has been the increase since 1979. [21502]

Mr. Horam: The number of in-patients and day cases increased by an average 1.2 per cent. per annum between 1974 and 1979 and an average of 3.4 per cent. per annum between 1979 and 1995–96.

Ministerial Visits (Wirral)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times he visited the Wirral, South constituency during (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [21430]

Mr. Horam: No visits were made in a ministerial capacity.

Advisory Bodies (London)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the non-elected bodies responsible to his Department which are responsible for providing advice or services in London, indicating in each case the (i) overall budget and (ii) estimated running costs for each year from 1996–97 to 1999–2000. [21380]

Mr. Horam: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

General Practioners (Patient Numbers)

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients there were per GP practice in 1979; and how many there are currently. [21503]

Mr. Malone: The average number of patients per general practitioner partnership as at 29 March 1996 was 5,593[1]. The figure for 1979 is not available centrally.

[1]Source: General Medical Services Census.

Nurses

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data he has collated concerning the increase in the number of posts of (a) matron and (b) director of nursing services in NHS hospitals; what supervising duties such posts carry; and what guidance his Department has given regarding numbers, duties, or good practice as regards such posts. [18461]

Mr. Horam [pursuant to his reply 10 March, column 97]: I am now able to provide additional information. The full reply is as follows:

National health service hospital and community health service—HCHS—staff are not classified by job title, but by the job they do. At September 1995 there were 4,280 whole-time equivalent nurse managers employed by the NHS HCHS in England. These are staff who are required to hold a statutory nursing, midwifery or health visiting qualification to do their job, but who have management responsibilities and have little or no direct clinical involvement. Consequently, staff holding the job titles "Matron" and "Director of Nursing" may be included in these figures, along with other staff with different job titles but whose jobs meet the same criteria.

In the past, staff were classified by national pay scales, some of which are specifically designated for matrons, including deputies and assistants, and directors of nursing. Up until 1994 the Department of Health's non-medical work force census recorded the number of staff on these pay scales, but because of the introduction of clinical grading, the reclassification of some senior nurses onto general and senior manager pay scales and the introduction of local terms and conditions, this information does not accurately identify trends in the numbers of matrons and directors of nursing.

The responsibility for determining the most appropriate form of nurse management and advice lies with the individual national health service employer concerned. The National Health Service Trusts (Membership and Procedure) regulations 1990 state that the executive directors of an NHS trust shall include a registered nurse or registered midwife, except in the case of a trust which does not provide services directly to patients or a trust whose principle function is to provide ambulance or patient transport services. The NHS executive has published two documents that identify the existing roles of trust nurse executive directors: "One year on—The Nurse Executive Director Post" and "Sharpening the Focus: The roles and perceptions of nursing in NHS Trusts". Copies are available in the Library.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 292

SESSION 1996–97

10th March—21st March 1997

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
